To have struck one blow for truth
In the daily fight with lies;

One thought that will not die—
To have been a link in the chain of life:
Shall be immortality.

THE Duke of Westminster has given $500,000 for a London Convalescent Home.

A CLOCK tower is to be erected at Leidbury, England, as a memorial of Mrs. Browning, the poet.

THE Rev. Hugh Price Hughes says that five hundred people have been converted in the West End Mission held in St. James' Hall, since the opening, only a few months ago.

NEXT commencement day at Vassar College will be the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the college, and strong efforts are being made to complete the Maria Mitchell Endowment Fund before that time. It had reached $20,000 some time since.

THE first prosecution in Camden, N. J., for violation of the state law prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to minors, took place recently, when a tobacconist named Friedler, was arrested and held in $300 bail for trial, on complaint of Mr. Geo. W. Rich, for selling cigarettes to his sons, aged respectively eight and twelve years.

THE Rev. George H. Vibbert is now working in Nebraska, after delivering ninety lectures in Kansas, besides speaking to the children and holding afternoon meetings. His work in Kansas was highly appreciated.

A CORRESPONDENT writes as follows from Alto Pass, Illinois: "This is one of several towns in Southern Illinois in which a saloon is prohibited by ordinance. For some time we have been cursed by the 'walking saloon' in the person of a salesman from a liquor house in Cairo, coming here and selling liquor to individuals 'to be delivered'. The town authorities this week arrested him (when here on his regular trip) for violating the ordinance, and after a stubborn fight, the jury fined him fifty dollars and costs, in all, sixty-nine dollars and sixty cents. The result is looked upon here as a great victory over the liquor men."

MR. AND MRS. MORGAN, with their Bible-carriage, last year visited Oxfordshire, Berkshire, Hampshire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire; sold hundreds of Bibles and Testaments, distributed thousands of tracts and periodicals, held meetings indoor and out among a willing people.

A WRITER says, in regard to the so-called "generosity" of brewers, who send quantities of liquor to young men's picnics, and the like: "They drink the beer, and when once they like the brewer, they call for his beer, be the beer good of its kind or not. It is nothing for a brewery to give away a thousand barrels of beer a year. It is a system of advertising that has crept in until the various organized beneficiaries expect it."

THE warmest commendation follows Col. George Woodford wherever he goes in his grand work: The W. C. T. U. is built up, the subscription list of THE UNION SIGNAL is increased; a Y.W. C. T. U. is organized, or if there be one already, it is greatly strengthened; the pledge is signed by many; and the temperance work generally receives a wonderful impetus. Such is the testimony received from Akron, Ohio, and Pontiac, Ill., both of which Mr. Woodford has recently visited, the former twice. In Pontiac the membership of the union was doubled, and the Y's were reorganized for good work. He is most heartily commended by the unions in both these places to all other unions.

RESOLUTIONS of appreciation and sorrow were passed by the Pierre, Dakota, union, January 30, on the death of Dr. F. P. Wright, who was "always active, zealous and ready to help financially in temperance and in all social reforms; who was wise in counsel and fearless in action; an honest and upright man, whose virtues endeared him to his friends."

AT the annual stockholders' meeting of the Washington State Temperance Alliance, in January, Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer, president of East Washington W.C. T. U., and Mrs. Melinda A. Shaffer, president of West Washington W. C. T. U., were elected as members of the board of directors.

DR. TALMAGE says: "A great deal of sorrow is caused to young hearts and old by the thought that Christmas comes but once a year," but he continues, "why not extend the glorious season of joy, gladness and good will throughout the year?" This beautiful thought has been brought rather forcibly to our attention of late by the hundreds of letters we daily receive, asking for "Christmas Boxes." What! Christmas Boxes in March, the idea! who ever heard of hanging up stockings in the Spring-time? But then people have to use soap the year round and nearly twice as much is used in summer as in winter—you would'nt think that—would you? But it is a fact, and if folks want "Sweet Home" Soap and wish to make the whole household merry with lots of useful, pretty, valuable and ornamental things, why not do it now as well as in December? and so we extend "Our Mammoth Christmas Box" offer for a limited time. Another thing! There was such an awful rush of orders last Christmas that some of our friends did not get the goods as soon as they expected. It aint so now, you can have the Mammoth Christmas Box when you want it. Better order at once. Very Soapfully Yours, J. D. LARKIN & CO., Factories: Seneca, Heacock & Carroll Sts., BUFFALO, N. Y.

OUR MAMMOTH CHRISTMAS BOX

Our object in getting up this Mammoth Christmas Box is to introduce to the American people our "Sweet Home" Family Soap and Fine Toilet Articles. They are the purest, best, and most satisfactory, whether made in this country or Europe; everyone who uses them once become a permanent customer. Our goods are made for the select family trade and will not be sold to dealers, and to induce people to give them a trial we accompany each case with many useful and valuable presents

Even the babies are delighted when the Christmas Box arrives and it will make 100,000 boys, girls, men and women, old and young, just as happy; because it contains the greatest lot of Christmas Presents ever seen. Beautiful things! Something for everyone in the family, father—mother—all of the boys and girls—the baby—and hired girl. Such fun opening the box you never heard of. SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

John Jacob Astor died at New York City, February 22.

The Montana Legislature adjourned last week having been in session ninety days without passing a single bill.

Chicago has the World's Fair, so says Congress. General Fisk said she had it last fall when the National W. C. T. U. Convention was here!

Mrs. Rebecca Way Taylor, mother of Bayard Taylor, died at her home in Kennett Square, Philadelphia, February 18. She was ninety years and four months old.

Cardinal Gibbons before administering confirmation at St. John's Church, Baltimore, last Sunday, visited the Sunday-school and gave the pledge to abstain from intoxicants to four hundred boys.

There is said to be a growing sentiment in Brazil in favor of making the ex-Emperor Dom Pedro a candidate for the presidency. Nothing would insure more confidence in the young Republic than this just recognition of the man whom Mr. Gladstone pronounced the greatest ruler on earth.

Senator Sawyer, chairman of the Post-office Committee, has introduced a bill which seems to have teeth for grappling with lotteries in the United States mails. It provides for a fine of from $100 to $5,000 and six months' imprisonment for the offense of mailing a letter to a lottery company, or receiving one addressed to such a company. Any public advertisement naming the agent shall be sufficient evidence of his identity, unless he has previously denied it. It also forbids payment of money orders to lottery companies.

The vote polled at the general election in Germany on February 20, for members of the Reichstag, was exceptionally large. The increase in the socialists' strength is a fact to make the throne of the Hohenzollerns tremble. In Berlin alone, it has increased 33,000, and throughout the Empire it is doubled. Twenty socialists were elected. Supplementary elections will be necessary in many places to determine the successful candidates. Such is the case in most of the districts of Berlin, in Leipsic, and in the first district of Madgeburg, the socialist Vollar, being sent from the second district. Herr Singer unseats Eugene Richter, the great leader of the German Liberal party. Singer is the hero of the libel case against the Staatsburger Zeitung last fall. The editor was condemned to pay a fine, which Kaizer William remitted, thus using his royal prerogative to set aside the verdict of a court of justice. His action was resented, and the plaintiff's election is looked upon as the popular rebuke of the young Emperor's abuse of power.

THE meeting of Nebraska Prohibitionists in Lincoln last week, was the largest ever held in the state. Mrs. Jennie F. Holmes in a private letter pronounces it the "finest amendment convention ever held in this country." Over five hundred delegates were present representing Prohibitionists of every shade. It was not a nominating convention, but as Chairman Dickie announced, a partisan convention to do non-partisan work. Enthusiasm ran high, and argues well for the victory in the coming contest. There should be no division of forces now. The plummet line of this campaign falls right upon the issue. It is not "license or no license," but high license or prohibition.

THE press notices of the late Hon. Mr. Biggar's death, Parnell's chief lieutenant in Parliament, say: "Both he and Parnell are total abstainers." So is John Burns, the great English labor leader; so is T. V. Powderly; so is Stanley, the explorer; so is Neal Dow; so is Thomas Edison—indeed, so are most of the men who "get on in the world."

APROPOS of this is a characteristic incident told of Horace Greeley: He was presiding at a dinner given by the press, in 1868, at Delmonico's in honor of Charles Dickens, and "while Dickens partook freely of the wines, Greeley did not turn his glasses down, but thrust them out of his way, with a single exception, and in that placed a beautiful red rose that had been furnished for his boutonniere, and during the dinner lifted his glass to his nose as often as others raised glasses to their mouths, and the fragrance of the rose was all the stimulant he needed."

THE initial meeting of the Law and Order League occurred in Toronto, Ontario, February 22. The president, Hon. C. C. Bonney, of Chicago, presided, and introduced his speech by saying that the first great lesson which the League had taught was, that numbers are not essential to success. Since the Law and Order League was organized, it has been plainly demonstrated, through the results, that great things can be accomplished by the few. Three or four persons represented the interests of the League in Philadelphia, and eight persons that of Chicago at the time of organization. In conclusion, Mr. Bonney spoke of the majesty of the law, its sovereignty over a free people, its power, higher than that of Queen or President, as being the outcome of the people's will, and the grandeur of a nation thoroughly in sympathy with its just requirements. This is an international meeting, and as such carries an interest second to none in its relations to every reform, particularly to that of temperance. Our readers may expect a full report next week.

THE voice of one crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," is George Kennan, whose splendid courage and dauntless devotion to his kind have made him an explorer in that hitherto unknown region of Siberian exile and woful misery. He speaks with terrible emphasis in behalf of those voiceless, helpless victims of a despotism whose records seem to date back into the Dark Ages, when the only law recognized was "Might is right." But these gloomy shapes of evil must flee away before the floods of light which Kennan's hand is pouring into those dreary dungeons, and the prisoners shall come forth, by and by, from a grave more horrible than that out of which the Omnipotent voice delivered Lazarus. The iron rule of tyranny may suppress the Century articles; may drown the voice of the prisoners; may "load their feet with fetters," and break their hearts with untold and unnamable cruelties; but the steps of the Forerunner of a better day have already pressed that blood-stained soil, and along the horizon gleams the first hint of the dawn.

THE hatchet crusaders of Spickardsville, Mo., were summoned to appear before the county court in session at Trenton to answer to the charge of demolishing Thomas Brady's saloon. The ladies under arrest, numbering sixteen, were accompanied by a sympathizing escort of three hundred of their townsmen and women. At the station they were met by an equally large corps of friends headed by the Trenton brass band. A procession was formed with the sixteen heroines in the place of honor, and Rev. Mr. Cox, of the M. E. Church, as marshal of the day. The hosts struck up "Hold the Fort," and went marching on to the opera house which was packed. Speeches were made by the pastors of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Christian churches. A generous collation was served, after which they repaired to the court house en masse. During the session, the judge was obliged several times to remind them that they were in a court of justice instead of a temperance meeting, so vociferous were they in applauding the action of the defendants as described by witnesses. Justice Shanklin ruled that the saloon cannot be called a public nuisance unless private injuries have been sustained, which was not shown in this case. The jury were out from five o'clock until seven, and returned a verdict of fining the Crusaders five dollars apiece. An appeal will be taken, and the agitation will go with the case into a higher court.

GREAT men and great women are the torch-bearers of our civilization; they are the diamond personalities of our great epochs; and to keep them in the mind of the youth who inherit the results of their labors is to teach our youth to emulate their virtues. And there is no better way than to publicly recall the day of their birth. In the field of reform to-day are women as well as men over whose anniversary the reformed future shall institute public rejoicing; and in that time the orator of days, in declaring "universal suffrage the safety of our society," will not forget that women are one-half of the "universal." Most gratifying was the magnificent testimonial banquet tendered Miss Susan B. Anthony at the Riggs House, Washington, D. C., Feb. 15, upon the occasion of her seventieth birthday. This Moses among women deserves all the honors that can come to her, for she is one of humanity's "Great Hearts," and in darkest hours has never known discouragement. The following letters will be of special interest to our readers:

AMESBURY, MASS., Feb. 1, 1890.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—None can more heartily congratulate thee on thy threescore and ten years of a life nobly devoted to the welfare of humanity—to unremitting labor for temperance, for the abolition of slavery, and for equal rights of citizenship, irrespective of sex or color.

We have lived to see the end of slavery, and I hope that thee will live to see prohibition enforced in every state in the Union, and sex no longer the condition of citizenship.

God bless thee, and give thee many more years made happy by works of love and duty.

I am truly thy friend, JOHN G. WHITTIER.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 14, 1890.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—You have lived seventy selfless, sacred, sorrowful, seraphic years. My heart honors, loves and blesses you. Every woman's would if she only knew.

"Evil is wrought for want of thought, more than for want of heart."

You'll have a statue sometime in the Capitol in Washington, but your best monument is built already in your countrywomen's hearts.

God bless you, brave and steadfast elder sister; may you live one hundred years and vote the last ten, is the wish and prediction of your loyal friend and comrade,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

WASHINGTON'S birthday was duly observed in history and prophecy throughout the country. There was no more notable gathering than that in the great Auditorium of Chicago, under the auspices of the Union League Club. The orator of the occasion was the Rev. Dr. Tiffany, of Minneapolis. Speaking of the growth and perils of our country, he touched the saloon, not lightly, as follows:

The enormous expenditures for intoxicants prove how wide-spreading is the danger. I put away as altogether unreliable the astounding figures of alarmists, and remember only the fact that from all sources, from the producers, and consumers, and observers alike there is a general consensus that nine hundred millions of dollars are annually spent in this country in a business which requires no genius, develops no industry, and which is, at its best interpretation, purely indulgence. Nine hundred millions of dollars—a greater amount than Europe annually spends for the maintenance of armies and fleets—is spent in the liquor traffic in America. And this traffic, we are told, results in a larger percentage of gain to the individuals engaged in it than any other business or occupation known among us, and therefore has more money to be freely used in perpetuating its own existence. Consequently it is the more to be feared. It constitutes a national peril. It will not do to say that it cannot be abolished, for it might be if we would. It will not do to say that prohibition does not prohibit, for it does when men will let it. There have never been so many violations of existing laws as there were votes against the enactment of those laws. I speak not of its moral issues. I say nothing of its physical harmfulness as against health; its social influence as against the peace of home; its moral influence as against religion and God; but, apart from its degradation, it results in crime, disease and death, and is a corrupter of the public conscience, and is a foe to free institutions; it is a peril to the purity of elections; it is an enemy to the industry which developed national wealth; it is the refuge of the idler and the dissolute. It must go. Its name in politics is the saloon—prohibit it.

A WOMAN LED THE DEED.

Dux Femina Facti—Virgil.

BY EVA EMERY DYE.

Long, long ago Columbus sought
The proud old court of Spain,
And begged a fleet to find a world
Beyond the western main.
With long delays they wearied him,
With doubt and mockery,
Until a queen her jewels pledged
And sent him o'er the sea.

Long, long ago our pilgrim sires
Fled o'er the ocean wave,
To found a home on freedom's shore,
Or find a freeman's grave.
On Plymouth Rock a woman's foot
First touched the hallowed sod,
On Plymouth Rock a woman's voice
First rose in praise to God.

Long, long ago Virginia's soil
Was wet with sorrow's tear,
When pain and famine racked the heart,
And savage foes drew near.
But when the war-club swung on high,
A woman braved the blow;
A woman bore the strangers food,
And warned them of the foe.

Long, long ago the bondman's lash
Fell on the helpless slave,
And all the Southland groaned in chains,
Without a hand to save,
Until a woman's gifted pen
Rang out the tocsin call,
And all a nation's armies poured
To break the bondman's thrall.

Long, long ago a demon came
To wreck the peace of home.
And up and down fair freedom's land
His blood-stained vassals roam;
But hark! he halts, a woman's voice
Hath bid the demon fly,
"For God and Home and Native Land"
Shall slay him by and by.

WHY SIGN THE PLEDGE?

BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.
Minister of Regent's Park Chapel, London.

The feeling in favor of total abstinence from strong drink is rapidly growing. By the efforts and self-sacrifice of tens of thousands, a strong public sentiment is being formed, like a mighty breakwater. An arrest is being placed on the onward march of drunkenness; and many a bark battered by the fury of passion and self-indulgence is safely moored in the haven, sheltered from utter ruin, and able to repair its terrible wreckage. Happy are we who live in such a time. Let us do our best to build our few stones into this great breakwater, which is only made up by the small work of unknown and soon-forgotten builders

One important means by which so much has been done has been the use of the pledge. Humanly speaking, if it had not been for the pledge the present sentiment in favor of total abstinence would not have been possible. And it will be a great mistake if the signing of the pledge should ever fall into disuse, or become an object of contempt. We must not kick away the ladder by which we have climbed.

Sign the pledge; it is your protest against strong drink.—It is time for every thoughtful person to enter a solemn protest against strong drink which, every year, is inflicting such awful havoc among our race. Who can be indifferent to the woes it brings on hearts and homes, on villages and towns, on countries and continents? Well may the Hindoos call it "Shame water." There is not a house in which you may not find its slain. There is not a newspaper that does not record its diabolical outrages. There is not a public officer that could not bear damning evidence against it. We cannot do much, but let us do what we can. We have a voice, a right to cry aye or nay, a power to assent or protest, let us use them by all means on the right side. And if we cannot express our feelings in any other way, let us at least sign a solemn declaration on paper that we will never again touch the cruelest foe that ever reveled in human tears and blood.

Sign the pledge; it will benefit your health.—Alcohol is not more necessary to health than any other chemical or medicinal agent. It excites the heart, hinders digestion, disturbs the liver, and stupefies the brain. It gives a momentary glow and stimulus, but you have to pay for them afterwards by an inevitable lessening of vital heat, and animal power and mental force. Even in moderate quantities it acts as an irritant and a poison. The athlete, in training for a boat race, a prize fight, or a running match, must absolutely forego the use of alcohol; and if men do not want it for such extraordinary exertions, why do you want it for ordinary ones? Our recent expeditions in Abyssinia, the Transvaal, and Egypt, prove that if a general wishes his troops to perform forced marches, or to undergo unusual fatigues, he must substitute coffee for grog. The extremes of the Arctic circle and the tropical sun are best endured on cold water, as the experience of many explorers and travelers proves. The tables of insurance offices show that one hundred moderate drinkers die for every seventy-three abstainers, and many offices have a special section, to give abstainers the benefits of insurance at a less price. It would be a perfect revelation to some of you who read these words, if you would give total abstinence a trial; your appetites would be better, your minds would be clearer, your nerves would be stronger, and your whole system would get fitness and tone.

Sign the pledge; it will save your time.—We have only one short life to live, and we cannot afford to fling the diamond moments into the rushing stream beside us. How many days in the fore part of the week are spent by our working classes in public houses which are a dead loss to them, and their families, and the country! How many hours are spent by clerks and commercial travelers in the course of the week at the bars of railway stations and restaurants which might be sown with the seeds of golden harvest! How many evenings are worse than wasted in convivial company which might be spent in innocent and health-giving recreation, or in acquiring knowledge which would unlock many a shut door! From all this you would escape if you signed the pledge.

Sign the pledge; it will save your purse.—Sit down and calculate how much you spend per day in drink, not not only for yourself, but for those whom you treat. It will amount to a respectable sum in the course of the year. Add to this the money you might earn in the time you now lose. Add to this all the sums squandered wastefully in the company into which habits of drinking lead you. And when all is put together, would it not make a nice nest-egg against a rainy day, or for illness and old age? I often say to those who sign my pledge-cards that there is a £100 bank-note hidden inside the double cardboard.

Sign the pledge; it will save you from temptation.—You have no intention of becoming a drunkard; you scorn the thought. But there is a risk of your becoming one so long as you tamper with the drink. You take it now for the sake of society, but you will come to take it for its own sake. You cannot be sure that daily dram-drinking may not do for you what it has done for myriads in exciting a thirst now perhaps dormant, but which, when once aroused, will be unsatiable! Wise men, good men, strong men have been mastered by that awful thirst who no more expected such a thing than you do. Is it not folly, then, for you to run the risk of creating it? Why not stop at once, before that thirst has been aroused?

Sign the pledge; it will make a definite starting point in your history.—In all efforts after a better life it is well to have some landmark or timemark to which to look back and from which to date. There is a sort of satisfaction in being able to point to a mental stone-cairn, or crease-line, or white-painted post, standing out on the moorland of life, and to say, "Up to that point I lived a selfish, evil life, but since then I have tried to run fair and well, by the help of God."

With some it is a sermon; with others it is a birthday, a death, an entry in the diary, or a New Year's Eve; with others it is the visit of some gospel temperance advocate to their town. But in many cases, the same purpose is served by signing the pledge. The date of that pledge-card is a birthday, a new start, a beginning of a new era in the story of the soul; and it very often leads to the second step of faith in Christ.

Sign the pledge; it makes a strong obligation.—When a man gives up the drink, he must do all that can be done to strengthen his resolution. If he simply makes a resolution, he feels at liberty to withdraw from it if he choose. But if he double-knots his resolution with a solemn promise to which he has put his hand, then he feels bound by the most solemn obligations. He cannot think of breaking his word. He dare not violate his plighted troth. And in the moment of temptation, his self-respect, his love for truth, his desire to be a man of his word, his written vow, will be a strong reason for saying no.

Sign the pledge; it will give a sufficient answer to those who tempt you to drink.—There is no answer that a man can give so good as this. If he refuses because he is hot, he will be advised to drink to get cool. If he refuses because he is cold, he will be recommended to drink to get warm. If he refuses because he cannot afford it, his companion will gladly treat him. If he refuses because he is not well, there is no ailment to which flesh is heir for which intoxicating drinks are not prescribed as a certain cure. Men who are well, drink till they are ill; and then drink to get themselves well again. None of these excuses avail, but if a man says, "I have signed the pledge," they may think him a fool, but they cannot say that he has not given a sufficient reason; and if they are true men themselves, they dare not ask him to break his word. If a man asks you to drink after you have signed the pledge, he is no true friend; he is doing the devil's work. He is certain to turn round and insult you after you have done his will, because he will have lost the last fragment of respect for you.

There are some men who must have a reason to give others for doing as they do; here at least is a clear, straightforward, intelligible reason, which puts an end to controversy, and settles the matter forever—"I have signed the pledge."

Sign the pledge; it keeps it from becoming the badge of a reclaimed drunkard.—If the pledge were only signed by men who had been drunkards, but who were trying to live a new life, it would become the badge of reclaimed drunkards, and it would soon cease to be signed by this class of men, who need it most. This would be a great calamity.

"I dare not sign the pledge," said a young doctor to a friend who was trying to get him to do so, as a means of saving him from ruin. "Why not?" was his friend's reply. "Because if people heard that I had done so they would say that there must have been a screw loose in my character, and that I was a reclaimed drunkard." "No," said his friend, "they never can say that, for it has been signed by thousands of thousands on whose character there has never been a stain." The answer reassured him; he took the pledge, and is now an earnest Christian worker in one of our large towns.

You may not need to sign the pledge for yourself, but sign it that you may give it the benefit, the weight, the standing of your own moral character. If every one of reputable and stainless character were to stand aloof, the pledge would be a hopeless failure. Every respectable Christian person who signs it is like one of the corks floating on the surface of the sea, helping to sustain the heavy nets laden with fish.

Sign the pledge; it makes it easier for others to do the same.—We are creatures of fashion. We cannot help it. We are made so. What one does, the others are apt to do. There's many an eager eye looking to see what the reader of these lines is going to do; if he signs the pledge, that boy, that companion, that servant, will do the same; but if he refuses to do so, it may be that that waiting one will also refuse, and that refusal will lead to ruin.

More eyes are watching us than we think. More lives than we know are on the balance, waiting for the feather of our example to turn them this way or that. Are we right in leaving anything undone that might save one for whom Christ died? We must use all means to save some, though the use of the means compel us to forego some boasted liberty, or some loved indulgence.

Don't say you have no influence, it is only an excuse; you have; you would not like another to say that. Of course you have influence; use it well.

Sign the pledge; it will win you friends.—We all need friends, and if we have given up those who gather around the drink, we need others, and we are most likely to find these wherever there are pledge-cards to be had for signature. It is all very well to resolve to give up the drink and to keep the vow secretly, but it is much better to take the pledge in the presence of one or more persons who shall bear witness to what they have seen, and who will be bound to you in the bonds of a new and common brotherhood because they have done the same thing, and are pledged to the same cause.

But I do not like to sign away my liberty.—Then, if you are unmarried, you will never be married; you will surely never promise to love and honor any one individual, because you may want to change your mind. And what is true in this case is true in others, and is a sufficient answer to the objection.

But I may be forced to drink.—If you are, you will not violate your pledge. You only promise to abstain from intoxicants as a beverage. If it is poured down your throat by force, or when you are fainting; if the physician compels you to take it; if you take it unawares in some dish of cookery, your pledge is not broken. It is not you that break it.

But I have taken it, and broken more than once.—Then take it again, in humble dependence on the Saviour, "who has been manifested to destroy the works of the devil." Most, if not all, total abstinence pledges lay stress on the words, 'God helping me.' These words are the heart of all. If they are not felt deep down in the soul, the pledge is not good for much, it rests on mere human strength. But when God is appealed to, the case is altered. Divine power pours into the spirit which is lifted up to Him in prayer and trust. Angel hands are stretched out to hold back the erring feet. A holy garrison is put inside the weak and trembling nature to hold it against the foe. Ask the Lord Jesus to forgive the past. Ask Him to save your from your enemy. Ask Him to shield you in the day of battle. Ask Him when the door is nearly battered in, to put His foot against it and keep it closely shut. He is able to keep you from stumbling. He is able to keep that which you commit to Him. He is able to make you more than a conqueror. Put yourself into His hands before you leave your room in the morning. Keep looking to Him all day. Praise Him for His grace each night.

"IT IS TREASON TRULY TO THE COUNTRY."

BY JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

"It is treason truly to the country," was the earnest and correct definition by a Pacific Coast correspondent, of the schemes now being laid before the national government for providing this republic with an irresistible navy commensurate with our wealth, population and presumed power. The searching inquiry of Clara C. Hoffman, "Are we a Christian nation?" is pointedly applicable right here. Are the people who propose this policy—a policy which the secular papers of the land almost overwhelmingly indorse—under any fear that this country is in danger of attack? By no means We have hundreds of millions of dollars of surplus. We have become rich, and have we not become proud and lifted up, and filled with an ambitious desire to show all other nations on the globe our capabilities as the leading maritime power? We, or those who profess to speak for the people, seem all prepared to push to completion the splendid project for building a navy that "shall sweep the seas." Of the hundreds of indorsements which the secular press of the country have accorded the measure, here are two which well set forth the argument for war preparation which is being so sedulously and so interestedly promoted. This is from the New York Sun of January 18, a Democratic paper:

The McCann board's scheme for a fighting fleet of about one hundred ships is criticised in some quarters on the ground that it provides a navy for aggression rather than for defense. This sort of navy, it is said, is not suited to the needs of a peaceable nation like the United States. There is nothing in the argument. The supposed distinction between offensive and defensive naval warfare is purely imaginary. No provision for national defense will be effective which does not also provide means for prompt and mighty aggressive operations in case of trouble. While war is conducted on present principles, the functions of defensive and offensive engines of war cannot be separated. The one thing implies the other. No instrument of war is effective for defense which is not in itself an instrument of aggression. The more terrible it can be made in attack, the more effective it is for defense. A fleet like that which Secretary Tracy's advisers are going to recommend would be the most powerful instrument of aggression on the face of the globe, and for that very reason it would be the most effective agent of protection and defense that could be established. It is nonsense to say that because we are a peaceable people, and mean to remain at peace with the world if we can, this country does not require a navy capable of fighting, if fighting there must be. The most peaceable and well-disposed citizen buys the best revolver he can obtain when he arranges for the protection of his household; and when he invests in a bull-dog he is careful to see that the dog hasn't lost its teeth. The McCann board has made no mistake. The splendid fleet it proposes to build is the right sort of peacemaker, and the right sort of peace-preserver.

This other is from the Pittsburgh Times, a Republican paper, by which we may perceive that the hundreds of millions of treasure asked for merely measures the initial sum in a scheme of weighting down our resources, which the experience of every one of the "great powers" of Europe shows us is ever increasing and insatiable:

Ninety-two vessels of war of different types, in fourteen years, at a cost of $250,000,000, outlines the plan reported by the naval board of policy. The magnitude of the scheme for a navy is not beyond the sentiment of the nation, and that something equal to it is likely to become the settled policy of the country, sanctioned by the action of Congress, is wholly probable. Such a plan and such action would mean that the United States has determined to prepare for all the contingencies that attend a great power among the nations. Will building a navy alone suffice? Will it suffice for more than the mere beginning? It will not. Closely must follow such a system of coast defenses as will match the navy idea. There must follow, rather go hand-in-hand, a system of interior defenses, and a ship canal from Lake Erie to the Ohio would find a prominent place in any plan that looked comprehensively to making ready for any probable emergency. The importance of such a work lies on the surface. A free and open water course from the Lakes to the Gulf, as a war measure, should rank with the prospective navy, and closely following should be the improvement of the inside route along the Atlantic coast from New York to Florida. This can no more be overlooked than the union of the Lakes and the Ohio river by a ship canal.

It is scarcely necessary to ask what effect all this war preparation, the spirit of national alienation from God that it will surely beget, and the wars that will as certainly follow, will have upon the promulgation of the temperance reform. We have all been made acquainted with the historic fact that for twenty years preceding the civil war, the promotion of temperance principles, and the enactment of anti-liquor laws were making rapid progress. The war did cease this righteous propaganda absolutely, and it was not until 1871, six years after the fratricidal struggle had ceased, that the grievous wrongs, ruin and debasement wrought by the inhuman rum traffic seemed past enduring, and that woman cried aloud in her weakness, and yet in her strength (God helping!), that the curse upon our people might be stayed. There is need NOW for prayer to God for protest, and petition that the impending calamity of war preparation and overt war be averted; for if we go on in our pride and repent not of our unrighteous purpose, I have not a shadow of a doubt it will be soon apparent that we are furnishing the weapons which shall tend to our sorrowful undoing and desolation.

METHODS OF TEMPERANCE REFORM.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

IV. ABSOLUTE PROHIBITION.

Seeing the inadequacy of all merely restrictive or halfway measures, and viewing with grave apprehension the ravages of drunkenness, temperance reformers have been led to favor the absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic. There are three ways in which this might be done: First, by a statutory law, enacted by the Legislature of a state, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor within its borders; second, by an amendment to the constitution of a state, adopted by a vote of the people, likewise prohibiting the liquor traffic; third, by an amendment to the constitution of the United States, proposed by Congress and ratified by three-fourths of the states, prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of alcoholic beverages throughout the entire nation and all places subject to her jurisdiction. Prohibition by constitutional amendment is far better than by statutory law, being less liable to repeal, and more easily enforced. Let us consider a few of the reasons why we advocate this method of dealing with the drink evil.

1. The state has a right to suppress the traffic in alcoholic beverages. Government is designed to conserve the welfare of society, and also to protect personal rights. A man has a right to do as he pleases so long as he does not trespass upon the rights of others; but when his acts, habits, or business pursuits are inimical to the community in which he lives, and work injury to society, he should be legally restrained. The interest of one is subordinate to that of the many. It is upon this principle that we have laws against profanity, blasphemy, Sabbath-breaking, carrying concealed weapons, circulating obscene literature, etc. Prohibitory liquor laws partake of the same nature, and are equally entitled to our approbation and support. The only question is, are the evils of intemperance such as to render this measure necessary?

2. There is urgent necessity for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. The evils produced by it are so malignant, deep-seated, and wide-spread that nothing less than its total suppression will be effective as a remedy. Intemperance vitiates human stock, and injures both mind and body. It blights moral character, and ruins the souls of men for time and eternity. It is the prolific source of crime, poverty, and wretchedness. It destroys the fruits of honest industry, and wastes the nation's resources. It corrupts our politics, and obstructs the administration of justice. Now, if it is the right and duty of the state to enact laws enforcing such measures as are necessary for the public good, and prohibiting those things which are detrimental to the general welfare, it would seem that the suppression of the liquor traffic is the most wholesome and necessary legislation that could be enacted.

"Shall we who rule this nation,
Shall they who legislate,
This dread abomination
Henceforth perpetuate?

"Forbid it, Lord; have pity,
And hear our earnest plea;
Let every town and city
From this dread curse be free."

3. The good results of prohibition, where the experiment has been tried, abundantly vindicate the wisdom and effectiveness of the measure. Several of our states have adopted it, and wherever it has had a fair trial immediate and inestimable blessings have been derived. In Maine, Kansas, and Iowa it has had the best chance, and its effects have been very gratifying to the friends of the cause. Governors, Congressmen, judges, attorneys, editors, clergymen, prison-keepers, and chiefs of police unite in testifying that prohibitory liquor laws are as effective as any other statutes of the criminal code. They have almost entirely suppressed the manufacture of liquor in the above mentioned states; the saloons have been closed except in a few of the larger cities; drunkenness has been reduced to a very small amount; crime has decreased until many jails are empty, and the dockets of courts are sometimes found to contain not a single criminal case; public morals have been greatly improved; education has advanced; intelligence and thrift have increased; and the people are better fed, clothed and sheltered, and less in debt than when the saloons existed.

4. Prohibition is in harmony with the divine method of dealing with the evil of strong drink. Christ came to destroy the works of the devil, and not to regulate them by high license or otherwise. This should be the policy of all Christian nations. As individuals we are commanded to "abstain from all appearance of evil." (I. Thess. 5:22.) God pronounces a woe upon those who "justify the wicked for reward." (Isa. 5:23.) The state does this when she grants a license to the rum-seller for the sake of revenue gain. Kings were admonished not to drink wine. (Prov. 31:4, 5.) Priests were likewise forbidden to use it. (Lev. 10:9-11) The Israelites, during their sojourn of forty years in the wilderness, used no wine or strong drink. (Deut. 29:5, 6.) The divine legislation excludes drunkenness from heaven, and from the church on earth; and leaves no place for it in a Christian nation. In the case of the children of Israel, we have the example of a whole nation in which the use of liquor was entirely suppressed by the direct authority of the Almighty; but with all our boasted progress we are not yet as wise as God's ancient law.

INCAPACITY OF BUSINESS WOMEN.

BY D. P. LIVERMORE.

We have already stated that Marion Harland has published an article on the "Incapacity of Business Women," and I have passed in review one or two of the frivolous statements she has made in support of her position. Other trivial illustrations await examination. First, the case of a "sales clerk" is mentioned, which she states substantially as follows:

The saleslady who waits upon you may be supercilious to the verge of impertinence,—slow and inattentive;—she may hum a tune while listlessly displaying the wares she is paid to exhibit to advantage, or carry on a lively gossip with her mates, and all in sight and hearing of the floor-walker, who would reprimand a male clerk for doing the same thing, but who fears to rebuke the saleslady.

Now this case of the "saleslady" proves nothing about the "incapacity of business women," because the "clerk" in no proper sense represents the business women of the country, any more than an incompetent porter in a wholesale establishment proves the incapacity of the business firm. Does the inefficiency of a railroad conductor prove the incapacity of the president and directors of the corporation? The "saleslady" in question only proves that the man who employed her made a mistake in selecting a saleswoman! It proves quite as much if not more against men than women! Does the male "floorwalker" in the case before us show any better capacity for business than the "saleslady"? Why does not Marion Harland rebuke him for neglect of duty as well as the "lady clerk"? We do not say that such instances cannot be found; what we claim is, that they are exceptional, and prove nothing concerning woman's incapacity for business. Business men work for their own interests, and they would not retain in their employ such offensive and discourteous clerks—male or female—for any length of time.

It may be said right here that "saleswomen," as well as "salesmen" often get weary, standing for hours at the counter, and may occasionally be inattentive to customers, and may for a moment be out of patience and be nervous and irritable, as sometimes almost everybody will be-even good mothers will be with irritable children; and perhaps customers may be tired and irritable themselves, and speak sharply as they ought not to the clerk, and so develop the same spirit of discourtesy in the "saleslady" that they show themselves. Did Marion Harland never find a male clerk discourteous? Has she only found discourtesy in "lady clerks"? I cannot but think that the statement is too sweeping, and really misrepresents the great body of female clerks in the different departments of our industrial and mercantile life. Besides, if inattentive female clerks prove that women are incapacitated for business, then, when attentive and courteous saleswomen are found, it should prove that women are capacitated for business.

In the Report of the Commissioner of Labor about "Working Women" for 1888, speaking of the girls in the factories of New Orleans, the Commissioner says: "The saleswoman is noticeably refined and educated." Does not this prove woman's capacity for business? It is a poor rule that does not work both ways! There is one striking fact about Marion Harland's article, she has not a single good word for her sex! She gives no credit to any "saleslady!" and as far as we can learn from her article, she has never met with a pleasant, refined, courteous saleswoman! She has not a pleasant word for any working woman!

We give another instance which Marion Harland presents as evidence of woman's "incapacity for business," and which if true, is certainly exceptional and not general. The following remarkable case is related substantially in her own words:

While the office boy is ruled up sharply on work and deportment, the girl stenographer and typewriter giggles and makes giggle with the girl book-keeper, and has tiffs (audible) with her enemy, the "old-maid" cashier! When reproved for negligence and inefficiency, they begin to sulk and snivel, and one lady clerk held her place for a long time by her tears and hysterics, and no man in the establishment dared to discharge her through fear of a "scene," and finally one of the firm dismissed her by letter, on the eve of an European trip, and he immediately left the country—as it is as natural for a man to avoid "scenes" as for a woman to get them up.

Such instances are furnished by Marion Harland to prove the incapacity of women for business; or, as she puts it, "the incapacity of business women." Of course, these frivolous illustrations prove nothing of the kind, as the "girl stenographer" and "typewriter" do not represent "business women." Can any one believe that a member of a "business firm" fled to Europe to avoid a "scene" with a woman whom he discharged by letter? What a wonderful capacity for business such a man shows! What delicate sensibilities this member of the firm must have had to flee to Europe to avoid a "scene!" We are told that "it is as natural for a man to avoid 'scenes' as for a woman to get them up!" Is this Mrs. Harland's real estimate of women? Did she never know men to get up "scenes" when discharged by a firm? Did she never know a man to demand a reason for being dismissed from employment and become angry, and "curse and swear" at what he regarded as unjust treatment? Do men always avoid "scenes"? Do they never become enraged with passion? Surely Marion Harland must have read of such instances! Did not Preston Brooks in angry moments, inflict almost deadly blows on Charles Sumner in the United States Senate Chamber? Men avoid "scenes," Marion Harland says, women only get them up! Do not politicians get up "scenes," and fight and wrangle over office and place? About three years ago, two members in the Illinois Legislature came to blows, and got up quite a "scene," and yet Marion Harland tells us that "men avoid 'scenes'." Did she never hear of laborers becoming quarrelsome and riotous on being discharged from service? Did she never hear of men getting up such "scenes" that it required the military to quell them? Is it true that women are so much worse than men in this regard?

If Marion Harland knew all the facts and circumstances of this "particular" case, possibly she would have some kind word for the dismissed woman, in tears, instead of speaking lightly, if not sneeringly of the "proverbial effect of lachrymal demonstration." She does not utter a word of tenderness and sympathy for the sensitive woman in tears, when perhaps to be discharged from her place was to be dismissed into outer darkness, into poverty, maybe into a drunken home; possibly into a condition of life worse than death! What of it? Who cares? Do such merit ridicule for their tears, which may represent intense suffering and deep sorrow? It is not the rule for women to weep and go into hysterics when dismissed from a place. Such demonstration is exceptional, and likely represents a physical and mental condition which calls for sympathy instead of ridicule!

In Rev. Dr. Starr's great address about the Puritans, recently delivered before the Congregational Club in Boston, speaking of Carlyle, he said that "sternness rather than sweetness, was his prevailing trait. Sarcastic jeers at human infirmity were oftener on his lips than words of compassionate sympathy with it. A nation to him was forty millions; mostly fools!" With Marion Harland, half our nation being women, if not fools, are "incapacitated for business!" If they have no business capacity, as she asserts, why blame them for their inferiority and incompetency? It is cruel to abuse idiots for their mental defects!

Why should a benevolent Creator withhold this "capacity" for business from one-half of the people, most of whom are dependent upon themselves for a livelihood? What would be thought of a teacher who should demand his class to solve problems when he knew that one-half of the scholars had no capacity to perform the task required of them? Can we believe that God has placed women in this somewhat hard and rough world to gain a livelihood, and then denied them capacity for the work assigned them? If Marion Harland really believes that women have no capacity for business, she knows but little of what women are now doing in this broad world. If we had space at our command we could show that women in all directions are successfully engaged in numerous business pursuits.

IN all things throughout the world, the men who look for the crooked will see the crooked, and the men who look for the straight, can all see the straight.—John Ruskin.

WASHINGTON TEMPERANCE NEWS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The hearing before the Committee of the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, Saturday, February 15, was attended with interest. Among the visitors present were Mrs. La Fetra, president of the District W. C. T. U., Mrs. Pickler, wife of Major Pickler, representative from South Dakota, and other ladies.

Mrs. Ada M. Bittenbender, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of legislation and petitions, made the first address. Mrs. Bittenbender stated that she was a representative of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which was non-sectarian in religion and non-partisan in politics, and that this was the largest society that has ever been organized in the world composed exclusively of women. She said that at some future time they wished to be heard before the Committee in regard to the liquor traffic with the natives of Africa and the islands of the Pacific, the National Prohibitory Amendment, and the bill to prohibit the transportation of intoxicating liquors into prohibitory states.

As the Inquiry Bill had been so fully discussed at the hearing on Thursday, Mrs. Bittenbender said that they were greatly interested in it, and indorsed all that had been said in its favor, but she confined her remarks principally to the bill to prevent the transportation of liquors into prohibition states She referred to the fact that two bills having the same object in view had been introduced into the House, one by Mr. Kerr, and the other by Mr. Struble, of Iowa. "The passage of either," said she, "would be hailed with joy by the society I represent."

Since the adverse decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Bowman Railway Company rendered March 19, 1888, some enactment by Congress of the nature of one of these has become of paramount importance to prohibitory states. The Bowman case was based on the refusal of the railway company to transport beer into Iowa in violation of the laws of that state. The Court in reversing the decision of the lower court, stated that "it (a state) cannot, without the consent of Congress, expressed or implied, regulate commerce between its people and those of the other states of the Union in order to effect its ends, however desirable such a regulation might be." The Court finding that there is no consent of Congress bearing on the subjects expressed or implied, then suggested:

It might be very convenient and useful in the execution of the policy of prohibition within the state to extend the powers of the state beyond its territorial limits. The object of the Struble Bill, as we understand it, is to extend the powers of states so as to effect the purpose suggested by the court; or, in other words, to enable the states to exercise their police powers without obstruction. The bad effects of the opinions were pointed out by the members of the court who dissented. They quickly followed, not only in one, but in all prohibition states. How to remedy matters speedily is the question. The answer seems to have been found in the Struble Bill.

Mrs. Bittenbender stated that they were not asking for a new departure in congressional legislation, and cited, as one illustration, sections 4278 and 4279 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine and other similar explosive substances by land or water, either as a matter of commerce with foreign countries, or among the several states. Section 4280 provides that the two preceding sections shall not be so construed as to prevent any state, territory, district, city or town within the United States from regulating or from prohibiting the traffic in or transportation of those substances between persons or places lying or being within their respective territorial limits, or from prohibiting the introduction thereof into such limits, for sale, use, or consumption therein.

Congressman Kerr referred to the fact that Congress passed a law permitting the states to prohibit bringing diseased cattle into their borders.

Before closing, Mrs. Bittenbender stated that they desired that a woman should be appointed on the Commission of Inquiry, and that they would be quite willing to have the appropriation increased.

Mr. Louis Schade followed with an address in which he opposed the Inquiry Bill. He said such a Commission was not necessary, and he warned the Committee that the Prohibitionists were trying to build up a party by destroying the two old parties, and that they were not wise politicians if they helped their enemies to do this, by passing the Commission Bill. Such a weak line of argument amused the Committee as well as the Prohibitionists who were present.

On February 18, there was a "hearing" at the Capitol before the district committee on the Breckenridge Sunday Rest Bill for the District. Dr. Geo. Elliott of the M. E. Church, Rev. Dr. Elliott, of the Episcopal Church, and Dr. Crafts, of the Presbyterian Church, spoke in favor of the bill. Mrs. M. E. Catlin, superintendent of Sunday observance in the District union, made a plea for the bill in behalf of the W. C. T. U. She prayed the Committee to take the rolls of petitions that come in from nearly every state in the nation to be, as they are indeed, the voice of the people urging them to give us a Sunday law. She had prepared the petitions which were presented, coming from thirty-two states and three territories,—for the Senate 27,131 indorsements, and for the House over 30,000, a large part duplicates. Dr. Corliss, pastor of the Seventh Day Adventists Church of this city, and Mr. Jones, editor of the American Sentinel, spoke against the bill.

IDA HINMAN.

OUR ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARY.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE W. C. T. U:—A swift run by train to Liverpool, a happy night with my former hostess, Mrs. Menzies, an interview with Mrs. Wright, of Wellington, New Zealand, a hurried rush from the closed carriage to the wretched little cabin of the launch, and an equally hurried passage thence to the "saloon" of the Cameroon, fill the gaps between the close of my last letter, and the point where I was fairly started upon this voyage to the Congo, which everybody said was "dangerous," many "fatal," and not a few, "foolhardy." I know not whether any or all of them are right, but I have constantly felt that I must come, and I am not afraid. The English climate had brought my throat and lungs into such a condition that every breath hurt, hence my rush into the cabins, losing the first and very probably last chance to see the Liverpool docks, the shipping always lying in the Mersey, and the Great Eastern.

November is generally a stormy time, but by the good Providence of God we have had smooth seas all the way. For the second time when I have crossed it the Bay of Biscay was as smooth as a land-locked harbor. We had no rain; after a week out I could breathe without pain, and before the second week was finished I ceased to take cognizance of the act of breathing.

On the eighth day we stopped at Grand Canary a few hours to "coal," leave passengers and mails; a week later at Free Town, Sierra Leone, to leave mails and take passengers. I went ashore at the latter place, saw some American and English missionaries, and arranged to stop there for work on my return. With hands full of flowers, the gift of Miss Buckley and Miss Bissett of the English C. M. S., wherewith to brighten our table on board, I was rowed back to the ship just as the sun was going down. The third week passed with two or three short calls at small places to drop or take up passengers—principally Kru men going south for work, and we anchored in the Niger, off the town, or rather trading station, of Bonny, the home of Bishop Crowther. There are a few English, all traders, no ladies, along the river bank, a native town back out of sight from the ship, and the mission station a connecting link between the two. Archdeacon Crowther, the son of the Bishop, came on board, and at Captain Cloucey's request came up to see me; also another clergyman, Mr. Boyle. I had a very pleasant conversation with them.

On Sunday they sent a boat off to take me on shore to English service in the morning. There were present six English gentlemen, thirty colored people and myself. Service was conducted by a colored clergyman, whose wife played the American organ. In the afternoon the boat was sent again to take me to the afternoon service.

We landed directly at the mission, and as the tide was well out and a dreary stretch of mud must be crossed, my mind was ill at ease. However, I had little time to consider, being told that one of the oarsmen would carry me. When they had dragged the boat as far as they could, the man spread a square of gingham over his naked arms picked me up as conveniently as if I had been a little child, and walked several rods, placing me upon dry sand.

This mission has an English financial agent who is also a carpenter, not a teacher or preacher; another young Englishman acts as engineer for the steam launch belonging to the mission. With these exceptions all the work of the mission is carried forward by the colored people, led by Bishop Crowther and his son. Recently the members have built a new church, for which they raised £2,000, or about $10,000. It is corrugated iron painted without and lined with boarding. Everything is simple, for an Episcopal Church, but in excellent style. A congregation of six hundred or more persons gathered. The attention was very good all the way, and many faces were exceedingly intelligent, and glowing with sympathy for the sermon. The preacher, a colored man educated in England, does not know the language of the people, therefore he spoke in English through an interpreter. The subject assigned by authority for the day was, "The second coming of the Lord," treated very simply and practically, as the glorious hope of the church, and the daily incentive to high living, and earnest individual work. As the day cooled, with hands full of flowers, I went back on board, having promised to stop again on my return north.

THE DEAN RACHEL L. BODLEY MEMORIAL.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It has been several months now since Mrs. Emma H. Palmer, M.D., a former pupil of the late Dean Rachel L. Bodley, of the Woman's Medical College, Philadelphia, wrote to me of her great desire to help start a Bodley Memorial Fund to aid our brave Pundita Ramabai in her noble work.

Many among us have read the beautiful introduction to "The High Caste Hindu Woman," by the late revered Dean, and no doubt our hearts have throbbed responsively to the thrilling appeal, with its touching history, and surely most of us can help a little in this twofold work, which offers not only a loving tribute to the dead, but much needed help for the living, as well.

It is the great hope of Mrs. Palmer and others that a Dean Bodley scholarship can be founded in this way; if not that, it has been suggested that a library, exclusive of books, be furnished in the school, or even the simplest room in her name.

Many have already pledged their support, and it is with great pleasure that I now fulfill my promise to write to you about it, especially as Miss Willard has so kindly consented to add a few lines. May I quote from Mrs. Palmer's last letter to myself:

There may be many to whom your message will come who, like myself, did not feel justified in binding themselves to successive donations for ten years, but who would willingly aid Ramabai's noble work by one gift, large or small, according to their means, and to whom you will thus give that opportunity. Oh! how can we enlightened Christian women sit down inactively with the knowledge in our hearts that millions of our sex are to-day suffering untold miseries!

All contributions for the Bodley Memorial Fund should be sent to Mrs. Emma H. Palmer, 782 Sixth Ave., New York City.

Let us in this way help to "hold on to the ropes," and answer the Hindu women's cry, which Dean Bodley, through Ramabai, has translated into "Help, or we perish." LAURA M. LIPPINCOTT PANCOAST.

We cannot too highly honor the name of Dean Rachel Bodley. She was one of my most valued friends, and I have gladly subscribed to the fund, not only for her sake, but for that of our beloved and heroic white-ribbon sister, Pundita Ramabai.

Yours for the high caste Hindu widows,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—The absence of news on the subject of the Men's Christian Temperance Union during the past two months may have suggested to some that the idea is abandoned. Will you permit me to explain to your readers that so far the voluntary work of general correspondence and advocacy has depended upon me, and that I have been forcibly withdrawn from the field by the demands made upon me through the removal of my family and home from Newaygo, Mich., to Canton, Ill., and because of illness.

Some correspondence has been necessarily postponed, and all newspaper notes suspended; but the work is in progress, and we are ready to appoint organizers for every state.

I shall be glad to hear from any who are ready to form locally, or who desire to enter upon missionary work. Correspondence for New York state may be addressed, if preferred, to Rev. Frank L. Masseck, Huntington, N. Y., who is secretary of the local W. C. T. U. there.

Yours truly, WM. BURGESS.

Our Book Table.

UNANSWERED PRAYER, by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. Published by the W. T. P. A. Price, paper, twenty-five cents; cloth, fifty cents.

This book grew out of a question asked of the author with the earnestness that only an aching mother heart can know,—"Why is it that, in spite of the fact that I prayed for my only child, my boy, as long as he lived, from the day he was born, he lies to-night in a drunkard's grave?" It is no wonder that the devoted mother thus questioned, thinking of her own loved ones then hundreds of miles away, was awed by the query that seemed "to mock love and faith forever." Still less is it to be wondered at that she promised to make it her one business from that hour to find an answer to the question. Has she found it? This much is certainly true—if the teachings of the book could be inwrought into the home lives of the land there would be fewer aching mother-hearts, fewer sons going down to death, fewer daughters in danger of worse than death, in our land to-day. The volume is one that we cannot too highly commend to every parent. It is not of the common order; it is a plain, straightforward statement of facts and principles concerning which there has been too much silence in the past. On the Christian homes of the land is charged much of the responsibility in the matter; on them rests too often the burden of pre-natal influences tending downward; of faith lightly kept with childhood; of failure to recognize the dangers besetting the little feet in the "creatures of the dusk;" of lack of the perfect confidence between mother and child which is the child's best safeguard. The author combines "faith and works" in these words: "We cannot save our children or ourselves, but before we can with truth pray for their salvation, their preservation from the snares of ruin, we must do all in our power for their salvation. We must make our lives right by God's grace; we must make all the conditions about the child in the home as nearly right as possible; we must keep out of the home everything that tends to demoralize; must banish from the kitchen and dining-room everything that will awaken or create depraved appetite; must expel from the parlor, the library, anything that cannot be used to build up pure heart and soundness of purpose; and we must bring around our children, according to our ability, everything that will aid in the work of salvation."

FRANCES RAYMOND'S INVESTMENT. By Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. Published by the W. T. P. A. Price 50 cents.

The secondary title of this little book, "The Cost of a Boy," tells the story in a nutshell. Once begun, it will be finished, for it is not only novel, but intensely interesting. The story turns on a legal question: the mother, wronged and robbed by the saloon legalized by the state, claims damages because of her vested rights in the son. Its pathos is intense, its logic irresistible; it voices the outcry of many a tortured heart, "O, my God! haven't I a right to him, my boy—my boy? All I have is there, and that awful door has shut him in, and shut me out!" It is a book to be read by fathers who fail to realize that their wives are equal partners with them in the home-making; a book for mothers who wish new arguments against the legalized saloon; a book to be read by a son who is forgetting that he owes to the mother who "went down into the jaws of death" for him, a debt that can never be repaid.

GIRLS OF TO-DAY. By Mrs. Lucy A. Scott. Published by the W. T. P. A. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

This is the long-expected companion volume to "Boys and Other Boys." To say that it is by the same author, is to give satisfactory assurance of its worth. It is just the book to put into the hands of your daughter, who is looking over the gateway into womanhood, or standing with feet on the threshold. It will be a helpful guide, and will attract to its own reading.

From the same house we have two Memorial Services prepared for W. C. T. U. use. The first, written by Mrs. Henry, is a RESPONSIVE SERVICE designed to be used in the meetings of the union. It includes Scripture passages and hymns, and provides for a biographical sketch of the departed, with notice of her work in the union. The other, LIGHT IN DARKNESS, arranged by Miss Alice M. Guernsey, is for use at the funerals of members of the W. C. T. U. or Loyal Temperance Legion. It contains appropriate Scripture readings and poetical selections, and is prefaced by suggestions as to floral tributes, etc., suggestions that, if heeded, would rob the appearance of death of much of its gloom. Price, MEMORIAL SERVICE, 5 cents; LIGHT IN DARKNESS, 10 cents.

Dr. Kate Mitchell, member of the British Temperance Society, lecturer on physiology, and an earnest white-riboner, has written a book entitled, THE DRINK QUESTION: ITS SOCIAL AND MEDICAL ASPECTS. It is a complete discussion of the history and nature of alcohol, mortality and disasters due to drink, economic and educational aspects of the question, and is a very creditable book, one that the white-ribboners of England are to be congratulated upon, as is the earnest author. We hope it will have a wide circulation.

GOLD AND SILVER NUGGETS, mined through the afflictions and experiences of Jennie Smith, is a dainty blue and gold volume that comes to our table from the publishers, Garriges Brothers, Philadelphia. The selections have been made by Pastor Edmond Hez Swem with rare skill and taste; here are a few of them: "I told him that I did not think any one in his right mind would swear." "I shall need wisdom to direct me in the economy of time." "Invalids and cripples have often to bear stings from thoughtless yet cutting remarks of the strong and healthy." "It is wonderful how the dear Lord has kept me from being anxious." "In heaven we will praise God for the providences which in the flesh seemed most severe, rather than for those that brought prosperity." "Free from debt! I desire this above all temporal things." "No one will suffer while a railroader has a penny in his pocket."

GOLD FROM OPHIR; a new book of original and selected Bible-readings, by J. E. Wolfe, with an introduction by Dr. James H. Brookes. Evangelical Publishing Company, 185 La Salle street, Chicago.

Never was the Bible more studied than now, and every new help in this study is welcome. This book gives outlines of Bible readings with suggestive thoughts and unfoldings on the fundamental doctrines of Christian faith, man's ruin, redemption, regeneration, the resurrection; the second coming of Christ, which it considers the true key to the study of Scripture; the nature and office of the Holy Spirit; the Scriptures and how to study them; the department "Work and Workers," gives practical hints to soul winners and other valuable suggestions. "Fragments that Remain" gives miscellaneous Bible readings by Mrs. Needham, Dr. Brookes, Miss Kittie Clark, Miss Charles and others, including a large number by Mr. Wolfe. The book is calculated to do much good. We wish it might have given more than two inches of space, which is all that it does give, to temperance. When all gospel workers realize that intemperance keeps more souls away from Christ than any other one cause, it seems strange that in a book devoted to soul winning, this subject should not have more prominence. The gospel of Jesus Christ must be brought to bear directly upon this sin, and workers must be taught how to so apply it that lost men shall recognize in Christ one mighty to save from the power of strong drink.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

MATILDA B. CARSE.

Dear white-ribbon sister, brother, boy or girl: Have you a Temple mite-box on your table? If not, write to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, inclosing a two-cent stamp, and it will be promptly sent you on condition that you will drop into it a cent a day, or its equivalent, during the next twelve months. Mite-boxes in quantities will also be sent to unions for the cost of transportation.

Miss Charlotte A. Gray, who is engaged in doing such a noble work in planting W. C. T. U's in Norway, and who is now in Christiania, has sent us quite a collection of foreign stamps to be sold for the Temple. We will sell them for five cents each. She sends for a mite-box, and says: "I do not promise to do great things with it, but will do what I can. A little while ago I wrote a short notice about the Temple, and it was translated and inserted in one of the best temperance papers here. The accounts you send to THE UNION SIGNAL are very interesting, and often very touching in their pathos."

Mrs. S. S. Sickels, of Minneapolis, Minn., who is a generous donor to the Temple, writes: "The picture of the Temperance Temple came yesterday. What a noble structure it will be by God's help and blessing, two years from now, and how beautiful! What fine proportions! I am reminded of the plan of another building that was given of God to man, whose plan and architecture seem to have been no more perfect to God's Temple service in that remote age, than this will be to the same holy service by the women of America in the twentieth century. Well may all exclaim who witness its completion, 'What hath God wrought'!"

The delight the mothers in Israel take in the building of the Temple is quite remarkable, considering that they do not expect to see it with their mortal eyes. Juliet M. Porter, of Fulton, N. Y., sends a draft of $13 for the Temple, the gift of her aunt, Mrs. Chas. J. Case, aged eighty-five years, a woman deeply interested in every great moral question, especially temperance. Her niece writes, "I think she is the only one in our town who takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and she always looks for the 'Temple Items,' and takes great pride in the wonderful enterprise. Last June she procured some mite-boxes and distributed them among a few friends, and the inclosed draft is the result of the effort. She belongs to the Knitting Band, as she sent some children's lines to be sold for the Temple."

Mrs. N. M. Trowbridge, of Greenville, Ky., sends $3 for the Temple. She writes: "I am well aware it is only a mite for so great an object, but I want to cast it in. I am now seventy-eight years old. I signed the first temperance pledge I ever saw when I was twenty years old." Mrs. J. A. Kyte, Sturgis, Mich., eighty-three years old, sends $1 for the Temple. She has been an ardent temperance woman all her life. She closes her letter by saying: "My faith has never faltered with regard to the prohibition of the rum power. If we go forward and keep close to Jesus, success will speedily crown our efforts." Mrs. E. E. Robinson, Sedalia, Mo., who has passed her three-score year mile-stone, writes: "About a year ago I sent for a mite-box. I am glad to be able to enclose its contents $3.65. I hope the Temple fund will increase, and that the building may move upward as fast as possible." Mrs. I. E. Quimby, Laconia, N. H., sends $1, the gift of Mrs. Eliza Scott, aged eighty-one years. Mrs. Quimby writes that although Mrs. Scott is very feeble, yet she reads THE UNION SIGNAL regularly and is greatly interested in the Temple. Mrs. E. A. Lundy, Roscoe, Ill, has just reached her seventieth birthday, and sends a thank offering of seventy cents.

A dear old lady, Mrs. P. B. Latterop, seventy-two years of age, sends a tidy, which she writes she has knit herself, although her fingers are stiff and somewhat out of shape. Two white-ribbon sisters in Smithsburg, Md., M. E. Ovelman and Miss Blanche Ovelman, send a pair of bedroom slippers, one pair of boy's mittens, one Angora cap, and one chair tidy. A beautiful lace handkerchief of her own manufacture, has been sent by a friend in Florida, Mrs. Fannie Haskins. This is worth more, but we will sell it for $5. A friend who does not wish her name mentioned, has donated to the Temple fund several souvenirs that have been lying for years in a trunk, but which she is glad to give to this object. A pair of bedroom slippers have been received and sold for $1.25. No name accompanied the gift.

Mrs. Laura Bridgman, of Umzumbe, Natal, South Africa, writes that she is surprised that the gifts sent just before the National Convention, and which sold for $64, were disposed of so readily. We quote directly from her letter: "We are very glad to know that they were likely to be of any use in swelling the Temple fund. But it is a mistake that all the credit should be given to Natal, as only one of the boxes was sent from this colony. The other was sent from Cape Colony, of which union, Miss Pride, of Huguenot Seminary is the zealous president. Another box was shipped from Durban last week. The contents are from the Free State union and forwarded by Mrs. Gray (daughter of Rev. J. Tyler of this mission, now in America). I am rejoiced to hear such good news of the Temple." These boxes have arrived and a list of the contents will be given in the next issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

All money orders and checks for the Temple should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, National treasurer, and treasurer of the Temple fund. All information in regard to the Temperance Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres. Woman's Temperance Building Association.

Our Children.

HOW JOHNNY-JUMP-UP TURNED INTO A PANSY.

There was a little boy
Whom his mother did employ
In doing all the errands she could trump up;
And she sent his feet so nimble
After scissors, spool, or thimble,
Till the neighbors always called him
Johnny-Jump-Up.

Now this Johnny—little boy
Whom his mother did employ,
Saying, "Johnny-jump-up, dear, and fetch the tarts, please!"
Or, "Run, Johnny, to the spring,
And a pail of water bring."
Don't you see he grew to be his mother's Heart's-ease? —Selected.

THE Y'S BABY.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

We were camping out at Sunset Lake. There were twelve in our party, and we had two good-sized tents pitched on a grassy open space in the pine woods. How pretty and picturesque they looked, gleaming white under the green trees, decorated with great bunches of ferns and cat-tails, and water lilies pinned here and there on the canvas. We had a croquet set with us, and half a dozen hammocks, and the boys made a small tennis ground for us, where we played tennis when it was not too warm. We brought books and music, and Alice brought her guitar along. That and Rob's accor deon and Ben's harmonica furnished us with plenty of instrumental music. It was delightful to lie out in the moonlight lazily swinging in our hammocks, and listen to Alice's sweet voice and pretty accompaniments, and "Home, Sweet Home," as rendered by Rob and Ben.

As a society we sing a great deal (so people say), good, rousing temperance songs, and rounds and glees, and whatever else we find that is spirited and full of music. We are none of us trained singers; but we manage to make a good deal of real, hearty music somehow or other.

Well, I could never tell you all the pleasure we enjoyed during those two weeks at Sunset Lake. I wish I could. It might do some one who cannot go there, some good.

The lake! Oh, it was beautiful! We had three boats, and we girls all learned to row. Our hands were blistered all the while we were there, but that was nothing.

There is no exercise in the world so fascinating as rowing. There is such a sense of triumph in being able to send the boat shooting over the water. It is healthful, too. Such appetites as we had! Even our invalid Dora developed so hearty an appetite that we declared we were ashamed to see her eat, and one of the boys threw her medicine bottles into the lake. She didn't seem to miss them, either.

But the baby! I keep forgetting. One day we all went over to the poor-house a mile or two away from our camp, after tying up our tents—the only way we had of locking the doors.

We were shown through all the buildings where everything was scrupulously neat and clean, and every one seemed well cared for. When we were passing through a sort of court-yard between two of the great buildings, we came upon the poor-house baby, the dearest, cunningest little two-year-old girl I ever saw. She was playing all by herself, sticking her little bare toes into a mud-puddle she had found, and looking at them solemnly when she drew them out. She was rather shy at first when we stopped to speak to her, but she was not afraid, and looked up at us with the loveliest dark eyes. Her hair was dark, too, and a perfect tangle of soft little curls. We girls all had to kiss the little thing, but the boys just stood and looked at her. The matron came up when she saw us and told us about her. She was all alone in the world, her mother having just died of consumption, and her father, a worthless, do-nothing fellow, had been killed in an accident while intoxicated.

They were all much attached to the little thing at the poor-house, as she was the only child among those hundreds of grown folks, but if a good home could be found for her they would have to let her go.

"Lela," her name was, the matron said, "Lela Doane," and she came of "poor stock," but she was a bright little thing for all that, and as good a baby as ever was. The matron laughed when the girls began, "If I were only twenty-one I would adopt her," Vinnie said. "Oh, I 'most know mamma would let me have her if she could only see her!" said Josie.

Dora drew a feeble little sigh which made us all laugh, and said, "If I were only strong, now, like you other girls, I would take her and bring her up!"

Mame, our irrepressible, declared that she would take her anyway, and go out washing to support her.

The boys teased us about her all the way back to camp, but we made them acknowledge that she was "passably good-looking, and nice enough if she wasn't spoiled by so much fuss."

When we got back, we could talk of nothing but the poor-house baby. We held a business meeting out in front of the tents, and talked it over. Every possible and impossible plan was suggested, and talked up, and vetoed, and laid on the table. Our secretary gave up in despair. She was too interested to keep the minutes, and besides it would have been difficult anyway to write down all that was said and done. One of the boys proposed purchasing a phonograph instead of a baby, to serve as secretary, our present scribe being so inefficient. Another volunteered to "turn the crank" at each meeting when the minutes of the preceding meeting were called for. Vinnie succeeded in hushing them up, and we proceeded with our informal meeting. We usually pride ourselves on our parliamentary ways of doing business, but we did not that day.

Well, it was voted unanimously that our Y adopt the baby. We went over next day and told the matron, who looked astonished at first. We left our names and addresses and the names and businesses of our fathers, and asked her to lay it before the board of directors. She said she would let us know in a day or two.

Well, to make a long story short, they finally gave us the baby, and we took her and her pitiful little bundle of clothes to the camp, and were perfectly happy during the few days left us, fussing over her and planning for her.

It was a dreadfully daring thing to do, I know—go off camping and adopt a baby from the poor-house, but we did it.

We were so proud of her on the cars; she was so cunning, and so pretty, and so contented with us, and everybody noticed her. I suppose they thought it rather queer for a baby to be taken care of by a dozen young folks who all acted as though they owned her. We had put a dainty little white ribbon on her, and she looked as if she belonged to us.

Well, astonished is a feeble word to express the way our folks looked when we got home. Some of them laughed, some were in the greatest consternation, and some were so dazed they didn't do or say anything. But it was nice to see how soon they all grew reconciled, and how our mothers began looking over bureau drawers in search of little outgrown stockings, and pretty dresses and aprons. We kept her among us "boarding 'round" awhile, until it was decided to let her live at Dora's house, because she loved the little thing so, and was so lonely.

We all visited our baby very often and took her out walking and driving and to church and Sunday-school, and to all our Y meetings. She enjoys it all so much, and is the happiest-hearted little thing in the world.

I cannot begin to tell you how sweet she looks this winter in her pretty crimson plush cloak and cap and dear little muff. No wonder we are all so proud of her. The honoraries are constantly giving her little presents, and getting up socials and entertainments for her benefit. We mean to send her to the kindergarten, when she is a little older, and give her a first-class education. We pay for it all ourselves, and we never worked so hard before; there is a tangible object to work for now. Of course we do not neglect our regular temperance work because of her, and we feel that we are doing practical temperance work in taking a drunkard's baby and caring for her. We are going to make a grand, sweet woman of her, a blessing to us, and to herself, and to the world. Dear little Lela! the happiest, brightest, loveliest child in all the world—our Y baby!

The Still Hour.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 2, 1890.

BY REV. C. C. HARRAH.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

(Luke 4: 16-32; Judges 2-7.)

Sunday, 2; Luke 4: 16-32. Verse 16, The question never ought to be asked Sunday morning, by any member of the family, "Shall I go to church to-day?" It ought to be the custom to go, and it should be no more a matter of question than any other regular business of the household. Verse 18, This text is the key-note of Jesus' blessed work to uplift and save humanity. It will make of us true reformers, if our lives are moved and guided by these words. Verse 22, Never was there such a preacher on earth as Jesus. His words were spirit and life. He explained and made the Scriptures clear and real, and applied the truth to meet the need of every soul that would truly hear.

Monday, 3; Judges 2. Verse 1, At Gilgal, the Israelites had made a solemn dedication of themselves to God. (Josh. 5: 10) It had a significance, that this messenger of God came from there. We should never forget the times and places of our consecrations to God, and we should stand by the vows we then made. Verse 10, Will the generation growing up in our country be better and truer to right and to God than the one now in control of affairs? Are the boys and girls in our homes planning to do more good as they pass through the world than their parents have done? Verse 14, The day of adversity will come to those who forget God and give themselves to lives of sin.

Tuesday, 4; Judges 3. Verse 5, If we live on the same plane with the world, and conform to its spirit and ways, we will soon find ourselves neglecting religious duties and on the way to become apostates from God. Verse 31, An obscure man with the poorest of weapons, if he truly gives himself to the Lord's work and goes about saving his community, may accomplish great things. Do not delay to put forth effort, where you see that any good thing ought to be done.

Wednesday, 5; Judges 4. Verse 2, Israel had once conquered Jabin. (Josh. 11: 8.) If we let go of God, sins that we once conquered will rise and conquer us. Verse 4, The Lord can use a woman to do His work just as well as a man, and no one into whose soul a conviction of duty to work comes should hold herself back from His service. Verse 14, Victory comes to those who persevere in their work with faith in God.

Thursday, 6; Judges 5. Verse 2, When we obtain victories over our sins, and in the conquests for truth and right, we should not forget to praise God. Verse 9, Willing soldiers make the best fighters. Verse 23, Meroz had the opportunity to do, but did nothing. If we neglect our duties and do not meet our responsibilities in life, we are condemned as wicked servants. Matt. 25: 26. Verse 24, Jael's act was a loyal and brave one, but it was murder. It is praised not because of its moral character but because of the public benefits through the overruling providence of God. He may use acts which He does not justify.

Friday, 7; Judges 6. Verse 1, New sins are followed by fresh judgments. The Midianites overran the land and became the greatest scourge which had ever afflicted the Israelites. Verse 10, Their infidelity was the cause of their national calamity. The sin of apostatizing from God will not go unpunished. Verse 13, Not alone His blessings but the chastisements which He brings upon His people, show His presence with, and His interest in them. Like Gideon, we often mistake the evidences of God's presence by want of reflection. Verse 30, Reformations are preceded by agitation; and sometimes God's chosen instruments to deliver the people are the objects of the sin-bound people's rage, who are so blinded by their own iniquity that they know not their true friends.

Saturday, 8; Judges 7. Verse 1, Jerubbaal signifies "the enemy of Baal." It is an honorable position which one reaches when the mention of his name in the community carries with it the thought of opposition to some sin or wrong. Verse 2, God conquers by the few. If we are in the right, we should not be discouraged because the masses are not with us. Verse 3, The cowardly are of no use in the battles to save this world. Verse 7, The Lord can use best those in His work who are not self-indulgent, and who have a business-like promptness and haste. Verse 23, When victory is certain, all the people are ready to join in the fight and chase the fleeing enemy.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(The Sunday-School Teacher's Work and Reward. Eccles. 11: 6.)

1. The work of the Sunday-school teacher is to fix the essential, saving truth of the Bible in the minds of the scholars. To this end, the text has command of diligence which should be carefully considered. Our Saviour requires that we should lead our scholars to Him. Matt. 19: 14; John 21: 15; Luke 24: 47.

2. The teacher should be diligent to give to his scholars every helpful truth, in order to enable them to build up pure, Christian characters. Titus 2: 12, 14; 3: 9; Matt. 22: 37-39.

3. The lessons of responsibility and accountability cannot be too deeply impressed upon the scholars, in order that they may feel their obligation to make the world better by their passing through it. Matt. 25: 15-30; 2 Tim. 4: 7.

4. The faithful teacher has the promise of a blessed reward. Prov. 11: 30; Dan. 12: 3; I. Pet. 5: 4; Col. 3: 24. There are also blessed promises of success in His work, which should encourage and inspire the teacher. Eccles. 11: 1; Gal. 6: 9; Matt. 28: 20; John 16: 23; I. Cor. 15: 58.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

Sunday, 9; Luke 4: 33-44. Verse 35, Jesus is stronger than demons; they will do all their power to hurt and torment us, but if we have fled to Him for refuge, and are the true followers of God, our Saviour, who has power over Satan, will never forsake us. Verse 38, Our Lord went first to the synagogue, and then to the house. Religion is not only for the church, but also for the family; not only for Sabbath days, but for every day. Verse 39, If we have been truly healed and saved by our Lord, do we not find it in our hearts to do all we can in His service? Verse 43, We should have the true missionary spirit of Jesus, and endeavor to give the gospel to just as many as possible.

Monday, 10; Judges 8. Verse 2, "A soft answer turneth away wrath." (Prov. 15 1.) Verse 4, We may sometimes grow weary in the conflicts of life, but while a duty remains to be done we should keep ourselves true to our work. Verse 5, Those who are engaged in work which is a public good have a right to expect the support and encouragement of those who will be benefited as well as themselves; but often they do not receive this which is their due, and, with a heartless ingratitude, are left to work alone. Verse 23, God, who calls us to His service, will be ashamed of us if we take advantage of successes to gratify personal and family ambition. Verse 27, If we are not careful, and do not use good judgment, we may have good intentions and yet do things which in the end will result only in harm.

Tuesday, 11; Judges 9. Verse 1, The inhabitants of Shechem by their idolatry, prepared themselves to become the dupes of a wicked demagogue. Verse 2, There is no class of men so dangerous to the country as those who are seeking popular favor and office, in order to gratify personal ambition Verse 5, Such is the depravity of ambition that it will resort to any means in order to accomplish its ends. Verse 7, The meaning of Jotham's parable is, that foolish and wicked men are found boldly usurping places of power and prominence, from the responsibility of which wise and good men are apt to shrink; and that the associates in such proceedings, where no regard is paid to principle or personal merit, will sooner or later fall by mutual destruction.

Wednesday, 12; Judges 10. Verse 1, Israel had to be saved from intestine usurpation as well as from foreign foes; so we have our enemies within and our enemies without, to be overcome. Verse 6, When a people become bad, they are apt to go on from bad to worse; so this apostacy seems to have exceeded every former one in the grossness and universality of the idolatry practiced. Verse 15, The first step of true repentance is the confession of sin. The sincerity of the confession is shown when the sinner not only mourns over the consequences of the sin to himself, but over the meanness and evil of it as committed against God.

Thursday, 13; Judges 11, Verse 3, Jepthah's mode of life was similar to that of David when driven from the court of Saul. However discouraging one's life may be to begin with, if he is a person of high and energetic character he will find his place of usefulness in the world. Verse 11, Those who are away from home, or who live a roving life, should not forget God. The surroundings of Jepthah's life were most unfavorable, but the piety of his language shows that he had not neglected the habits of personal religion. Verse 39, Jepthah was well acquainted with Mosaic history (verses 14-27) and knew that human sacrifice was abhorrent to the law and character of God. No Levitical priest could be found who would put such a sacrifice on God's altar. He did not offer his daughter as a sacrifice, but consecrated her for life to the service of the sanctuary. She was thus doomed to live an unmarried life—a disappointment particularly severe to a Hebrew damsel, but in which she was sustained throughout her life by the annual period of praise by the daughters of Israel. It was no less a sorrow to her father, who saw that his name and family would be extinguished, since she was his only child. The vow (verse 31) required if it were a person, that the dedication should be made to the service of the sanctuary, or, if a proper animal or thing, it should be offered on the altar.

Friday, 14; Judges 12. Verse 6, The pages of history are darkened, because the mispronouncing of others' shibboleths has been made a sufficient reason for brothers to quarrel with and slay each other. We cannot be too thankful for the growth of Christian liberty, fraternity and equality.

Saturday, 15; Judges 13. Verse 4, If the parents will live right, the children will be strong and consecrated. Verse 8, God has established a connection between prayer and the fulfillment of His promises. Verse 24, The strongest man that ever lived was a Nazarite—a total abstainer. (Num. 6: 3.)

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(The Multitude of God's Mercies. Psalm 106: 7.)

The Psalmist in the text teaches us, by the example of the Israelites, that we are apt to overlook the mercies of God. All the blessings and benefits which flow to us, out of the full fountain of God's love, are mercies.

1. We have all manner of temporal blessings. We have health and the use of our minds, and how great are these mercies! We have all the necessary things upon which life depends every day.

2. We have a Saviour whose forgiving mercy has brought us into peace with God. There is no end to His mercy in the grace He gives to overcome temptations, and in the forgiving of our daily sins.

3. The mercies of God are a multitude in giving us Christian fellowship, and the opportunities of useful work, and a part in building up His Kingdom, and in giving us the good hopes that at last we shall triumph over death and have a home in Heaven. All these mercies should lead us to consecrate ourselves to God. Rom. 12: 1.

The Household.

EZEKIEL'S LOGIC.

BY L. H. W.

"Ezekiel, tell me if you can,
What do you mean by partisan?
You talk so much about it.
Now, really, it seems to me
You'd better let the subject be;
Can't we all live without it?"

"What do I mean by party-zan,
Jemimy? why, 'tis for a man
To vote for prohibition.
It is all right to talk and pray,
But when men come to vote that way,
'Twill take us to—perdition."

"Do tell! Now be an honest man,
And tell who are non-party-zan;
There must be somethin' in it."
"Non-party-zan! Why, don't you see?
'Tis just as plain as plain can be,
'Tis them that vote agin it."

OUR NATIONAL CIRCUS.

BY CARRIE LEE CARTER.

Of all the amusements which delight the hearts of dwellers in small towns, and of the farming people settled around each village, first and foremost is the circus, and autumn is its favorite season for appearing. The chill winds which make the festive picnic and barbecue become things of the past, bring as recompense the circus, on its way to warmer Southern climes, and the gorgeous advertisements which decorate walls and fences come to town with autumn's first breath; and while woods and fields are illumined with bright leaves and golden flowers, our streets blossom in the colors of the rainbow, and tell of the "Most Colossal Aggregation of Magnificent Wonders the Universe has Ever Contained." Then it is the small boy saves his dimes, and he who has none becomes suddenly industrious in the fear of not having the requisite admission to the charmed tent. And then, too, the "old boys" think that they really must "take the children to see the animals." But when, at last, the day comes, and the street parade, with its brass band and wonderful chariots appears, every one decides at once, that of course they must go, just this time. And go they do, great and small, and witness the same performances, and laugh at the same old jokes which they have seen and heard time and again.

Some of our good people who think it almost a sin to attend a circus, and are horrified at the thought of going to one, do not know that they are attending a circus every day of their lives, and sometimes assuming the role of actor therein. Our National Circus, which is conducted by the great Liquor League, that employs thousands of actors from every station of life, is giving performances daily. Their street parade is not the occurrence of an hour, but is an ever-present advertising of the business from the glittering bar-rooms of fashion to the lowest groggery or drunkard on the street.

The tickets to this circus are men's ballots, which not only entitle their owners to be spectators, but also to take part in the performance, if they so desire. Women are only allowed to use complimentary tickets, and have no right to take part in the show, or object to any part of the performance. All that is required of them is that they occupy reserved seats, look smiling and happy, and be fed on the pink lemonade and peanuts of flattery, which is generally their only share in the profits of the great concern.

But women from their reserved seats have an excellent opportunity to witness the many performances of the actors, which, from the grand entree to the close of the concert, are truly wonderful. The high license trapese supports some daring and brilliant acrobats, and their feats we watch with bated breath, fearful lest they should fall from their dangerous positions. The "trained donkeys" excite our admiration when we see them so cheerfully obey the voice of their master (the political "boss") for they remember the choice morsel which is the reward of obedience. With what dexterity the ring-master, the National Brewers' and Liquor Dealers' Association, whips up the two fiery chargers in the race—the Democratic and Republican parties—and how timidly they halt at his command, while the clowns, generally red-nosed politicians, crack their stale jokes, chief favorite among them being "Prohibition doesn't prohibit."

Then come the men who are so noted for turns and contortions of mind as well as body, that we can be sure they possess no such article as a backbone. The performers on the tight rope, most of them very tight indeed, how wonderful! Perhaps you don't care to stay for the concert, which is sometimes quite tragical, frequently having a murder for the main feature of the entertainment? The side shows of court-rooms, insane asylums, poor-houses and prisons, are always entertaining, and so is the menagerie, with its fine collection of "blind tigers," "snakes," and "biled owls."

In our town, business in the large tent, the saloon, has been closed, because the audience objected to some of the performances, and then, too, the proprietor turned his trained animals, and occasionally a fierce, wild one, loose on the streets, until it became unpleasant, and sometimes quite dangerous to walk out. In justice, though, I must say the people never rested until the lion-tamer (the town marshal) secured the dangerous animal, and in such a case I have seen hundreds of our country's brave men walk in triumphant procession after the muttering, growling animal with his keeper. With happy, smiling faces they saw him securely fastened in the cage, and then returned to their employments until the time arrived for another to be turned loose. But after a time in which a few of the people had been protesting and preaching and praying, the saloon was condemned and vanished.

But for fear of too extreme dullness, we still have drug-stores, doctors, and a temperance saloon for side-shows, and many amusing and strange tricks of magic are displayed to our astonished eyes: that of obtaining a prescription without having a disease; of a man getting drunk in a temperance saloon, where, of course, no intoxicants are sold; and, still stranger, the changing by magic of the lemonade or soda-water called for into beer or whisky, which the customer drinks entirely oblivious of the change.

Abraham Lincoln said, "You can fool all the people part of the time, and part of the people all the time, but you can't fool all the people all of the time." Our Democratic and Republican brethren may talk wisely about the merits of their respective parties, but let some unreasoning woman ask what those parties are doing towards protecting their boys and their homes against the terrible curse of intemperance, and they cannot frame a reply, for, as "Josiah Allen's Wife" says, "they've got no frame to put it in."

A REVOLUTIONIZED HOUSEHOLD.

BY JOSEPHINE R. MORRIS.

Was it natural reaction from the Day of Rest, that decreed Monday should be washday? Who can tell when or by whom the custom was established? It seems to be one of those things that are accepted as right, simply because they exist. "Mother washed on Monday," and so the daughter handed the custom down.

In our household, where but one servant is kept, we have reversed the order, and while friends and neighbors have looked and said discouraging things, we have gone quietly on, until it has ceased to be an experiment and stands an established fact that Saturday is washday.

On Friday—when preparing for the weekly sweeping—the bed linen is changed, and at night the family are requested to take bodies fresh from the bath to their clean beds. Our bread and cake are baked on Friday—Saturday afternoon, dessert and other arrangements for Sunday dinner are made, and then the kitchen is cleaned up with the suds saved for that purpose.

Sunday morning we begin the week fresh and clean in the laundry—as well as our souls—and I question if the former, with its pile of sweet, clean clothes, is not an instrument helping us to the latter. We have no blue Monday; the servant has had a day of rest between the two hard days' work of washing and ironing—in consequence of which the iron seems to fly more swiftly; there is a hot fire and clean kitchen, making it so easy to add some little thing to render the usual "left over" Monday's dinner more appetizing.

On Sunday morning there is nothing unusual to be done, no baths, no changing beds, as is so liable to happen under the old custom; the children go smiling to Sunday-school, leaving the elders to follow leisurely to church, which did not always happen when neglected duties crowded one another. Monday seems like a day gained, and is felt all through the week. There is more time, and daily duties are not hurried. If Monday night fails to see the ironing finished, Tuesday morning completes it, and gives a restful afternoon. Wednesday shows the silver shining anew in polished beauty, and Thursday's afternoon out for our faithful helper seems most opportune. Not one of the household would return to the old way.—Home Maker.

JUST DO YOUR BEST.

BY JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

The signs is bad when folks commence
A-findin' fault with Providence,
And balkin' cause the earth don't shake
At every prancing step they take.
No man is great till he can see
How less than little he would be
Ef stripped to self, and stark and bare,
He hung his sign out anywhere.

My doctern is to lay aside
Contentions, and be satisfied;
Jest do your best, and praise or blame
That follers that counts jest the same.
I've allus noticed great success
Is mixed with troubles, more or less,
And it's the man who does the best
That gits more kicks than all the rest.

WHEN OLD ENOUGH TO DRINK!

BY J. ALLEN BALL.

Nearly three-fourths of a century ago, a quiet village in northern Vermont was startled by seeing posted up at different places papers headed in large print and the astonished people read that on such a night a man would lecture upon the above subject. Such a thing had never been heard of before. Since the origin of the village the people had gone to the "tavern" for rum, and this and hard cider were found on every table. Even "the parson" got rather too joyous at times, yet his good feelings were overlooked, and he still told of the Saviour's love.

But all were not happy here. Many homes showed the blight resulting from too much indulgence in drink, and impoverished wives and children could easily be found, yet none seemed to see any remedy; and so the foul blight still remained untouched. It was thought to be the misfortune of the family resulting from the frowns of Providence.

On the night of the lecture the house was crowded by a motley mass, all eager to hear what could be said. Here were the rich and poor, the tavern keeper and his victim, the red-nosed father and his suffering, squalid family. The speaker told in plain and simple language of his life—how as a drunkard he was wedded to the intoxicating beverage, till, like a demon, it had destroyed honor, pride, and industry, and made him a very brute. He told of his once happy home, of his devoted wife and children, and then described his downward course, till finally he and his family were driven out as outcasts. While thus homeless and friendless, Christ in His infinite mercy touched the heart of that drunkard, and he saw himself in all his wretchedness and vileness; and on his bended knees asked the blessed Jesus to take away his fiery appetite, and give him a clean heart solely and wholly devoted to Christ. Jesus heard and blessed him, and in time he was enabled to buy back his old home, and now his life was blessed by a happy family and a comfortable home.

I will not attempt to follow the speaker through, but his words sank deeply into the people's hearts, for all saw in his picture of life their own true condition, and when the speaker told of the happy change resulting from casting aside the drink habits, many determined to try the same experiment.

At the close, a pledge was shown, and all invited to sign it who wished, and many crowded forward and signed their names. Among the number was a beardless, tow-headed boy, but he was crowded out and sadly returned to his seat. A temperance organization was proposed and the motion carried, and as they wrote out and arranged the plan of organization, the boy who was turned back, rose to his feet and said: "I move that all be allowed to join who are old enough to drink."

Such manliness from a boy surprised all the people. "That boy," said an old man, "is Horace Greeley who is printing our newspaper. I want him in our society, and I second the motion."

The motion was carried, and young Greeley was invited to sign the pledge and was made one of the officers, and became one of the most earnest workers in the order.

A few months before this, when Mrs. Greeley took a last embrace of her noble boy, she said, "Horace, if you will promise me never to touch any kind of intoxicating drink I can bear the parting better." "Mother, God helping me, I will not only abstain from its use, but I shall do all that is in my power to get others to abstain from its use also," replied the boy.

How nobly did this fifteen-year-old boy keep this pledge in after years. During a busy life when men looked upon him as the greatest writer of his age, he still kept his pledge, and died temperate to the last. Temperance men, let Horace Greeely's condition of membership be yours. It is easier to take a boy in tender years and keep him safe from this drink evil, than to try to break him when the appetite is there.

"UP, AND BE DOING".

"Up, and be doing!" is the word that comes from God to each of us. Leave some good work behind you that shall not be wholly lost when you have passed away. Do something worth living for, worth dying for; do something to show that you have a mind and a heart and a soul within you. Is there no want, no suffering, no sorrow that you can relieve? Is there no act of tardy justice, no deed of cheerful kindness, no long-forgotten duty that you can perform? Is there no reconciliation of some ancient quarrel, no payment of some long outstanding debt, no courtesy or love or honor to be rendered to those to whom it has long been due? If there be any such, I beseech you, in God's name, in Christ's name, go and do it.—Dean Stanley.

Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.—Hebrews 12: 1.

AFTERWARD.

After the exhilarating experiences of festive occasions comes the monotony of common, everyday life. After the glowing of the Christmas tree the candles are burned out, and the gifts, that were so lovely and seemed so many when all together, are scattered, each doing its work for somebody's individual use or pleasure, but all out of sight of the giver. The glow and gratification of giving, the delight of seeing others happy, the sense of largeness that comes into the heart and soul with a consciousness of power to delight and bless—these all pass away under the reactionary weariness of body and mind which follows any season of great excitement. Somehow the very Christ-child who seemed so near, whose spirit crept into our human hearts, making everything sweeter, seems to go away again. The world jogs on very much as it did before, and into some of our souls there even creeps the sense that perhaps we need not have done quite so much, since nearly everybody would have had all the Christmas they could appreciate without our little gifts. One woman writes: "I have had such a lovely time giving everything to everybody, but after this the deluge—the perfect flood of bills that must be paid, and that, when they come, will make me wish I had never spent the money." That there is something wrong where the holiday season leaves a sentiment like this, a mixture of dross in our heart's gold, cannot be denied. But, on the other hand, such repentance belongs to the reactionary period. The tide of good will was at flood and swept over all our hearts, obliterating everything but the desire to make other people happy; now it is at ebb, and we see the rocks and weeds along the shore and forget the sunlight and sparkle that were on the crest of the wave, and something of this reactionary process, so much to be regretted when it touches the things without, reaches the soul within.

As the year drew to its close, bringing with it such bright, festive occasions, we were kept from too great sadness and too great regret of faults, mistakes and errors, by the very atmosphere of kindness and love that pervaded our hearts and homes. If we did make a failure of the year, the sadness of the past was kept out of mind by the charming and delightful present. As day by day on the tide of jovial good cheer, we swept nearer the new year, we were carried up to its threshold right bravely, and the very life and joy all about us gave a sense of the possibility and the probability of our doing and being much better in the year to come. It is a sort of high tide for the soul. It is easy not only to make good resolutions, but it seems easy to keep them. The old mistakes and faults that have made such stains on the past are hereafter to have no domination over us. All things good and strong and brave and sweet are to be a part of our life in the year to come. We think of ourselves as we ought to be, and for the time being, while the pulses of life all round us are beating high, we are carried over by the exhilaration into the belief that we can be all that God would have us. The highest possibilities do not seem beyond our grasp, and if only we could keep our souls at this high-water mark, what heroes and heroines we should become.

But, alas, after January follows February. After the clear, crisp tonic air of good resolutions, after the glow and warmth of human kindnesses and cheer, come dull, damp and heavy February days. The body is tired with all its exertion, and weariness creeps a little into the spirit and will; the keeping of the good resolutions does not seem to be quite so important as to require such very close watching.

Little things that we never meant to forget again we allow to slip just for this one time. The kindnesses that we did with such a glow of enthusiasm on Christmas and the first few days of the new year become a little irksome in their constant repetition. To be kind has been an effort for the soul and spirit, and the spirit of the ordinary mortal rather likes to take things easy. Why should it not, indeed? Have we not been trying and doing for weeks and weeks, and may we not indulge ourselves in a little rest? Ah, but our good resolutions! but somehow, they do not seem so much like guardian angels as they did before; indeed, they nag us a little like recording angels, who keep their pencils always sharpened, and who never forget to have memorandum books in their pockets. Now is the time when the willful spirit comes in and we feel as if, even by a recording angel, we do not wish to be nagged. Alas, alas, for our good resolutions. When we have reached this point of reaction, away they go like the wind, and some damp, foggy February morning when there is no sun shining in the sky and no brightness in the face, and no cheeriness in the voice, we wake to the lugubrious consciousness that we are just as good as we were in November of last year and not a bit better. The bad habits, the old faults, the fretful spirit, the complaining temper, the mental and spiritual indolence, and nobody knows how many other things, become like a little army of demons taking possession of the chamber that we had swept and garnished and made lovely at the coming of the year. And this is, perhaps, the moment of the greatest danger to the soul that is, after all, near enough to God to feel, if only once a year, upward aspiration and the springing of new desire. This is the time when we should turn about and look ourselves straight in the face with a resolute "Get thee behind me, Satan," purpose.

We are not any worse than we were before, only we have made a mistake in the manner and method of our introspection. We are carrying over some of the sins of the body, and calling them sins of the soul. We are confounding nerves and spirit, and holding the spirit responsible for the tricks of the nerves, but down at the bottom of our heart we do mean to be nobler, braver, sweeter, truer than we ever were before. The thing we have to do is simply to rise up and shake off the depression and move steadily forward, no matter whether we find the way pleasant or not; no matter whether we feel comfortable in traversing it; all we need to know is whether the new path we have chosen is the right path, and to keep steadily therein.

Of one thing, nay, of two things, we should be very certain: First, that it is better for us to have had a good resolution one day and to have broken it every day thereafter, than never to have had it at all. And another, that He who loves us enough to keep alive the little spark of desire to be better than we are, never loved us better, even in our days of good resolutions, than He is loving us to-day; and, further still, He is never going to love us at any time through the ages any better than He loves us to-day. Therefore whatever strength we may have in our consciousness that He knows our weakness, whatever comfort in the consciousness of His tenderness, whatever power may be to us from the contemplation of His strength to-day and every day, for He is just as ready for us one day as another, makes for us a revelation of our own weakness, which should also be a revelation of His strength. Because He does not let us go, we must not let ourselves go. The falling child lifted up again upon its feet, runs on.

Let us rise up and go forth, leaving the things that are behind.

ALCOHOL AS A THERAPEUTIC AGENT.

One of the favorable signs of the times is the attention given to this subject by medical men. Ten years ago it was seldom discussed by medical associations; we well remember the superior air with which our early petitions to these societies, asking them simply to investigate this subject, were received and ignored, or else responded to by the declaration, made in more or less courteous terms, that they, the doctors, understood their own business better than we did.

Now the medicinal value of alcohol is a subject often discussed by the profession; these discussions are bringing out many strong points in favor of non-alcoholic medication. Last November, Dr. J. W. Grosvenor read a paper on the "Therapeutic Value of Alcohol," before the Buffalo Medical and Surgical Association. It was printed in the Buffalo Medical and Surgical Journal, and has just been reprinted in tract form. Although it does not come quite up to our standard of no alcohol in medicine, a logical deduction from its own statement of facts leads to the conclusion that alcohol is not only dangerous but useless as a remedial agent. We wish all our workers could read this article; it furnishes answers to the objections offered to non-alcoholic medication by the average practitioner, and being the testimony of a medical man before a medical association, has more weight than anything presented by "temperance fanatics."

Dr. Grosvenor rapidly sketches the medical history of alcohol from its discovery in 1030 to the present time, showing how, from being considered the elixir of life, it has come to be rejected altogether by many distinguished practitioners. Among those who advocate non-alcoholic medication, or very restricted use of alcohol, he enumerates, in England, Sir William Gull, who has lately died, Sir Henry Thompson, Drs. Richardson, Ridge, Kerr, Ritchie, Edmunds, Munroe, Parkes and Hare; in America, Drs. Davis, Hunt, Hargreaves, Story, and many lesser lights. He thinks that the majority of physicians still prescribe alcohol with the old-time freedom, that a large minority use much more discrimination in prescribing it, while a few do not use it at all. He adds: "It is my belief that the medical profession of the world is losing its faith in the beneficial effects of alcohol upon the diseased human system."

Some of the steps that have led to this conclusion are: the more clear and general recognition of the fact that the medical ingredient in all alcoholic liquors is the alcohol itself; that alcohol is a poison, a depressant, not a stimulant; that it depresses temperature, retards digestion, injures constructive protoplasm and stimulates destructive protoplasm; that is, it hinders construction and promotes destruction.

The fact that the highest medical authorities are giving large consideration to the treatment of diseases by nutrients, tends to advance non-alcoholic medication; for one of the first theories exploded by a scientific study of the action of alcohol was its claim to being a food; since it contains no nitrogen and no tissue-making compounds, it cannot be a tissue-making food; if food at all, it can only be a heat producer. But to produce heat it must undergo oxidation in the body, and the products of this oxidation, aldehyde and acetic acid, should be found there; they are not, nor is the quantity of carbonic acid exhaled from the lungs increased, as it should be; no force is created; in short, apply whatever test you will, the verdict is that alcohol is no food. The demonstration of these facts has led many sensible physicians to substitute milk, beef tea, and other nutrients in place of the wines and brandy formerly used so largely in typhoid fevers.

In summing up his argument, Dr. Grosvenor makes these points among others: Grave responsibility rests upon the profession in the use of alcohol as a medicine, on account of its deleterious effects on the system, and because of the liability of the patient's contracting the drink habit. Alcohol contains none of the compounds that enter into the construction of tissue, and the evidence of its heat-generating quality is not sufficient to warrant the belief that it is a heat-producing food. As a narcotic and anæsthetic it has a limited sphere, but is less valuable than a number of other narcotics and anæsthetics which are less objectionable. As an antispasmodic and antiseptic it may be superseded by other remedies, without detriment to the patient; as an antipyretic it is neither so prompt nor so effective as other antipyretics. So deleterious are the effects of alcohol upon the human system, it is proper to inquire whether its harmfulness does not overbalance its helpfulness, and whether it could not be dropped from the list of therapeutic agents without any serious loss.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The Christian Inquirer of New York, one of the ablest journals of the Baptist denomination, is awakening to the truth of present issues. Dr. R. S. MacArthur, who is editor-in-chief, is an ardent Republican and a stalwart in temperance. The following is presumably from his pen, and it shows the political brethren that good men are becoming tired and indignant at this dallying with the old curse:

Many friends of high license are coming to the conclusion that their Utopia is a Sahara. They thought that high license would so weaken the liquor traffic that the cause of temperance would obtain substantial advantage. While not advocating license in any form or under any circumstances, we have been willing to see high license tried, because so many good people believed in it, that we knew the best way would be to let them try it and learn its futility by their own experience. "It is becoming apparent," says the Brooklyn Citizen, "that the high license system is as much of a delusion as prohibition, as a means of stopping or checking the use of liquor." The Citizen is a Democratic paper, but is clear-headed—sometimes. Republican papers are beginning to see the same thing They are disappointed in their Utopia. If any high license system could have proved effective, the Brooks Law in Pennsylvania would have been the one. But the Brooks Law has the liquor interest to fight it, and its best friends are now in profound doubt as to whether it was ever what they thought it. The Philadelphia Inquirer publishes a special from Pittsburg, which states:

"Judge John F. White's strict interpretation of the Brooks Law has reduced the number of licensed saloons ninety per cent, yet there are more drinking places than there ever were before. In some districts, notably the poor neighborhoods surrounding the iron and steel mills, nearly every house is a 'speak easy,' having its biggest trade on Sundays. Indeed, some iron workers have sacrificed big paying 'jobs' in the mills for a still larger income from sales of liquor on Sunday alone. They get their supplies from the breweries at the dead of night."

If the Brooks Law fails, what hopes can we have in any form of high license? That was deemed the perfection of licensed legislation. It was strict, legal, high-toned, and had the courts on its side. It closed up many dens of vice, but as fast as the licensed places gave in, the unlicensed places began to work. The power to defy the law comes from the liquor traffic, which has money, influence, political power, and almost perfect system. This is a battle which is not being fought against the rum holes which are so conspicuous for their iniquity, but with the brewers and their wealth. A vast and wicked monopoly is behind all these shameful pits of sin. And that monopoly is fast falling into the hands of Englishmen. The Brewer's Journal tells us that thirty-three American breweries, consolidated into seventeen companies, have passed into the hands of British owners, the gross value being stated at £9,013,000, or $45,000,000. British gold is thus working the ruin of American society.

Now there is a large class of earnest temperance men who say, "The saloon must go," and who sincerely thought they could drive it out by high license; but they find they cannot do any such thing. They are foiled at every step they take. The liquor interest is stronger, shrewder, more influential than they. It has the balance of power in every election, and casts it in its own defense. The 8,000 liquor dealers of New York City claim that they control and can cast 40,000 votes. Doubtless that is true, and 40,000 votes is a monstrous bid for the protection of any political party. These honest temperance people who have had their Utopia are beginning to find it anything but an enchanted isle, and are looking about in a hundred ways to see what to do. They have said to Prohibitionists, "Keep off; let us try high license; that will reduce liquor selling to a minimum, and give us a temperance millennium." But it is the old story over again. es, the Brooklyn Citizen has it: "It is becoming apparent that the high license system is a delusion as a means of stopping or checking the use of liquor."

Well, gentlemen of the High-License Utopia, what next? You have asked us to wait until high license could be fairly tried, and you come back to us with the broken fragments of your beautiful system in your hands, and with sad and rueful countenance say to us, "It doesn't work." Of course it doesn't. Nothing will work that leaves the liquor traffic to manipulate our courts, frame our legislation, defy our laws, and defeat all the ends of justice. We must strangle the foe, and kill the system that supports the saloon. No help can be expected of the Democratic party. [In the North.] It is hopelessly committed to the rum interests. As to the Republican party, we can only say, it must kill the saloon or the saloon will kill it. It cannot look over to the Prohibitionists with a meaning smile, as much as to say, "Wait and see how we will do it," and dropping its club turn around and hob-nob with the brewers and saloonists. The Tribune says that its "party is thoroughly committed to the high license party." If that is so, then the party must prepare to shoulder the tremendous responsibility of its failure. If it is committed to that thing, it will go into every future election with a dead elephant on its back. It will be the party of the dead elephant. Its leaders ought to see by this time that high license is a failure. Every day the fact is becoming more conspicuous, and the common sagacity of the average man should teach him that no hope lies in that direction. Well, what next, gentlemen? What else shall we try, before we kill the liquor traffic? What new experiments? Step up, gentlemen, to the bar of public opinion, and tell us what next?

The Northwestern Christian Advocate, of Chicago, in a recent editorial upon the secession from the W. C. T. U. ranks, says:

As far as the work is concerned, it would seem that the older organization has interested and committed armies of women whose work is simply wonderful. Indeed, it is doubted whether any work-general can direct and utilize many more active laborers in that union were they to offer. We hail this new movement, since we are far from excluding from the field of prohibition those whose only divergence from the old standard of consecrated zeal is unwillingness to march with the Prohibition party. . . . It is probably understood that the Third party preferences of the old organization do not prompt us to wish their annihilation. The heritage of political criticism and condemnation which has fallen to it in these latter days is proof sufficient that it has vitally harmed the liquor interest and its party allies of whatever name. . . .

In our former article we expressed the hope that the new woman's organization may never be stranded on the icebergs of high license. Some ladies who were at Cleveland do not quite like the possible implication in the expression of that hope. We uttered that saying in connection with the quoted allegation that the new organization is to be non-partisan only in the sense that it will adhere to the Republican party for the sake of punching the Third party. In that case we may suggest that a new definition of non-partisanship must needs be formulated. It seems clear that the Republican party is crystallizing a fresh platform for 1892, in which high license will be a prominent element. If the new woman's union prefers the Republican party, we hope it will dissent to that plank in the platform. . . .

We repeat it—we hail the new union, because it affords a field for some and many noble women who cannot accept the party affiliations of most of the leaders in the old union. The old union contains, and will retain, many women who prefer the Third party because they believe it is the shortest, if not the only road to victory. Meantime the new union will win many earnest women who wish to retain a non-partisan attitude, but are in readiness to suddenly join and aid and applaud whatever party of the future will guarantee total and speedy suppression of the liquor traffic. If that party does not now exist some party will come which will be able to make that sure guarantee. It is as sure to come as the world is sure to exist. At its advent—even if it consists of desperate elements, suddenly shaken loose as they were when the rebellion began—both these two unions, and their husbands and their brothers, will combine as if in the fusing heat of God's providential furnaces. Our worse than Pharaoh's hosts will be swallowed up and drowned in a trice. That day is not as distant as it appears to the dull senses of modern Egyptians. God hasten it. The surf and roar of another Red Sea are not far away.

Thus the "signs of the times," as indicated by the Republican religious press of two great denominations, show that the annihilation of the liquor traffic is certain, and that it must come, as all legislation comes, through political action and by a political party.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A W. C. T. U.

QUERY:—Please give us hints on the best methods of organizing and starting a W. C. T. U. AN INQUIRER.

ANSWER:—After the way is open for a meeting, it should be very thoroughly advertised, and personal invitations sent to all ministers and their wives.

In order to organize a union which will be permanent and strong, I think it wise to meet the women an hour before the general meeting, to talk over the work informally; impress them with a sense of their responsibility, plan in regard to the officers, and select eight or ten earnest women who will at the close of the meeting go through the audience and take names of those who will become active or honorary members, giving to each a badge and pledge card. After this informal meeting, should follow an address to the general public to arouse and instruct as to the object and aim of the W. C. T. U., and after names of members are taken, this meeting should formally close to give an opportunity for those who wish to retire, but all members, and any others who desire, should be invited to remain.

I then organize the union, fully explaining the conditions of auxiliaryship and voting to be auxiliary to county, state and National Union, then appoint first meeting, and solicit subscriptions for W. C. T. U. papers. The next day, if possible, I meet the new union and help them take up several departments of work, explaining plans for each, and appointing superintendents, in order that as many as possible may be given something special to do.

I urge them to attend county and state conventions, unite especially with the county in their "fair" and "prison" work, wear the badge, and in every way seek to advance the work "For God and Home and Native Land," by educating and agitating. I leave samples of W. T. P. A. literature and advise county presidents to send as early as possible some officer to the new union to hold a meeting and encourage and strengthen the tie between county and local. HELEN L. BULLOCK.

MEMBERSHIP DUES.

QUERIES.—1. What amount of annual dues constitutes a woman a member of the W. C. T. U., along with the signing of our pledge?

2. What authority exists for some unions requiring a dollar membership fee, and others fifty cents?

3. What proportion of the annual fees are required to be sent to headquarters to insure auxiliaryship?

4. Is there any authority for an organizer requiring $1.00 membership fee, and requiring seventy-five cents per member to be given for different things, thus leaving one-third for the union? KANSAS.

ANSWERS:—1. The amount varies. In most of the states it is sixty cents a year, but in some it is one dollar. We would advise any local union to fix the amount at two cents a week, practically a dollar a year. Honorary members pay the same amount that working members do, and all that the honorary members pay is retained in the local treasury.

2. There is no law whatever governing a local union as to the amount of its membership fee. It must pay ten cents a year to the National for each member, and a certain per cent to the state, this amount being different, as has been said, in different states, and determined by the constitution; but what shall be paid to the local union in the way of a membership fee is determined by its own authority.

3. To state and district headquarters such a sum as the state constitution defines.

4. The National W. C. T. U. believes in state rights and local government. This question is settled, therefore, on that basis.

The Watch-Tower.

Coming out after a lecture, some good lady said, "I don't understand Mrs. Ormiston Chant—I don't believe she prays to my Jesus." Mrs Chant was just behind the lady, and replied, "No, my dear friend, she prays to her own." There are volumes of theology in that.

A white-ribboner heard that Susan B. Anthony would have wine at the banquet celebrating her seventieth birthday, and was much exercised over the report. Miss Anthony, when questioned as to the truth of the statement, said she "would as soon have arsenic."

It is a most short-sighted policy that criticises the many departments of the W. C. T. U. They all relate in various ways to the main issue—total abstinence for the individual and total abstinence for the state. And each one brings into our own a new circle of earnest and sympathetic-natured women. The Band of Mercy work enlists a wide constituency not otherwise joined with us, and opens up vistas of beneficence and character-building for the young beyond our power of estimation. No, we are not afraid of departments; let the good work go on.

Field-glass in hand, I ascended the Watch-Tower the other day to locate some of our leaders. I found Miss Willard in Pennsylvania, where she is addressing immense and enthusiastic audiences. She and Miss Gordon participated in the Chester county convention of the W. C. T. U. February 20, and in the conference of six county unions in Philadelphia on the 22. Mrs. Buell and Miss Pugh are "holding the fort" at Headquarters. Mrs. Woodbridge is lecturing in Illinois, and Mrs. Stevens is hard at work in her home state. Of the National organizers, Mrs. Chapin is off on a trip to the Gulf states; Miss Henrietta Moore is journeying in Montana; new unions mark her course. Mrs. M. L. Wells finds hospitable audience with the good people of Texas; Mrs. Lucy H. Washington's husband has been very ill and she is at home in Port Jervis, N. Y.; Mrs. Mary Read Goodale is just starting on a two months' tour of Louisiana, and Miss Griffin is organizing in Alabama. New York states will not let Mrs. Bullock go, and she is busy holding county conventions. Mrs. Lathrap has slipped "across the border," and is delighting and convincing large audiences in Quebec. Mrs. Hoffman is in Indiana, whence she goes to New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Washington, D. C. Unions in that region will do well to secure her for a lecture while she is on the wing.

The younger readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will be specially interested in the announcement that the National department for organization and instruction in colleges and higher institutions of learning offers, through its superintendent, Mrs. G. S. Hunt, a prize of fifty dollars for the best essay on the relation of the temperance question to political economy. The competitors shall be undergraduates who are now taking a college course. Each college may choose a committee to decide upon the relative merits of the essays of the students under its care, and soon a committee will be named to whom these selected essays may be sent for final judgment. As helps in the preparation, Mrs. Hunt suggests "Our Wasted Resources," by Hargreaves, published at 58 Reade street, New York, and "Unto This Last," by Ruskin, which can be secured from the W. T. P. A., 161 La Salle street, Chicago. The essays must be ready by June 1, 1890.

"What did Miss Willard really mean when she said she would never write any more laudatory paragraphs?" inquired one white-ribboner of another. "I think we old soldiers can get along without praise, but the new recruits need helpful and appreciative words." "And they will be sure to get them from our dear president," answered the friend, "for I believe she meant just this, that she would never cease to say encouraging things, but where she used to think it necessary to use three adjectives, she will henceforth be contented with one."

The state headquarters of Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. are in the handsome Logan Offices on Arch street, the property of Pearsall and Hannah Whitall Smith. Probably no other state W. C. T. U. parlors are so elegantly fitted up in respect to carpets, desks, etc. One room is wholly devoted to temperance literature, which goes out by cart loads. Beyond the mailing room is a neat little kitchen, with gas stove, cupboard filled with nice dishes, and all needful provisions for lunch. Mrs. J. R. Jones, Mrs. Dr. Forest, Miss Stille and their helpers are so indefatigable in their work, that unless such provision were made, their provisions would be often disregarded. Pennsylvania expects to report no falling off in its numbers in 1890. May it capture the Middle state flag offered by the National W. C. T. U. for the greatest pro rata increase in dues. ON DUTY.

"THE ANGELUS."

(Millet's Painting now on Exhibition in Chicago.)

Far, far away,
The bells peal, "Pray."
"Pray at the dying of the day."
O'er levels dim
The sweet sounds swim,
The cadence of a seraph's hymn.

Vibrant and low,
More tenuous, slow,
Down the horizon's verge they go.
Heavy with care,
In furrows bare,
Two toilers hear and bow in prayer.

The bells sing, "Cease;
Rest and release
Come with the nightfall's blessed peace!"
The music rare
Throbs through the air,
Suffusing it with faith and prayer.

As angels sing,
The blest bells ring—
And lo! the Toilers see the King.
They hear Him say:
"Come rest, and pray;
I, too, was weary in the way."

O ye that moil,
Yoked to the soil,
Still ye are nobler than your toil!
O ye that plod,
Turning the sod,
Your worship lifts you up to God!

Not of the earth
Had ye your birth;
Other are ye, of better worth!
Spirits, not clay;
Children of day;
Not beasts of burden—souls that pray!

O, toiling men,
It rings again;—
The Angelus soundeth now as then.
World-toilers, hear,
How, far and near,
"Pray," "Pray," it ringeth sweet and clear!

PARAGRAPHS FROM A PARLOR TALK.

BY DR. KATE LINDSAY.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

Physical culture for women is getting a very encouraging hold upon the public mind through several ladies who are popular and have become enthusiastic leaders upon this subject. In New York, the interest is such of late years that it is said to have modified the age of marriage among the "sacred four hundred," twenty-five to thirty now being considered the proper age for a woman to marry. Up to the age of twenty she is expected to spend her time in college, and then to have from five to ten years more for foreign travel and physical culture and development.

In England, one of the favorite modes of exercise among the aristocracy is that of horseback riding. Nor do they make use of the old-fashioned, long riding habits which were always a misnomer so far as protection of the person was concerned, and a great source of danger to life and limb in case of accident. The English ladies wear a jacket with trowsers of heavy cloth strapped down over the boots as a protection for their limbs, and when riding in public, put above the trowsers a short riding skirt which comes a little below the knee. In riding schools, they dispense with the skirt altogether, it being considered safer while learning to ride.

TREATMENT FOR A TRAINED SKIRT.

Dr. Lindsay was asked in a recent lecture which she would recommend, disinfection or a surgical operation for a long train which had been sweeping about the byways of a public building for weeks. She replied as follows:

"Both disinfection and a surgical operation would be required for a radical cure. A train which had swept the byways anywhere would be very dirty, being loaded with germs which might carry blood poisoning to some one; washing would be necessary, then, to get rid of this danger, and to prevent a recurrence, it would be necessary to remove the train with a pair of shears. Almost any one could do this, but a dressmaker's services might be required to prevent fraying.

"When a woman turns her dress into a street sweeper or a carpet sweeper, there should be some sanitary regulation to meet the case. She raises a cloud of dust which settles upon her underclothing and her person. This species of uncleanliness affects both herself and others. Another thing, there is not a little strength wasted in dragging about a heavy trained skirt. Grace of motion and freedom of action are incompatible with this unnecessary burden. It is well adapted to the affectation of listlessness and languor. But it is to be hoped that our civilization is advancing so rapidly that the time is not far distant when society women will dispense with this 'caudal appendage' as entirely as have the noble army of women who have entered the ranks of workers. Improper dress has not a little influence in retarding the golden dawn of universal suffrage."—Reported by Helen L. Manning.

COLORADO.

NOTES OF WORK.

County organization is growing rapidly in our state, when we consider the immense distances. It is scarcely a year since the first county organization was formed in Elpaso county; Arapahoe county followed, then Pueblo, within three months. During the past few months four other counties have been organized: San Juan, Rio Grande, Mesa, and La Plata.

On December 22, 1889, Miss M. D. Wilson organized a local union at Silverton, of which she writes as being formed of women courageous enough to step out before a public audience to don the white ribbon. We need women not afraid to be seen to let themselves be heard.

Mrs. C. W. Beach, after assisting in revival services at Colorado City, was given a reception by the union and presented with a new Bible. Following her work there she visited Manitou Park, where she lectured, talked to the women in their prayer-meeting, and effected an organization of the W. C. T. U. Leaving Manitou Park, she went yet farther on the line of the Midland railroad, to Florissant, where she occupied the pulpit on Sunday, and found the Rev. Mr. Hiller a ready helper in pushing forward temperance work. Mrs. Beach also organized a union including some old and tried workers from other localities where there were W. C. T. U. organizations.

If all old workers in the W. C. T. U. would use their efforts to open the work in new localities where Providence places them, it would give a new impetus to the work, especially in a new country. Mrs. Beach carries her own pledge cards of total abstinence for railroad men, and also, cards of "Converts' Covenants;" during her trip she distributed 300 pledges and 140 "Covenants." These are to be returned to her when the receiver has signed, if he concludes to do so after careful deliberation.

Mrs. J. S. Sperry, of Pueblo, superintendent of social purity work, has taken the press to task for publishing the names of women, and withholding those of men in the recital of disgraceful affairs. The press admits the justice of the criticism and promises to do better. Mrs. Sperry has also put in the union depot cards informing girls where to go to find responsible help in getting work. That is just what every railroad station should have, and it is the business of the W. C. T. U. to attend faithfully to such work, and without doubt many young girls would be saved.

The Y. W. C. T. U. of Pueblo has recently opened a Day Nursery. Two-thirds of the members of the Day Nursery Association are composed of members of the Y, and one-third of outsiders; by this means bringing in those who will work for children even if not ready to adopt all lines of temperance work. I don't know where one can find a better educator for temperance work than working for the children of intemperate parents, and learn practically of the wholesale robbery of the rights and benefits of women and children constantly being committed by the liquor traffic. Dr. Dora Slemmons is president of the Association, and the following is somewhat of their definite work as reported after one month's existence, which certainly is encouraging:

"As yet only ten or twelve children are at the nursery, and most of them are weekly boarders. Women who work out and have no place to leave their children, can bring them to the nursery early in the morning, where they are cared for until seven o'clock in the evening. A mere nominal sum of ten cents per day is charged for their keeping, and when one woman brings two children she is charged fifteen cents for both. If the women of Pueblo were fully apprised of the exact mission of the nursery, the place would no doubt be filled to overflowing. Where women are compelled to leave their children day and night they are charged two dollars per week. Quite a number of playthings were sent in on Christmas, and the little ones amuse themselves indoors, or, when warm enough, out in a large back-yard. At night they are read to and sung to; and the weekly boarders are put to bed at seven o'clock. As the institution grows, it is hoped to introduce kindergarten instruction."

The day nursery of the Denver Central union, which has been in operation for two years, has several months had under its care three hundred babies.

Mrs. E. F. Leonard in the Challenge has the following to say concerning the kitchen garden: "Under the efficient management of Mrs. A. B. Sinclair, of Stout street, a large class of little women in the kitchen garden take up the study of household service, learning the best way of doing things. To the rhythm of music they are taught to sweep and dust, to wash dishes, make beds, answer door bells, etc., thus being fitted to become at some future day handy little maids to some over-weary housekeeper. This study is taken up Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 3 p. m. in the day nursery building, corner of Delgany street and Stanton Avenue. The subtle and beneficent influence of these preventive and educational efforts are already molding the homes. They bring us into direct relations with parents, many of them men and women who have become so sunken and disheartened that the squalor and repulsiveness of their dwelling places tell the whole story. But through the children we send back a renovating spirit. They sing their songs in spite of poverty and wretchedness. Being irrepressible little beings they tell all the ideas they have gained. The little housekeepers set about to make things tidy, and the parents come in now to see what we are trying to do."

Mrs. M. R. Sprague in her report of the Cottage Home states that "among the forty-eight inmates, within a year and a half, only two have proven incorrigible (and God only knows whether they be so). Forty of the forty-eight were helped to homes and reputable employment, and the gratitude of all that the doors of worthy opportunity are not shut upon them, is touching indeed."

Mrs. Eva Higgins, president of the Southern district, recently visited the Leadville and Salida unions, having a most delightful and satisfactory trip. The press superintendent of the Salida union divides the space in the local paper given to the W. C. T. U. with the Band of Hope, each filling the space alternate weeks. I do not know that we have lost any favors from the press in the state by the secession movement in the National Convention, but of course the press has had a good deal to say about the movement, as it certainly was interesting newspaper matter, but so far as I know a paper that has published one side of the story has been quite as willing to publish the other side, and by this means a good deal of free advertising has been done, and I sometimes think editors try to strike up sharp editorials in order to bring out definite replies.

The Colorado Springs Gazette published Miss Mary Henry's explanation of the matter relating to Vice-President Morton, and the Colorado Springs Republic published a review of the situation, and a reply to an editorial with the last official statement of the general officers, which could hardly leave a doubt in the mind of any of the readers of these papers as to the true position of the W. C. T. U. I presume there is scarcely a paper in the state that does not exchange with one or the other of these papers.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

SHOWERS OF BLESSINGS.

The rain-soaked earth, the swollen waters of the rivers and arroyos, the beautifully green fields and hills, all testify of the abundant rains, and are prophetic of bountiful harvests by and by; there have been also rich showers of spiritual blessings which the "Giver of every good and perfect gift" has poured out upon the hearts of His people through the good work of Major Hilton. He held gospel temperance meetings in Southern California during the latter part of November and first week in December, beginning his work in Los Angeles under the auspices of the Central Union, and going from there to Pomona, Santa Paula and Riverside.

He was engaged by the Los Angeles union for eight days at two hundred and twenty-five dollars. It seemed a very large undertaking for the ladies, with an almost empty treasury, but he seemed called to them of the Lord, and they trusted without fear that in some way the necessary funds would be raised. Preparatory to his coming an earnest prayer service was held, for God's special blessing upon the speaker, and that He would prepare the hearts of the people and make the truth as a two-edged sword to pierce the conscience of the slumbering church. If any of us lacked faith, Major Hilton's sermon the first Sunday morning anchored our souls fast to the Source of all strength. "Be strong and of a good courage. I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." These words rang out clear and strong, and full of sweetest comfort, as if spoken just for us. How can we ever be dismayed again, with that grand watchword sounding forever in our ears! In the light of God's truth, as Major Hilton uttered it, the saloon traffic never seemed so iniquitous, nor God's people so guiltily responsible for its continuance. "Thou art the man," every one who heard him was made to feel who supported this evil even by his vote, or permitted it through his apathy. His Bible readings each afternoon were especially helpful. Under his interpretation, the Divine Word seemed illuminated, and its lessons in faith and its glorious promises strengthened the hearts of those who heard, and filled them with a sweeter and more realizing sense of the divine presence.

In Pomona, Major Hilton's work was particularly successful, for he had the full support and coöperation of the pastors and leading temperance workers of the city. His services extended over six days, and the large opera house was full to overflowing every evening with audiences eager to hear the words of truth that he uttered, while the afternoon Bible readings were exceedingly precious and inspiring. Not long before his coming, the city had failed, on some technical grounds, to secure the prosecution of two violators of the ordinance against the sale of intoxicating liquors. Such a voice as Major Hilton's was needed to denounce the wickedness of the saloon traffic, and to show up the failure of high license that the brave men who voted for this ordinance might be encouraged to stand firmly together to secure its enforcement, and to prevent its repeal at the next election.

Although the rain poured down all the time Major Hilton was at Riverside, and many of the citizens whom the union desired should hear him were not reached, yet the hearts of the dear women, in spite of their disappointment, were full of a te Deum at his coming, so wonderfully were they blessed and comforted by his presentation of the Word of God. They put on their armor for conquest immediately after his departure, determined to keep their prohibition ordinance, if possible. This union worked heroically during the early winter to prevent an amendment to their city ordinance, by means of which the sale of liquors to guests at the hotels would be permitted. They published and circulated a manifesto setting forth the reasons why this amendment should not be granted, and also circulated a petition to the members of the city council, asking them to be true to the trust they had assumed. Their earnest efforts were crowned with success, for the amendment failed to pass.

Major Hilton lectured in Santa Paula two evenings, and gave one Bible reading and one talk to the union. The secretary writes that "some converts to prohibition were gained, and many careless and indifferent were aroused to thought on this important question. Fifty names were secured for full and honorary membership in the W. C. T. U.," which, as one acquainted in the little town says, "took in nearly everybody." As a result of his visit, a Y was organized one week later.

One important result of Major Hilton's lectures at each place, was a great increase in the membership of the unions. Over two hundred were added to the roll in the Los Angeles union, and more than that number of dollars left in the treasury, and similar good results at Pomona and Riverside. MARY E. GARBUTT,

WORK AT NASHVILLE.

During the past year the East Nashville W. C. T. U. has encountered many disadvantages; but notwithstanding all these, we are making progress. We have eighty paying members, and desire to increase our numbers.

On the evening of December 22, the union gathered in a public meeting at Tulip Street Church to celebrate the Crusade anniversary. A large number of earnest workers and friends were present, and a most interesting program was carried out. Several ministers of different denominations were with us. The Rev. Samuel Steel, of McKendree M. E Church, delivered the evening address, with strong and unwavering declarations of our principles and position. Dr. Villers, the Revs. Curley, Crisman, and Gardner encouraged all workers with cheering remarks. The "Leader's Story" was read, and I believe all who heard again the story felt their hearts thrill with greater zeal for prohibition work and the destruction of the saloon. Many fervent prayers were offered to the Master that He would guide, direct and give wisdom to all who are laboring in this grand cause. The remaining portion of the program was excellent.

We have a colored industrial school which has been faithfully taught for two years, by our brave, sweet president, Miss S. A White, who is blessed with courage to stand fearlessly before the world and the church in the vindication of her principles; the tenderness that springs from her heart is broad and deep enough to take in the whole human family

At our last city election the Prohibitionists had a full, strong ticket,carrying eighteen per cent of votes for mayor and twenty per cent of the whole vote for councilmen. The fight was only a foretaste of this year's contests; the war is on and to be pushed, as another city ticket is now in preparation. Our greatest drawback and need in Nashville is for a circulation of press news that will promptly answer all the claims made by the liquor organs and that will present the Prohibition party favorably, creditably and convincingly before the public. We have one excellent weekly paper, The Issue, but its facilities are limited, and it is not likely that its resources will enable it to cover the wide field of investigation in a way that will procure and bring to the people the constant supply of facts and practical arguments that are needed.

Our W. C. T. U. has pledged itself for one or more of Mrs. Clara Hoffman's able lectures, and we are looking forward to these with pleasure. We have had two Demorest contests, are preparing for more, and have several mission unions For the past year the city hospital has been visited by committees appointed each week; the inmates of that degraded institution continually receive assistance from the union, and we feel that it is one of our many fields of much needed work. The indications at present are, that our union will do more efficient work during the present year than ever before;our members are increasing, our prayers and songs are more triumphant, as also are our gatherings, including parlor and mothers' meetings, which grow more and more interesting each week. GOOD CHEER TO JACK TAR.

The New Year's reception by the San Francisco W. C. T. U. was not given, as usual, at headquarters, amid banks of ferns and perfume of flowers, under the bewildering glamour of gaslight and silken draperies; but it was at the Coast Seamen's Hall, on the water front, where the "men go down to the sea in ships" and return to be robbed of their hard earnings by the land pirates of the liquor traffic

The local unions rallied grandly to the call of our state superintendent of sailors' work, Mrs. Mary B. Eden. Refreshments came pouring in sufficient to supply a small army.

At four bells in the forenoon watch (10 a. m.) the hall was opened. It was tastefully decorated with evergreens, flags, and W. C. T. U. banners, which, with some fine historic pictures that belong to the Coast Seamen's Union. made it quite an attractive place. A miniature ship, the workmanship of a sailor, was a rare piece of mechanism, and attracted much attention. The Coast Seamen's Union has 4,780 members, about 800 of whom were present during some part of the day.

The Y's having foregone the pleasure of their accustomed New Year's reception, were there in full force, with happy hearts and willing hands. The W's were there of course, and the sailors were there—hundreds of them —who evinced such an appreciation as is rarely seen. At 11 a. m. the exercises commenced and lasted continuously till four bells in the evening (10 p. m.). Never have I known before of a program of eleven hours' length being successfully carried out; but the interest never seemed to abate. There were no long interludes and no lengthy speeches to weary the audience. The singing was an almost spontaneous outburst of good feeling. The Y's, the sailors, and an occasional soloist, with "everybody joining in the chorus," were the special delight, as their voices rang out in "My Country 'Tis of Thee," "Old John Brown," "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," and scores of other sacred and patriotic hymns. They were accompanied on the piano by J. H. Barrett, a sailor.

The readings and recitations were mostly of a character to make "Jack" stop and think on that New Year's Day. At intervals prayer was offered, and kind and tender words of encouragement were spoken to help to begin a better life on the first day of 1890. Sixty-eight signed the pledge, and proudly, some of them tearfully, wore away the white ribbon. The W. C. T. U. are pledged to remember them in their prayers.

One sailor arose near the close of the evening, and said, "I have been wondering all day why these women are bothering their heads and making themselves so much trouble for us poor outcasts. Nobody has ever seemed to care for us before." The following morning one of their number found his way to the Mariners' Church, and said he had found the Saviour through the New Year's reception. May this be but the beginning of the happy new years that are in store for these honest tars. One pleasant feature of the day was the "greetings" from the Y. M. C. A., extended by Dr. Easton of the Calvary Presbyterian Church, who also gave a fine address and carried back our good wishes. Mr. Whitney, from Berkeley, brought the greetings of the W. C. T. U., and also furnished three little speakers, two boys of his own, and Master Jay Butler, son of Captain Butler.

Interesting speeches were made by Revs. W. S. Bovard and Campbell, and by "elect ladies not a few," among whom were Miss Cummings, Mrs. Spencer, Miss Berry, Mrs. Boyd and Mrs. Gray.

Mr. W. J. B. McKay, editor of the Coast Seamen's Journal, and Henry Ark, secretary, were present during the whole, helping by noble and kindly words, manifesting a lively interest in this good work. Messrs. Heberli, Irving, Spicer, and many others helped to make this New Year's reception an occasion over which the angels might rejoice. Mr. McCoy of the Y. M. C. A., hearing the good news, came at a late hour to bid us God speed.

I wish I could tell of the untiring labors and patience of Mr. and Mrs. Eden, who have by their unselfish interest in the sailors' welfare made this most remarkable reception possible. But we forbear, and will close by asking tbe coöperation of all who in any manner appreciate the sailors' hard lot and how indispensable they are to the welfare of our land and nation.

WORK IN KINGMAN COUNTY.

We are fully alive to the work in hand. Although not organized as a county W. C. T. U., we are getting ready. Have three unions besides the one at Kingman and four other places to visit. Organized one at Norwich last Monday with fifteen members; seventy-four signed the pledge after Sabbath night's lecture on "Only a Knot of White Ribbon," and took fifteen star subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL. Our home union at Kingman had Mrs. D. A. Evans with them in the fall for two weeks, and are now looking forward to a treat of two lectures from Dr. Anna Shaw in March. We are now practicing on the "Deestrick Skule," will give it very soon; proceeds to go for home work.

We cannot tell anything concerning the seventh district work except that we know it is alive. We all enjoy THE UNION SIGNAL every week, and are loyal to the real, the original W. C. T. U., with its forty departments of work, its broad plane of "charity to all," and an honest belief in the policy of prohibition. A. P. HOLLOWAY

GLEANINGS FROM NEWARK.

The mother union, No. 1, of Newark, observed the Crusade anniversary December 21, 22 and 23. A history of the Crusade was read to a large and attentive audience. Sunday afternoon a responsive reading was given by the members of the union led by the president; extracts were read from THE UNION SIGNAL, which all enjoyed. Sunday evening the hall was filled to overflowing. Mr.George Scott, of the New York Witness being present; he bore testimony to the great outcome from the Crusade in the West. Monday evening was held a consecration service, and many renewed their covenant with God to work until the last saloon is closed, or until we are gathered home. We held watch-night services New Year's eve, and had a very impressive love feast; prayed the old year out and sang the new one in.

New Year's day, as is our custom, our hall was open all day. A large number of our ladies were present, and served over eight hundred persons of all kinds and conditions; to some was given a good square meal. A large number signed the pledge. At four o'clock was held a gospel meeting for one hour. At half-past seven commenced the first of a series of revival meetings, which have increased in interest every night since. A number of our city pastors have taken part, and have greatly helped the work. Many persons have signed the pledge, and resolved to begin the new year aright. Sixty have professed conversion; we hope this interest will grow as it did for many weeks last year, and many homes be reached and changed through this special effort.

We feel that the Lord is very good to us in enabling us to keep up all our departments of work and to pay another thousand dollars on our building, leaving us now eleven thousand dollars on the mortgage, thus paying fourteen thousand dollars in six years. While many of our members are laid aside by the prevailing sickness, we hope only temporarily, we are thankful that our meetings are well attended and full of interest. Our president is always at her post.

We have lately had our annual social reunion of our reformed brothers and their families; and although a very stormy day, we had a large attendance. Brother Souter had charge, the oldest of this band; fifteen years of sober living against thirty years of drink. Many were there who testified to the change in themselves and their families; of the difference in their once wrecked homes; some have been saved fourteen, twelve, ten, and all the way down to one year, and some only a few months; but they were full of thankfulness to God for His keeping power, and earnest prayer was offered that these happy homes might still continue, and that these men might be kept in the hollow of God's hand. Several came out to join this company of redeemed ones, praying that they might be rescued from this terrible curse. After this service a social time was enjoyed, and abundant refreshments passed around.

Oh that all these may be kept from the snares set by our good men to increase our revenue in the shape of the $1,500 high license saloons in Newark! and these same good men are actively applying this "blood money" to the support of our public schools. Our jail is so filled that plans are being made for a larger one; our poorhouse is always full; our new insane asylum has over eight hundred in it, and every year a new wing is being added; every home for the friendless and orphan asylum is full of destitute children, made so by this business, rendered so respectable by high license. For every dollar paid into our treasury eight are paid out to take care of all this crime and poverty; and this business is carried on night and day. What other business is so protected and has such privileges? Last week our chief of police issued orders that the Sunday law must be enforced; you see we have a law for the closing of all saloons. To show how these orders were carried out, there never were so many drunken men and women in our hall on Sunday; and they said they could get all the drink they wanted; the big brewers paid all the fines if there were any imposed. When God gives the signal, these wrongs will all cease, and we want to do our part to hasten that time.

WASHINGTON.

NOTES OF WORK IN A NEW UNION.

Since coming to the new town of Buckley, which is not yet quite two years old, I have been the means of organizing a W. C. T. U. here. Mrs. Reese, our territorial organizer, was requested to come and aid us, and she did so. We organized with nineteen members, and now have twenty. We have a superintendent of literature, and when spring comes and business begins again, we hope to add quite a few names to our subscription list. There is great need of the work in this new country. Everywhere you go you will find three or four saloons, even in the smallest towns. Our new town of Buckley has three saloons in full blast every day, and Sunday, too, and a sad prospect of the fourth saloon.

We hold our meetings weekly; the first meeting of the month being for business; the second, prayer; third, literary, and fourth, mothers' meeting. We have had one public meeting, but have no place to hold these save a hall owned by private parties, and for which we have to pay rent, which of course hinders this branch of the work. We are making preparations now for another public meeting, however, and one of our physicians has kindly consented to give us a talk upon the effects of alcohol upon the system with illustrations, which we hope will bring out a full house.

Most of our members are only beginners in this work, and it takes an extra amount of effort upon the part of the president to keep up an interest among our own members. But quite a number of our band are very faithful and we hope for good results. We are making the endeavor to obtain a reading-room also. This town is full of young men who are without home influences, the hotels being not much better than the saloons, so they are surrounded by no influence, one might say, but that of the saloon. We must have some place for these young men to spend their evenings besides the saloon. We are now working up a temperance entertainment, the proceeds will go toward a reading room. We have many enemies, as the majority of the inhabitants are friends to the liquor traffic, but will only have to work the harder. We also have a superintendent of the department of Sabbath observance, and hope to do much good in that line. There is the greatest need of work in that line here. We can scarcely tell when Sabbath comes; the sound of the hammer and the saw are heard on the Sabbath just the same as other days, while many of the merchants consider Sunday their best day.

And now we of the new Buckley union of the new state of Washington desire the prayers of the dear white-ribbon sisters everywhere for our success. We are hemmed in upon all sides from the outside world by fall spruce, cedar and hemlock trees; and we can see plainly the snowy peaks of the Cascade mountains which seem great barriers between us and our Eastern homes. But we are comforted by the wonderful thought that God is everywhere, and that neither mountains nor tall trees can prove barriers between us and our Father who loves and cares for u all. MRS. F. NEBRASKA.

RICHARDSON COUNTY W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

This was held at Falls City on February 5 and 6, and was well attended, Mrs. J. H. Battles, the president, in the chair. The opening devotional exercises were conducted by the Rev. S. B. Neilson; music by Ladies' Quartette of Falls City. Various reports from the local unions gave evidence of a marked increase of interest, and showed that they were gradually taking up all departments of work, and steadily gaining strength, power and influence.

This being the time for the election of officers, the following were elected: President, Mrs. Olive Lichty, of Falls City; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Z. Stretch, of Falls City; recording secretary, Mrs. M. M. Smith, of Rulo; treasurer, Mrs. H. Stearns, of Humboldt. Mrs. Battles, the esteemed president, positively declined a renomination. Progressive and comprehensive resolutions and plan of work were adopted, and the following superintendents were appointed: Franchise, Mrs. L. T. Miller, of Falls City; hygiene, Mrs. F. C. Morris, of Humboldt; evangelistic work, Mrs. Duke Slavens,of Falls City; literature, Miss Sadie Abbott, of Rulo; Sabbath observance, Mrs Huston, of Salem; county fairs, Mrs. M. Stoughton, of Falls City; scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. H. Stearns, of Humboldt; impure literature, Mrs. Z. Stretch, of Falls City; juvenile work, Mrs. E. L. Liggett, of Humboldt; jail and prison work, Miss Frankie Kingman, of Falls City

Mrs. Bailey, of Minnesota, gave a short talk each evening. The second evening our meeting was held in the court house, which was filled to overflowing to hear Mrs. Bailey, of whom the local press says: "She is a fluent talker, logical, and unusually fair towards those whom she is opposing. W. C. T. U.

PENNSYLVANIA.

WORK AT CHAPMANVILLE.

Our union is doing excellent work. Miss Varnum gave us a series of lectures which resulted in arousing the old members to renewed effort and diligence, increasing the membership and leaving a general good feeling in the community.

Pennsylvania feels that in securing Miss Varnum's services she has secured a prize. She is a mighty power for "God and Home and Native Land." She gave one hundred and seventy lectures from September 1 to February 1.

Our officers, Mrs. R. M. Strauss, president; Mrs. N. Sharp, vice-president; Jennie Duffield, secretary; Mary Morse, corresponding secretary; Mrs. S. E. Fox, treasurer, as well as the superintendent of departments, are always on the alert for work that will produce the best results. We are firm against secession.

The subjects of our last conference meeting were, "The Training of Children," and "What Shall We do for Our Boys?" We find these conference meetings to be very instructive and profitable. SUPT. OF PRESS DEPT.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

GOOD words come from Hickernell, Pa., regarding Miss Vandelia Varnum's work there. Many were converted to prohibition principles; one hundred and fifty-two persons signed the pledge; several recruits were added to the Y. W. C. T. U., and the society is better equipped than ever for active temperance work. The warmest commendation also comes from Franklinville, N. Y., where "great good was accomplished, and many signed the pledge"

A CORRESPONDENT in East Hatley, Quebec, writes that temperance workers in the Dominion are waking up to the fact that they "must bring to bear that trained battery, the ballot box, and charge it to its fullest capacity" against the liquor traffic. At the latest meeting of the local union it was decided to order a number of copies of the January Monthly Reading on "Franchise," and, after committing it to memory, recite it as a dialogue at the next public meeting.

FROM Williamston, Pa., comes the following: "Our people were highly favored Sunday evening, January 26, with an eloquent and convincing gospel temperance address, delivered by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, state corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. It was the time for our regular union meeting, and the audience was large and appreciative. She appealed with great earnestness for all temperance workers to do all in their power to help drive the rum curse from our land, and the forcible and logical way in which she presents prohibition principles will make her instrumental in accomplishing much good in this great temperance reform that is slowly, but surely, marching on to victory. The union gave her a reception on Saturday evening."

LIVINGSTON COUNTY, Illinois, has just had its first "gold medal contest" held at Odell. The hall was filled. Dwight and Pontiac turned out in goodly numbers to show interest, and give encouragement in this undertaking. Mrs. Barbara Replogle-Atkinson presided with grace, and Miss Mary Cowen, of Bloomington, presented the medal in a few well-chosen words. Miss Georgia Lish, of Saunemin, ten years of age, won the prize. The decision gave general satisfaction. The county is very much interested in this Demorest contest work, having issued since last May eleven medals. These are the only contests that have been held in Livingston county.

MOST earnest commendation comes from Waitsburg, Washington, regarding the work of Dr. Orpha D. Baldwin, National superintendent of health and heredity. Her health talks there have evoked thought and conviction on the part of many as to the duty and privilege of "glorifying God in their bodies as well as their spirits."

APPROPRIATE resolutions were passed by the Delaware executive committee, at a recent meeting, concerning the death of Mrs. Annie H. Martindale, wife of the Rev. T. E. Martindale, of Asbury M. E. Church, Salisbury, Md. This beautiful tribute comes from the hand of a friend: "Her death was rather sudden, although she had been sick for many months. Her devoted husband spared no sacrifice in his diligent efforts to cure her or alleviate her sufferings. For many, many months, between hope and anxiety, he waited the turn of the long, long tide, but this continued to ebb and not to flow, till at last the tide of her life ebbed out, and she 'put off the mortal and put on the immortal'; and thus ended a life of great usefulness, and for several years of intense suffering. She was more than a helpmeet to her husband, she was a co-laborer in reformatory and religious work. On the organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union she became a member and an influential worker, standing high in its councils, active in formulating its principles, and in the administration of its work. For eight years she was the president of the Delaware W. C. T. U. One of her last labors in behalf of this cause was to stand before the Delaware legislature and advocate a law for the protection of young girls and the purity of womanhood. Hers was the most difficult of all work, that of a pioneer. Being of wonderful executive ability, the work grew and prospered in her hands. As long as there is a W. C. T. U. in Delaware, her works will go on. In the gloaming of December 3, 1889, she was laid away to rest. At her feet were laid a bunch of lilies, fit emblems of the pure, sweet life, and the golden heart of love."

NOTICES.

Will the corresponding secretary of each state union please forward a copy of the state minutes to me at 155 Eighth street, Portland, Oregon, immediately?

ORPHA D. BALDWIN.
Sup. Health and Heredity, N. W. C. T. U.

Miss Willard regretfully recalls her recommendation of Mr. Thomas N. Doutney, on representations made to her by white-ribboners and others of undoubted probity. Her last note of commendation is dated 1881, and since then she has not been cognizant of his proceedings.

Please announce in THE UNION SIGNAL that Mrs. Anna Sneed Cairns, of Kirkwood, Mo., has been appointed state superintendent of the department of the relation of temperance to labor. Sincerely,

CLARA C. HOFFMAN, Pres.
ELLEN D. MORRIS, Cor. Sec.

Will Mrs. Livezy who wrote to me from Cottage, Mass., please send her full address? I wrote to her, but my letter was returned. Dear friends, if you only would mention your county as well as the name of the place where you live, and that of your state! Unless the place is very prominent, this omission always makes trouble. Very often there is more than one place of the same name in a state; there are three Johnstowns, for example, in Pennsylvania. So whether your letter is concerning scientific temperance or the department of mercy, in Pennsylvania or from other states, about the Band of Mercy division of juvenile work, please give full name and address, and then I shall be able to send a reply which will reach you. Official Communications.

FROM THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U. PRESIDENT.

To Our White Ribbon Women:—

Mrs. Ormiston Chant, of London, is now with us, and is holding parlor meetings for a few days in New York City. She is a fine speaker on literary as on philanthropic subjects, and as effective in the pulpit as upon the platform. Our Woman's Lecture Bureau makes all her engagements. Her lectures cover a range of such themes—besides Temperance and Purity—as "Physical Training," "Poetry"—including some of the chief English poets—"Social Life in England," "Home Rule in Ireland," "Politics and Women," and "Woman Suffrage." Mrs. Chant hopes to raise a fund for the World's W. C. T. U. through lecturing and preaching, all of which amount she will send to Miss Esther Pugh, 161 La Salle street, Chicago, treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U. This is a generosity to which we are not accustomed, and for which we are profoundly grateful. Let us bear witness to our appreciation by opening up the way across the continent for Mrs. Chant, and our friends in the Sandwich Islands, Australia, Japan, indeed, the world around, will welcome this sisterly presence, eloquent voice, and outstretched hand of sympathy and help.

Let all applications be sent directly to Mrs. R. A. Emmons, 161 La Salle street, Chicago, Ill., secretary Woman's Lecture Bureau. The following beautiful letter from Mrs. Chant is emphatic in its statement of the noble purpose that inspires her for a mission as sacred and tender as ever enlisted a gifted woman's heart:

MY DEAR MISS WILLARD:—Do you not agree with me in thinking, that now I am in America and have left my household comfortably arranged, with a view to a longer absence than I may ever be able to make again, this would be a splendid opportunity for helping on the work of the World's W. C. T. U., say in Australia and Japan, as well as in the United States? Of course we shall need funds for such an enterprise, and it would be neither just nor wise to tax the resources of the W. C. T. U. for this purpose, as all its means are needed for its regular work.

But this difficulty need not be a serious one, I imagine. Could not a special fund for this purpose be raised by my preaching and lecturing avowedly on behalf of this object, not charging a fee, but being allowed to take a collection? When I think how kind and generous was the congregation of Unity Church, Chicago, last time I was here, in giving me that handsome Sunday morning collection of $210, half of which sent twenty-five sickly little children from one of the poorest slums in London into God's blessed country air and scenery, for three weeks each; and the other half enabled me to help many an outcast brother and sister safely over the turning point in their lives, surely it is not idle to hope that that same loving response would meet such an appeal for such a grand purpose as a world mission.

The longer I live, the more plainly I see that nothing short of international work will prevent our earnest efforts to uplift humanity from being a mere phase of the individual or the century. I want all the world to be kindled into a great undivided family interest in evolving and conserving the love that is the redemption of man from evil, and the goal of his perfection.

A very happy wife and mother, with so beautiful a home as mine is, surely I can testify to the wisdom and purity, the gaiety of heart and intellectual culture, that are sheltered by such a home under the religiousness that believes the earth and man are God's kingdom, and loves and works and prays in the spirit of Jesus Christ.

Your affectionate sister,
LAURA ORMISTON CHANT.

Now let us get at work. There is no risk to those who send invitations to our white-ribbon comrade from Great Britain; her meetings will more than bear their own weight every time; there are to be no tickets—the free-will offerings of the people being relied upon to float this blessed enterprise.

Counting on your hearty coöperation, which has never failed me yet,

I am yours for God and Home and Humanity,

Frances E. Willard.

UNFERMENTED SACRAMENTAL WINE.

To the Superintendents in the Southern States:—

I would most earnestly recommend that you at once interview the delegates-elect to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to be held at St. Louis, Mo., May 7, 1890; the object of such interview to secure the vote of each delegate in favor of a resolution to be presented to that body at that time, recommending the use of unfermented wine at the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. In 1886, at the General Conference held in Richmond, Va., the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That the General Conference of the M. E. Church South is opposed to the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes.

Though this resolution may seem inferentially to favor the use of unfermented wine at communion, it does not give such help and influence in our Southern work as would a more direct and positive enunciation from this great body of Christian men.

The reports that have come to me from the workers through the constitutional amendment campaign in the different states are, that there was no weapon used so effective in making votes for the liquor interest as the documents circulated, many of them from divines maintaining that only alcoholic wine was known in Bible times, and that our Saviour manufactured it, and blessed and gave it to His disciples as an emblem of His atoning blood—that the sin was not in its use but in its abuse.

Prown's "History of Bible Wines of the Old and New Testament" by R. H. McDonald, San Francisco, Cal.; price twenty cents. Its facts are so compiled and arranged as to make it very convenient for reference. Read, reason and pray much. We must have a good and strong foundation for our own confidence before we can inspire confidence in others. R. A. ESMOND,

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

The following contributions have been sent in for equal suffrage Scandinavian leaflets in South Dakota in response to appeal in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 30:

Mrs. Helen Gougar, La Fayette, Ind., $20; Mrs. Isabelle Howland, Sherwood, N. Y., $5; Mrs. Carrie Grote, Augusta, Ill., $1; Mrs. Reynolds and mother, Griggsville, Ill., $1; Mrs. S. Page, Ida Grove, Iowa, fifty cents; Mrs. Day, Lecompton, Kan., fifty cents; Mr. Geo. Dories, Lawrence, Kan., $1; Mrs. M. Hitchcock, Iron Mountain, Mich., $1; Muskegon, Mich., 521 Michigan Ave., name lost, fifty cents; Miss H. Elez, South Adams, Mass., $1; Mrs. D. DeWitte, Presque Isle, Me., $1; total, $32.50.

Six tracts in Swedish, Norwegian and Danish are in process of publication, and 70,000 pages have been sent or have been ordered to be sent from publishers, and will probably reach Huron, South Dakota, within two weeks (22,000 pages of these have already gone). Mrs. Barker writes that there is need also of German suffrage tracts, and I shall be glad to furnish these if I can get aid to do so. The Scandinavian leaflets have been written by persons of ability, conversant with the habits of thought of the Swedish mind, and are admirably fitted for the work upon which they are sent. They are, first, "Catechism on Government"; second, "Woman's right to a part in the Government from a Bible standpoint"; third, "Woman Suffrage, or the Home Versus the Saloon." The cost of these will be nearly $100. They are put into the two languages. S. F. GRUBB, Nat. Supt.

Publisher's Department.

NOW READY.

Miss West's, "Manual for Schools of Methods" is now ready; price, twenty-five cents. It is all that could be desired as a teacher's compendium in conducting W. C. T. U. Schools of Methods. It gives the principal lines of work, a list of the helps, their cost, where to obtain them, and above all, the suggestions and directions of Miss West, whose success in this and all lines of teaching has been so marked. It is designed not only to help in conventions and summer schools, but also to teach more effective methods of work in local unions. Every local president ought to have a copy. We will give free a copy to every one who sends us a new subscriber with one dollar, and claims the book as a premium. We make this offer to induce many to thus send for the book, knowing they will find it exceedingly helpful in their local work. It is not a book of theories, but one of well-tried and successful methods. All the superintendents of the different departments have been consulted, and their best plans of work have been adapted to this volume. Have we not said enough to arouse your interest in the book and the desire to have it?

SPECIAL NOTICE.

You have noticed the table given on page 9 of last week's issue from Senator Blair's book? There is a strong impression on the minds of many that because there is so much money invested in the liquor traffic it would be very perilous to prohibit the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. Study this table well and see how little it would affect the pockets of any but the owners of the distilleries and breweries. It takes then but a moment's thought to see that the labor thus employed would soon find plenty of work in supplying the demands of a more sober and better conditioned people. These facts, and hundreds of others as pertinent and true, must be brought to the minds of the people if we are ever to get that flood of public sentiment that is needed to wash away all vestiges of the nefarious traffic. The people are intensely interested in this matter, and we urge upon you that now is the time to push forward the sale of this book as an educational factor whose value is beyond computation. If you do not yourself need to do work of this kind, will you not put some friend who does need to make his or her own living in the way of getting an agency for this book which can go into any home, North or South, as a welcome teacher of truths that cry aloud for a lodgement in the hearts and minds of the American people? Write to us as publishers, or to H. J. Smith & Company, general agents, 341 Dearborn street, for full information. Or, better, send one dollar for an outfit and state the territory you want.

ouldn't it be fine, now, if half our list would get 3 new names each? 40,000 x 3 = 120,000 + 80,000 = 200,000!! Just think of it!

{and please do a good deal more than just think. "Done" has only two more letters than "Do."}

What Claims?

Each of the great religious denominations have publishing houses of their own. Their establishments are familiar to the visitors in any of our large cities. How have they been so successfully built up? Have they gone to the general trade and asked for orders for their publications? Not at all; they have been able to get their own constituency so interested in their wares that their growth has been as natural as it is for a child to grow strong and capable in his own father's house. No constituency is more loyal than the rank and file of the W. C. T. U., and yet a word or two of reminder is not out of place, especially as we have added a great number of new readers to our lists during the past few years. We publish everything adapted to the needs of W. C. T. U. workers, and much more that is adapted to the needs of home-making. For instance, in books we have a number written by Miss Willard: "Nineteen Beautiful Years," "Glimpses of Fifty Years," "Woman and Temperance," and "Woman in the Pulpit." Three books by Miss West: "Childhood: Its Care and Culture," "Stories of the March," and the "Manual for Training Schools." We have two invaluable books for boys and girls in Mrs. Scott's "Boys and Other Boys" and "Girls of To-Day." Two by Mrs. Henry, one by Mary Lowe Dickinson, and many others of which we have not the space to speak. Our leaflets are the best of home reading; our supplies for workers are not equalled We want you to send for a Bulletin of Publications. We also want to correspond with all who desire to make some money for themselves by selling our books and publications. You can do both—build up a great temperance publishing house, and do good temperance work at the same time, reaching hundreds whose attention you would never otherwise get.

Worth Having?

Many young ladies practically own their own time; many housewives can spare an hour or two a day easily if they had anything definite to do that would pay them well for the time used. To all such we would say that you can get from us the agency for such splendid temperance books as "Glimpses," Senator Blair's book, and "The Memories of the Crusade." "How much can you make?" Well, that depends on the amount of enthusiasm you throw into the work, but with a moderate amount of it you can earn from $1.50 to $3.00 per day, and that is worth having, don't you think?

"Boys and Other Boys."

WILMINGTON, CAL.

A mother writes concerning the Christmas gift received by her twelve-year-old son: "The book, 'Boys and Other Boys,' is a revelation to me, in that the topics treated on can be presented in so delicate and helpful a way. I have made it go the rounds. A neighbor borrowed our copy to send to a minister, who is so taken with it that he is about to order a number for the young hopefuls of his charge. I am delighted to know the same house has a similar book for girls."

Scintillations.

"This is my third club for THE UNION SIGNAL this year. It is a great educator. One lady says it is the best paper that comes to her house. Everyone speaks in its praise, and you will never know the good it is doing."

BARABOO, WIS.

A few days ago an old friend of mine, (now a young lawyer) who did not know much about what "the women" were doing until I told him of the W. C. T. U., sent me a check to pay a little bill, saying the balance I might use as I thought best for the benefit of the cause in which I was so much interested (meaning the W. C. T. U.). Now this balance amounts to four dollars which please find inclosed—for which I desire THE UNION SIGNAL sent to the following persons * * * I know of no better way of investing this money, or of any place to put it where it would accomplish more good than to send THE UNION SIGNAL to these people who need it. Please let them know it is paid for,so they will take it from the office.

We who are not fitted to talk for our beloved cause from the public platform, can talk privately at least and our words are not always lost. What encouragement!

A Matter of National Pride.

The American people ought to be proud of the FOUR PERIODICALS ISSUED BY HARPER & BROTHERS.

It is no exaggeration to say that the steady influence exerted upon the life and thought of the nation from the publishing house in Franklin Square is at least equal to that of one of the great universities. From week to week and from month to month people take the excellence of the Harper publications as a matter of course, much as they take fresh air and pure water. The additional impression of quantity and variety, which can be derived in no other way than by an examination of the year's product in bulk, is needed for a just estimate of the intelligence, the vigor, and the good faith which direct this comprehensive enterprise. The 5,000 pages here collected make a library in which there is abundant satisfaction for every sane taste, an unrivalled pictorial history of a somewhat remarkable year, and a liberal education in literature, art, morals, and manners. The only change has been improvement in detail and in quality; and this change is constant and progressive. All four of the Harper periodicals are better now than they ever were before. How much that means everybody knows who has been HARPER bred.—N. Y. Sun, Feb. 10, 1890.

Important Notice.

We get a good many letters asking why THE UNION SIGNAL is so much later getting to them than it used to be, and if we cannot please mail their papers a little earlier. We would be only too glad to accommodate all, but since our list has become so large we are unable with our present facilities to make any greater speed. We have ordered a fast press that will print 6,000 complete papers per hour, and it is to be running in the course of the next eight weeks, and then we hope to send out all papers so that so far as the date of issue is concerned they will be in the homes of our readers before the following Sabbath. Of course this refers only to places within a radius of 1,000 miles.

How a Band of Hope Becomes a Stockholder in W. T. P A.

BEAUFORT, S. C.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. gave an entertainment and made $50 above expenses—which we gave to our children, viz., the Band of Hope; then the $25 sent in July, the children made themselves—the dividend received from our first $50 was given to the children in five and ten cents to increase—some went as high as $1.50 for five cents, so when we called it in we had $19; then the children save postage stamps, for which a lady pays us ten cents per thousand; we had five or six thousand—a little contributed money from the children made up the rest. We regretted very much that we did not get our last $25 in before the first of July so as to draw the six months' interest. We hope in the fall to send in another $25 for another share. MRS. J. A. E.

HELENA, MONT.

We have offered a prize to the union reporting the largest list of subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. Please send me a copy of Miss Willard's "Glimpses" for the prize. I will pay for it. Please notice in THE UNION SIGNAL that Montana offers this. MRS. L. E. HOWEY.

Publisher's Notes.

How to Make Money Easily.

What some actual canvassers say about "Glimpses of Fifty Years":

"Think a deaf and dumb person could sell "G. F. Y." among union women, at any rate."

"I have worked two days, and have seven orders for "Glimpses." I hesitated about accepting an agency, thinking that the work would be disagreeable, but, on the contrary, I enjoy it very much."

"Don't write to me about any other book. I can't canvass for anything but 'Glimpses of Fifty Years.' When I went home for the holidays I thought I would rest until March, but I must get to work again soon, as I enjoy the canvass very much. Can I have the following towns?"

[This young lady has sold 228 books, and now asks for eight towns for her winter's work.]

"My work for January has not been what I hoped it would be. I could not begin until the 20th, and must order to deliver the 30th. Send by freight if there is time, eighteen copies of 'Glimpses,' seven cloth binding, the rest half morocco. I want to work my entire time during the month of February, and if I do must sell at least fifty copies."

"I am getting ready for the canvass for 'Glimpses,' but am so interested in reading the book that I cannot begin until that is done."

LONDON, ENG.

To-day has arrived the very beautiful copy of Miss Willard's life, for which I return my most heartfelt thanks. I am delighted with it. It is certainly most creditable to the W. T. P. A. to turn out such a beautiful volume. I have put it in my drawing-room as one of my show books.

HANNAH W. SMITH.

Some New Arrows.

No dodging possible now, and no one wants to. Timely Talks, No. 27, White-Ribboners vs. Seceders, and Signal Light, No. 23, Partisan vs. Non-Partisan, are two arrows worth fitting to the bow. They should be used in great numbers. The first is a review of the secession of the Iowa delegates, how it came about and what the W. C. T. U. proposes to do about it. It also gives in a short paragraph the answer to that favorite statement ot the non-partisan Republican papers that the W. C. T. U. is losing several hundred thousand members each year. The Signal Light is a terse definition of that much talked-of term, "non-partisanship." It also has some replies made by Miss Willard to queries given her at the Hillsboro Camp-fire, December 23, 1889. These two leaflets ought to go everywhere. Sometimes they will be denied a hearing, but in the majority of cases they will do what an hour's speech could not accomplish, namely, convince the reader of the absolute sincerity of purpose of the W. C. T. U. Timely Talk No. 40, "The Pledge" is a reprint of a capital article from an English leaflet giving cogent reasons why the signing of the pledge should be kept up.

We have also just published for Miss Jennie Smith a pledge to be used in the temperance work among railroad men, and a leaflet giving the form of constitution to be used in the "Railroad Temperance Association." The pledge printed on two sides and in two colors costs $1 per one hundred, postpaid; the Constitution is fifty cents per one hundred. We will refer to these publications again as we get space, but in view of the fact that railway officials welcome the attempt to keep their men sober, we urge our readers to send for samples of this new line of literature.

We are planning to get out a series of leaflets particularly adapted to railroaders, and feel that there is a great field of usefulness for the W. C. T. U., right at their doors, in working to help this class of hard-worked, greatly-tempted men to become total abstainers.

We have now started a new series of leaflets, viz., "The Superintendents' " and this Constitution of the R. T. A. is the first one of the number. We plan to give each department a hearing, in printed supplies that we will keep on hand, as fast as we can get the proper material.

A Straw.

My eighty-year old, partially deaf, Republican father-in-law has been reading 'Glimpses of Fifty Years.' As I came indoors a few days since, my wife was shouting in his ear: "I wish you could only hear her talk;" to which he replied, "That is the beauty of the book—it's just like talking."

E. T. BAKER & Co., Agts. Yost Writing Machine, Chicago. Gentlemen:—We have had the Yost machine in use in our office for several months now, and are free to say we think it superior to any typewriter we have ever examined. Its two great points of advantage over other machines, namely, direct printing from the face of the type and permanent alignment independent of the bar, place it ahead of the other machines. In addition to this we find the machine very light and portable, easily manipulated, and its manifolding and the impression copies can not be excelled. We find the ink pad is not affected by changes in the weather, and makes considerable saving in cost and annoyance over ribbon machines. You are at liberty to refer to us at any time. Very truly, GEO. C. HALL, Manager W. T. P. A.

Baby Barendse,

Three months old when cured by the use of

Steketee's Worm Destroyer.

Read what its mother says:

"The undersigned has a child only three months old. It became sick with pains in its bowels and stomach when scarcely two months old. It cried and whined nearly all the time, and was completely run down in flesh. We gave it everything that we thought would relieve the child, but it grew worse all the time. We made twenty powders from a teaspoonful of Steketee's Worm Destroyer, gave it one powder three times daily. To our astonishment it was relieved of thousands of worms. We have given the child but twenty powders. It is entirely cured. I shall always recommend Steketee's Worm Destroyer. MRS. B. BARENDSE,

Signal Notes.

I BELIEVE that the great vices in your large cities will never be conquered until the ballot is put in the hands of women.—Bishop Simpson.

A TOTAL abstinence society has been started in the district of Om, in Eastern Siberia, and notwithstanding the degraded character of the population, is already doing great good.

MORE than eight hundred native Africans have enrolled as Good Templar members of "Pioneer Lodge No. 1," at Freetown, Sierra Leone, during the fourteen years which have passed since it was formed by sailors of H. M. Gunboat Active.

AN interesting feature of the British Women's Temperance Journal is its lists of temperance hotels and refreshment houses, and the names of grocers who do not sell intoxicating drinks.

THE Emperor William calls an international labor convention to discuss and provide for the improvement of the condition of the laborer.

THE United Working Men's Temperance League has, in four years, pledged upwards of four thousand persons.

MR. JOHN HORNIMAN, Croydon, England, has given $125,000 to build and endow a Sea-side Convalescent Home for children. A committee of the Society of Friends will manage it.

THE Virginia Legislature, on the 4th instant, refused, by a decided vote, to re-establish the whipping-post in the state.

THE amount of liquor sent into Africa, in five years, from Boston alone, was 3,500,000 gallons. The amount of liquor registered on the vessels which stopped at Maderia, en route to Africa in one week is as follows: 960,000 cases of whisky; 24,000 butts of rum; 30,000 cases of brandy; 28,000 cases of Irish whisky; 800,000 demijohns of rum; 36,000 barrels of rum; 30,000 cases old tom; 15,000 barrels of absinthe; 40,000 cases of vermouth.

AN English total abstinence society, in connection with the Heaton Hall work, is called "The Girls' Guild of Good Life"; it has over one thousand girls as members. It is referred to by the Hon. Maude Stanley, in her book, "Clubs for Working Girls." No one can be admitted without giving up drink entirely, and if the pledge is broken membership is forfeited.

THE territory of Wyoming has one law on its statute books that has no counterpart in any state, and that is the law securing equal pay for equal work to women and men as school-teachers.

WORDS of the highest commendation come from Omaha and Beatrice, Neb., regarding the work of the Rev. L. G. Jordan, the eloquent colored temperance orator, who will speak at Quincy, Ill., March 1-4, and will fill other appointments in the state, if addressed at Decatur, Ill.

THE Burlington, Vt., Free Press, says: "The newspapers of the state are facing the music on the temperance question in a manner that is very encouraging to the friends of the present law. . . . They do not argue that the present law is perfect, or that it has always been perfectly enforced, but they are united in the belief that the prohibitory law of Vermont is the most effective method of restricting the drink-traffic ever tried in this state, and they are ready to defend that belief and to defend the law."

THE Christian Inquirer says that the negro has gained seventy-five per cent in property during the last decade, while the average gain has been only fifty per cent.

THE celebrated Sir William Gull, late physician to the Queen, whose loss all temperance people mourn, gave the following evidence before the House of Lords: "Alcohol interferes with the conveying of the food into the system, and the public ought to know that of all the diluents or solvents for the nutritious parts of food there is nothing like water. It carries into the system the nutriment in its purest form. I hardly know of any more potent cause of disease than alcohol; it causes diseased liver, which disorders the blood, causing diseased kidneys, heart, and nervous system, besides being a frequent source of crime of all kinds. A very large number of persons are dying day by day, poisoned by stimulants without its being known. Great injury is done to health by the use of alcohol in its various combinations (as wine, brandy, gin, rum, whisky, or beer), even in so-called moderate quantities."

NOTICES.

THE regular quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Woman's Temperance Publication Association will be held at the central office, 161 La Salle street, Chicago, Ill., Wednesday, March 12, 1890, commencing at ten o'clock, A. M. MARY ALLEN WEST, Sec.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Prohibition prevailed in Van Buren county, Michigan, under the local option act, by a majority of 1,200.

Little Abraham Lincoln, whose death was reported last week, is still living, but with small hopes of his recovery.

The last spike was placed in the new steel bridge spanning the Mississippi river opposite St. Louis at six o'clock on February 28.

Fierce snow storms were reported the 2nd inst. in New York, Boston, and the Atlantic coast, interfering seriously with traffic and budding fruit trees.

The Russian government has ordered the great railway line across Siberia to be begun in May. When completed, the tour of the world can be made in fifty days.

Lord Randolph Churchill's Liquor bill hits hard at the clubs and puts strict limitations upon the liberty they have hitherto enjoyed in the sale of alcoholic beverages. It does not include the compensation scheme, that being a measure which he holds the government should initiate.

A monster petition of the Ballot Reform League of New York City in favor of the passage of the Saxton Secret-Ballot Bill, is soon to be presented to the Solons at Albany. It is the largest petition ever procured in New York, and contains the signatures of more than 40,000 legal voters enrolled in a huge book of 6,000 pages, over two feet long, and weighing 1,000 pounds.

MRS. STONE, the wife of the new Governor of Mississippi, is a stanch W. C. T. U. woman, wears her ribbon always, and will not have wine at her entertainments.

MRS. JULIA WARD HOWE was recently the guest in honor of whom an elegant lunch party convened in one of the princely homes of Chicago's aristocratic "North Side." Twenty social leaders were present, each of whom vied with the other in tokens of esteem to the distinguished woman who formed the center of the group. Some one asked the question, "Who that is here does not believe in equal suffrage?" and all but one gave hearty assent to the great movement, and that one said "she was considering." "Ten years ago not one of these ladies would have avowed this belief, and not one would have invited me to lunch," said the gracious guest, and she spoke truly, but time and thought and God's grace wonderfully "make the wheels go 'round."

IN a talk about the unfair treatment accorded by the employers of working women and girls in England, and especially in London, in the matter of long hours and starvation wages, Cardinal Manning says the time has come for a strenuous movement to secure justice to this class of labor. He believes the day is not far off when public sentiment will compel employers to treat female workers decently, and secure the enactment of laws enforcing this under heavy penalty. The Cardinal pays a compliment to our country thus: "America, which loves to call itself 'the land of the free,' is renowned for its gallantry and for its kindness to women, so let us hope that the great new world will lead the crusade against every one who overworks, underpays, or ill-treats in any way the prototypes of his own mother and sisters."

SENATOR DAWES, of Massachusetts, has presented over two hundred and forty petitions asking Congress to stop the traffic in intoxicants between the United States and Africa. The petitions state that more than 800,000 gallons are exported annually to African ports, and prays that under the section of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate commerce with foreign countries, it may be stopped. Even stronger is the appeal of the Congo chief, who, having learned to read and write, has just sent a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in which this sentence occurs: "Great and good chief of the tribe of Christ, the humblest of your servants kisses the hem of your garment, and begs you to send his fellow servants more gospel and less rum." Can a Christian country fail to heed an appeal so full of pathos, and so freighted with human destiny?

THE action of President Harrison in pardoning private Wild, is sustained by the public press, without regard to party. In the opinion of the Minneapolis Tribune (Rep.), "Perfect respect for a soldier's manhood is not incompatible with perfect discipline. A man's a man, though a common soldier." The New York World says: "The blue uniform of the United States should not be made the livery of slaves." If this official rebuke is heeded by officers of high and low rank, young Wild will not have been disgraced, but honored by his sentence to the stone quarry. The autocratic system which has hitherto ruled army life, is enough of itself to account for the proverbial degradation of the soldier. It is alike debasing to superior and subordinate. Let military Czarism go back to its place in the past, when "infantry were not men, but food for powder." There is not room for it in the American army.

WALTER THOMAS MILLS, editor of The Statesman, has challenged Hon. Albert Griffin to one hundred debates on the questions in dispute between temperance Republicans and party Prohibitionists. The challenge has been accepted and the debates will begin on the first of April and continue for one hundred consecutive dates. They will commence in New England and will travel across the continent and back again, visiting the leading cities and towns throughout the country. Mr. Mills has not a superior as a student of politics or as a keen and ready debater. Mr. Griffin is chairman of the National Committee of the Anti-Saloons Republicans and is the most representative temperance Republican in America. These debates cannot fail to create the liveliest interest in the questions discussed; and they will, moreover, put before the country the merits of the partisan and the non-partisan controversy in a way which is only possible in a courteous and manly, yet face to face encounter.

IN drafting the bill for territorial government in Oklahoma, the House Committee recommended making the laws of Nebraska applicable to the new territory. Provision is made, however, for substituting the laws of another state wherever those of Nebraska are incompatible with its interests. Why pass by prohibitory Kansas to find a suitable code? Oklahoma has not known the curse of a legalized liquor traffic, and need not know it. In the interest of the homes just planted there let the president of each state W. C. T U. write officially to every Senator and Representative from their respective states, praying that the code of Kansas be given to this new territory, instead of that of Nebraska, enslaved by the liquor power, that it may have the proud distinction of being "free-born," and not have to pay a high price to obtain this freedom. For the sake of Kansas, also, which now has to contend with the liquor power on the east and west and north, but not on the south, let this be done. Do not delay. The bill is pending, and immediate action is imperative.

SO LOADED is the daily press with stories of girl-shooting and wife-shooting by some drinking youth or husband pretending love of her whom he shoots, then shooting himself, that one daily heads its morning report of this appalling crime of the saloon—"The Usual Thing."

The press teems twice a day with this writing of a bloody hand upon the four walls of this land, yet laughs on and mocks our tireless calamity by crying, "Continue to license the cause! Prohibition's a humbug!" The air is pestilential with marital scandals, bigamies, elopements, divorcements, that are sewers of unhappiness and infidelity, and liquor always at least a factor in the catalogue of shame; yet politics continues debauched by politicians who plead and push for personal liberty to this civilized deformity, who demand license forever unto the wicked cause that so puts asunder the parents and children God hath joined together. Financial defaults and bankruptcies whose rootlets coiled round the wine-glass form cactus beds of mistrust and timidity to hamper business and punish innocence in every city; yet scarce a banker or prince of trade dares announce the cause and demand its removal. Politics so lays hand on the national bank issue, and so ties trade to tariff that the lions of money and commerce have their mouths shut, and they are as meek, and as useless, as sheep in the of reform. Our hope is in God, and in Mr. Lincoln's philosophy, that "you can't fool all the people all the time.

THE eighth annual meeting of the National Law and Order League, held last week at Toronto, Canada, was a remarkable gathering in many particulars. The League became an international organization by the admission of Canadian Leagues, and by a tacit understanding that the European invitations to extend the organization to that Continent would be accepted. This extension of territory is in direct line with the example of the W. C. T. U. work, and only illustrates again the truth that our humanity is one, and that whatever efforts are to be made for its elevation are naturally world-wide. Another matter of interest is that this work of law enforcement seems to supply a common meeting ground for sincere temperance workers of all varieties of opinion; for whatever the theory of the law, no one can question the duty of obedience. Mrs. J. B. Richardson, of Trenton, N. J., and Mrs. C. W. Wyman, of Brattleboro, Vt., were among the white-ribbon delegates. The W. C T. U. was repeatedly referred to in the most complimentary manner, and the Minister of Education, Mr. G. W. Ross, in an address of welcome at the Arlington House banquet, was greeted with prolonged applause when he mentioned woman's municipal suffrage as an indication of Canada's superior democracy. The spirit of political independence which came to the front repeatedly was an encouraging sign. Every declaration of intention to punish recreant officials at the ballot box was received with demonstrations of the heartiest indorsement.

"IN all the history of the Southern boom no sales in prospective towns have approached within twenty per cent of the prices paid at Harriman," says the correspondent of a great daily never suspected of having any "stock in prohibition." The East Tennessee Land Company, of which Gen. Clinton B. Fisk is president, the stockholders being almost exclusively Prohibitionists, bought up a tract of 300,000 acres of mineral and agricultural lands at Emory Gap in the Cumberland Mountains, for the purpose of founding a great temperance colony. The deeds forever forbid the sale of intoxicants upon the premises. Prohibition is supposed in some circles to be an incubus upon prosperity, but speculators were not intimidated, as shown by numerous shanties, each bearing the sign of real estate office. The tendency to speculate was so great that the directors determined to put but four hundred lots on the market, and in the auction sale to keep them down to reasonable figures, as it was believed too high prices would damage the future of the town. The first lot was sold Wednesday at seventy dollars a front foot; two hundred and twenty-three lots were disposed of at the rate of two a minute. The sale was then postponed until the next morning, finally closing February 28. The highest price paid was $275 a front foot. This land was purchased not many months ago at five dollars an acre. Four thousand people were on the grounds representing twenty different states. The company has $2,000,000 of its $3,000,000 capital subscribed; $1,000,000 has been appropriated for street improvements in Harriman, the new city. As surveyed it has 2,300 lots, 500 of which were sold last week for the aggregate sum of $650,000.

A SONG FOR THE TOILERS.

BY A. J WATERHOUSE.

A song for the earth-born children
Who labor and strive and toil,
Whose hands at the loom grow weary,
Who wet with their tears the soil;
They carry the burden of living,
And their lives are a prayer for bread,
And oft, to their pleading and toiling,
Man gives them a stone instead.

A song for the earth-born children
Who toil with a hope forlorn,
Which their wealthier, happier brother
Denies in his might and scorn;
They are the toilers and delvers,
By them are the nations fed,
And their prayer is the old petition,
The desolate cry for bread.

Bread for the earth-born children!
Bread of a better kind—
For they poorly feed the people
Who starve the soul and mind;
That the rich may live in pleasure
They toil through the weary day,
With bodies and minds neglected,
Few pence and a curse for pay.

A song for the earth-born children!
Let not your hearts despair,
For, hidden in mist of doubting,
A God has heard your prayer.
He has seen your weary travail,
Has heard your cry of woe,
The oppressor shall be humbled,
The evil one laid low.

A song for the earth-born children!
Though ye wearily strive and toil,
Blessing shall come from doubting,
And peace from your sad turmoil.
No more shall ye feed the sluggard
While your starving children cry!
The day of hope is breaking,
And the night is passing by.

LITTLE BEE AND THE SPECTACLES.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

If I venture upon the sacred ground of Crusade incidents, I must feel that I am sitting in my own corner, surrounded by sympathizing friends of the "White-Ribbon Army," who will allow me all the privileges of a free-and-easy talk, for should the idea of a literary effort take possession of me, all inspiration would vanish!

The history of the "Dunn Trial," as it is called, or the "Suit of Dunn, the druggist, against the Crusaders," would make a small volume of itself, but as little Bee's part is called for, I will briefly (for the present) touch upon that, believing, as I do, that there is much of our Crusade theology contained in the story of the "Dog and the Spectacles."

This famous druggist, Mr. Wm. H. H. Dunn, was a genial, pleasant gentleman (to his friends), and his wife was a well-mannered, sensible lady, well connected and much esteemed, but the trouble was, the Crusaders could make no difference between intoxication produced by this "Palace Drug Store" liquor, and that caused by the alcoholic drinks sold by Joseph Lance, of the "Lava Bed." Therefore persistent visitation, prayer, song and persuasion being the chosen methods in one case, must needs be applied in the other. And while Joe Lance, pursued by the law, yielded to the arguments and prayers of the Crusaders, and engaged in a less destructive business, Mr. Dunn, pressed up—and sustained by capital, and high toned legal advice—gave to Hillsboro's best mothers, wives, and daughters the persecution of the law's iron hand.

The eventful morning at length arrived when "the ladies" were required to take their seats in the court-room. Renowned legal talent had been engaged on both sides, and everything was in readiness for the battle. There was much curiosity as to the conduct of the Crusaders, but the slow, solemn peal of the old church bell at eight o'clock, satisfied all that they had not forgotten their "morning prayer-meeting." Every woman was at her post promptly on that morning, and our bright, brave young ladies who were so true and useful during those Crusade days of self-denial and cross-bearing, were on hand in full force, and never did their sweet, clear voices ring out with such pathos as on that occasion, for they remembered (as tears stood in their bright eyes) why they so earnestly desired the removal of the "accursed cup" from the pathway of some dear as life to them!

Precious promises from God's own Word were read by the leader. "My faith looks up to Thee" was sung with the spirit and the understanding, then a few brief, earnest prayers were offered, just to the point, notably Mrs. Foraker's, which made a lasting impression upon all hearts; she appealed to the Lord, "in His righteousness to confuse and confound the lawyers who were engaged in prosecuting the women of Hillsboro (who were His believing children) for trying to remove the stumbling blocks out of the way of the weak, and to establish His righteous laws for the protection of the sons and daughters of our community."

After joining with "one heart and one mind" in the amen to that prayer, the doxology was sung most feelingly; then, two and two, the line of march was taken up, with modest mien but brave hearts, for the court of justice.

The "Crusaders" were conducted to the seats assigned them, and after quietly taking in the situation, the first thing that attracted attention were the heaps of law books profusely marked, that were piled upon the table by which sat Judge Safford (Sr. attorney for Dunn). Naturally, we "poor, weak women" felt Can there be so much against us in those books of doom? But we cried still more earnestly (in our hearts), "O Lord, undertake for us!"

For some time after we took our seats, the Judge seemed very much absorbed examining these books and marking new points of law; finally he took his glasses off, placed them in a bright morocco case, laid them down on the table (unfortunately, too near the edge), and gracefully turning himself, so as to give attention to the speaker, who was very earnestly "opening the case," lost sight of his spectacles. Quick as thought, that busy little dog "Bee" danced up on his hind legs to the table, where he spied the bright spectacle case, and taking the tip end between his little white teeth, darted off under tables and seats to—nobody knew where.

Very soon there was occasion for some of those marked portions of "legal lore," and the spectacles were in demand, but search was made in vain; the "confusion" that followed was "confounding." I was too much embarrassed by the situation to "rise and explain,"—hence remembering that the time had arrived for me to meet an expected guest in my home, I quietly withdrew, but as I was passing out, Mrs. Foraker drew me down to her, and with her expressive face all aglow, said, "I do believe I prayed a little too hard, for I never saw such confusion. I really feel sorry that the Judge lost his glasses!" The dear old lady did not know of Bee's naughtiness, for she was seated pretty far back upon a low chair, but she did know that she had honestly, and in faith, prayed that "confusion might come into the camp of the enemy," and she accepted the answer from her faithful Lord. As did the woman of faith, who prayed to her "Heavenly Father" for bread, when far from human help, she found herself shut up in her little cabin, surrounded by a snow-drift. During the night some strong hunters were breaking their way through the snow for royal fun, and chanced to hear the voice of this old saint in prayer. So they quietly approached her little window and listened. As she asked the Lord to send her food, they said one to the other, "Now we will have some fun; let us tumble a loaf of bread down the little chimney, and see if she will think God sent it." So they did, and the child of faith took it up from the floor, pressed it to her breast, and exclaimed, "Bless the Lord, O my soul!" The rowdies could hold no longer, but called out from the window, "Are you such a simpleton as to think God sent you that bread? Why, we rolled it down your chimney." She turned complacently towards the little window, and smilingly said, "Yes, yes, the Lord sent it, if the devil did bring it."

And I think the contagion of Mrs. Foraker's faith inspired the Crusaders all to realize that the Lord sent the "confusion" into the camp, even if the innocent little dog did bring it.

We cannot leave this story without awarding to Mr. Dunn the honor due to "an honest confession." He freely, and we believe sincerely, confessed his profound regrets over the whole affair of the suit against the "temperance ladies," and said to me, personally, that he entertained no feeling except regret that he could not have acquiesced in the reasonable request first made by the Crusaders—and thus placed their store on a platform with the other drug establishment of the town.

As to Judge Safford, he was certainly in a most embarrassing position—a resident of our neighboring city Chillicothe—he had enjoyed the hospitality of families of our town, represented by the Crusaders, whom he found himself antagonizing legally—hence his professional crown was not without thorns.

In the language of one of "nature's noblemen" who died very suddenly in our midst a few days since—let us all be able to say, living or dying, "I have no grudge against any one."

In connection with the singing and prayer services of the Crusaders in front of the "Palace Drug Store" of Mr. Dunn, of Hillsboro, I have just heard a fact related by a most reliable gentleman friend, which most wonderfully confirms the fact that while our Crusade gospel was "unto the Jews a stumbling block and unto the Greeks foolishness," it was "unto them which are called, the power of God and the wisdom of God." One day a farmer came into town on business, who had been from his boyhood in the habit of "taking a dram," and, as the years rolled by, this fearful habit increased, until, at the time referred to, he seldom came to town and left sober. In strolling along the street, his attention was arrested by the singing of the ladies, and he stopped on the corner a few doors above the group. After the familiar hymn was finished, and the women kneeled in prayer, he bared his head, folded his arms, and reverently listened. When they rose from their knees, and commenced singing again, he rushed across the street, and, meeting my informant, said, with a hearty grip of the hand, "I have taken my last drink of liquor, I never felt before what a wrong the cursed habit was to woman!" And he has kept that vow sacredly to this day. He is now nearly eighty years old, comes to town well, and returns home sober—but never fails to bless the Crusaders!

THE NATIONAL DIVORCE REFORM LEAGUE.

BY SAMUEL W. DIKE.

Like many other societies of its kind, the League, which was organized early in 1881, has a scope and aims broader than its title implies. Though naturally taking its name from interest in the most conspicuous of several evils intimately connected with each other, its object, as set forth in its constitution and shown by its work, is "to promote an improvement in public sentiment and legislation on the institution of the family, especially as affected by existing evils relating to "marriage and divorce."

These evils relate to the family in itself and to its office in society. The family in itself is in peril at four leading points: First, from the careless way in which law and social opinion allow the family to come into being through hasty and unwise marriage. Secondly, its physical basis is corrupted by unchastity, the most fundamental and far-reaching of human vices. Thirdly, the family in some sections of the country, and among some classes of people, partially fails of one of its great objects through immoral and even criminal unfruitfulness and in its weak home nurture. And fourthly, the family is broken up violently and carelessly by divorce, and by kindred illegal dissolutions, on the direct or implied plea that remedies are useless, and that the best relief in their case is not remedy at all, but the destruction of diseased conjugal union.

Because divorce strikes at the vital bond of the family, and marriage forms this bond, these two subjects naturally first came to the front, though we had from the very day of the formation of the League given the others their place. Since that time, public attention in England and the United States has been directed effectively to evils of the second class, and the White Cross and other efforts to promote social purity have come into prominence.

The evils relating to the office of the family in our social order grow out of defective development of the family as a social force. An unused or misused institution is scarcely less dangerous than a diseased institution. The failure to give woman or the family their full place in social action is a source of weakness to either, in time amounting to positive social disease.

Such is the range of evils our League touches, and its work has aimed at corresponding breadth, taking four directions: investigation, legislation, education, and practical work for the family. Moved by Christian motives, inspired, we trust, of God, we have made much use of scientific and practical methods, advancing as fast as means would permit.

Investigation has laid the foundation for induction from the fullest attainable facts, and has sought to interpret these facts in the light of historical and comparative study. We rejoice in the success which this fall crowned our effort of six years of direct pursuit of the object, through the publication of the report of the Commissioner of Labor on marriage and divorce in the United States and Europe in a large volume of nearly 1,100 pages. This now gives to Americans and the world an official and remarkably complete presentation of the laws of marriage and divorce in the United States and Europe, together with invaluable statistics covering a period of twenty years. This work puts the reform on a solid basis of official information. We can now correct our theories and give new force to our convictions. I hope that a similar long-desired and greatly-needed work may be done for the cause of temperance.

We now learn that the evils of divorce have reached such proportions that 25,535 families, involving directly at least 20,000 children, have been broken up in a single year in the United States by legal divorce, and we know that back of these are tens of thousands more which are more or less corrupt and unhappy. The report shows that this movement of divorce increases more than twice as fast as the population, and that there is scarcely a state or country here or in Europe that does not share in it. It shows that the period that elapses between marriage and divorce, which for two decades has averaged over nine years, is increasing. It points to intemperance as a "direct or indirect cause," in at least one-fifth of the divorces. It also brings out the fact that four-fifths of our divorces have been granted to parties who had been divorced in the very states where they were married, showing that the many divorces encouraged by our conflicting laws are but a small fraction of the tens of thousands which are distributed over almost every county and township in the country. I have persistently maintained that this must be so, and have tried to get the public mind, while not overlooking the need of uniformity, to turn its best thought to the larger and inclusive problem of the almost universal presence of divorce among our home-staying people, to which the efforts of religion and reform must be chiefly directed for the best results.

While waiting for this investigation, we have cautiously pressed legislative reform, aiming at the more obvious and most readily acknowledged abuses, and to secure such legislation as we could keep on the statute books. Nearly a score of measures for the improvement of marriage and divorce laws have been made, and in several states. And the only states in which divorces have become less are those which have adopted this better legislation. Though much has been done, largely through the good work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to raise the age of consent, a great deal remains to be done here, and in the whole field of family law, while investigation must be pushed much farther also.

Educational work has been held to be of the utmost importance. The distinctive literature of the family on almost all the various subjects has been extremely meagre. This is particularly true of that which by its scientific correctness and attractive style can be most useful in our times. A half-dozen years ago one could not find a book with the simple title, "The Family," or scarcely one devoted to this subject exclusively in our language. Popular tracts such as are needed have been, and are still, very scarce. Six years ago, so far as I can learn, not a course of lectures had been given upon the family in any of our higher institutions, though a knowledge of it is almost the key to political and economic science. Since then lectures and courses of lectures have been given in many of the universities, colleges, theological seminaries and law schools of the country, especially in the East, and a number who heard the earlier lectures are now themselves giving courses as professors or presidents of colleges. The study of the subjects of the family has begun in earnest, and most useful results have followed. The subjects are now among the leading topics of our reviews and periodical literature, and the frequent theme of sermons and discussions.

The home department of the Sunday-school is a good example of successful use of the home in extending religious instruction beyond the reach of public assemblies, and its principle has been proposed as an aid to the public school. A well-known member of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Maria Upham Drake, who is also a member of the League, has done a remarkable work in Boston and vicinity by her courses of lectures on the family and its immediate themes. These have largely been given through local W. C. T. Unions in crowded houses, and have invariably touched a deeply responsive chord in their direct presentation of the family itself, of the home, and its needs and possibilities. The impressions these lectures, and other efforts of a similar character, have made among thoughtful women, show us that there is an awakening sense of the value of the home itself in its ability to help counteract the manifold evils that assault it, and in doing the positive work of society.

The conviction, I think, is steadily growing, that since social life and the study of its development are creating the great science of sociology, and human interests are more and more closely inter-related, that all our reforms must move on in increasing recognition of these facts, and of their own inter-relations. Religion, science, economics and law are all the servants of humanity. No good cause can be at its best without them all. No true reform now stands by itself. The remedy of every evil demands the best service of them all. The expansion of temperance, and the wide range of our own League, show this inter-relation of evils and the inclusiveness of reform. Evils act and re-act upon each other. The saloon poisons and destroys the home. The corruption or weakness of the home lends to the attractions of the saloon. Just so far as the family is fundamental and universal in social institutions, just so far does it deserve direct and adequate attention in the work of reform.

A STUDY OF THE POSITION OF PETER AND PAUL.

BY W. HOWATT GARDNER.

I.

In treating the above subject, the writer is aware that he is entering upon a much disputed question, which, considered in all its phases, would fill a volume. Though very able articles have already been written, yet in accordance with new demands, the truths involved in the subject must necessarily be reiterated.

In a previous article, "A Study in Genesis," the writer endeavored to set forth the truth there held regarding the unity and equality of the sexes at creation; the distinction between the ideal and actual states: the ideal, that which is seen, and toward which we are tending; the actual is that which is. The ideal state, though lost through the fall, is to be recovered through redemption. The ideal is the equality of man and woman; the actual is the subjection of women, and assumption of men. God gave to each equal soul power, and held each equally responsible to himself; He placed for each the same standard of requirement; both in soul power are in likeness to God, His images embodying in their personality the same principles of moral being, hence, not brute strength, but soul power argues capacity for dominion and the exercise and enjoyment of all privileges given by the same Creator and Father to humanity—His offspring. Therefore, even in accordance with a simple geometrical proposition that "things equal to the same thing are equal to each other," the relations of man and woman to God being equal, and in those relations fulfilling the same requirements, man and woman are equal to each other.

In his sermon before the last annual W. C. T. U. Convention, Dean Aifred A. Wright said, "Together Adam and Eve, in rights co-equal, co-extensive, co-terminous, are to have dominion over all the earth, over its products, its society, its peace. If there is headship in Adam over Eve there is not the faintest shadow of it cast on the page of Holy writ in the gorgeous light of that primeval day."

The statements of Peter and Paul, however, seem to oppose the equality of man and woman, and to teach the subordination of woman in family and church. Regarding these statements, some maintain a rigid literal interpretation, and consider them as inflexible and of universal application. Others regard them as applicable only to those to whom they were written as a specific injunction growing out of a prevailing necessity. It is absurd to suppose that woman for all time is to be held in subjection to man; this is despotism, and is contrary to the teaching of Christ, who declared that He had been sent "to preach deliverance to the captives, to set at liberty them that are bruised," and in whom "there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male and female; for ye all are one man in Christ Jesus."

The more fully the spirit of Christ takes possession of of humanity, the less will men enforce obedience to the literal interpretation of single and isolated passages. We cannot hold Christianity as strictly preceptive; it is ideal, not a code; it consists in certain ideas, which result in a certain spirit, the ideas being ideas of God, as all great ideas must be, and the spirit being a spirit of love and life at once; not a fixed rule, but a living principle. All that is preceptive, just as all that is dogmatic, or ceremonial, is external, subordinate, temporary, conditioned by the ideas, and only a necessary form.

To take that which is subordinate and temporary and make it a cardinal principle of universal application is both unwise and harmful. History gives abundant evidence of the mistakes of the church on this point. The spirit of the church in the past has been dictatorial. It formed its opinions, or dogmas, and tested every truth by them. If from scientific study, or the intuitions and experiences of humanity, any hidden truth were revealed, the Church applied her already preconceived dogmas, and if it did not accord, it was branded as heresy. Galileo was summoned before the inquisition charged with heretical teaching because he maintained that the earth has a diurnal motion and the sun is stable and the center of our solar system. He was made to recant, and promise not to teach, or defend such doctrine, but as he arose, he muttered, "It does move, for all of that." Whatever may be the teaching of some divines, we say, "Woman is man's equal, for all of that."

When the geologists first began to read the rocks and to tell us the truths God had there written, the pulpits at once opened fire and claimed that such teaching was contrary to Genesis, one preacher hinting that God had prepared an exceedingly warm place, especially for geologists. The abolitionists began their crusade against slavery with the Bible seemingly against them. Ministers elaborately expounded from the Word that slavery was a divine institution, just as it is held by some to-day that the subordination of woman is a divine institution.

Let us be thankful, however, that the broadest minded men and women hold that the Bible is to be interpreted according to its spirit which "giveth life," and not the letter which killeth. "The old dogma of verbal dictation," says Farrar, "has become too baseless an absurdity for any well instructed and unbiased intelligence to maintain." Revelation is influenced by the "limitations of human language and disabilities of human infirmity." It is influenced, more or less, by the characteristics and opinions of its writers; it is written in accordance with the social development of humanity, but yet embracing grand and eternal truths and principles that are universally applicable, while here and there are precepts which have to do with special occasions. Every age has its own development, and while it is in harmony with these all-comprehensive principles, it brings to light its own special precepts in adjustment to its need.

Therefore it is necessary to study the Word both in the light of its own times and our own time. Whatever tests we bring to bear upon the Bible cannot harm it; God's truth will stand through the ages; it will vindicate itself; but it is found in those principles that underlie nature, our instincts and reason, as well as in Revelation. When there is a coördination of truth from these various sources, then we have arrived at that which is true and right. Hence, it is a great dishonor to God to suppose that His revelations are thrown upon our mercy, and that we must handle them with fearful tenderness, and that they require our weak, human support.

It is unwise to hold that certain passages of Peter and Paul which had a temporary and local application are true for all time, especially so when in our own age it is being manifested that woman is well able to compete with man in all departments which call for the exercise of intellectual and moral powers; it is inconsistent with the enlightened reason of our day, and the demonstration of the equality of woman; there is not the coördination referred to above.

In Christ's time there were those who were exceedingly concerned about the law, the precepts given by Moses; they could not find an agreement between them and the teaching of Christ, which seemed so very different. The Pharisees were very literal readers, and sought to obey as nearly as possible the injunctions of the law. The scribes arranged very scrupulously and accommodatingly the contents of the law as to every detail, much as ecclesiastics assign the details of woman's sphere in the church. They aimed to know the outward precept rather than the inward spirit. Even so detailed questions were considered as whether it would be more lawful to bring the cattle to the water or water to the cattle on the Sabbath day. The tailor could not go away the day before the Sabbath with his needle in his pocket, lest he be found carrying it about on that day. Christ said many things which to the mind of the Pharisees were a strict violation of the letter of the law. One day they came to Jesus and asked, "Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife?" Jesus asked, "What did Moses command you?" They replied, "Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away." Jesus said, "Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it was not so. But from the beginning of the creation God made them, male and female." Here was a fine opportunity, if He chose, for Jesus to expatiate upon the headship of man, and the subordination of woman, but instead of doing so, he carries along the fact of equality, and enforces their unity in the family, for, said He, "They twain shall be one flesh," or, one human kind.

If man and wife are one in the family, which is the basis of the state and civilization, the unity and equality in the family must be manifest in the state and the social structure. It is a mistake to suppose that Christ ever said, "They twain shall be one, and that one the man." Such statement is of the devil, not from Christ, who, we find, is in accord with the design of the creative act which gives to the male and female unity of action, privilege and government. As the Pharisees were puzzled concerning the precepts of the law, so some to-day are in a similar position in regard to those passages of Peter and Paul which have no application to the women of to-day. Could we now ask Christ why Paul wrote those injunctions concerning the Corinthian and Ephesian women of His day, is it not probable that He would say, "Because of the hardness of your hearts"? "But from the beginning it was not so."

"The Gospel of John," says Dr. W. R. Harper, the eminent Bible scholar, "is the greatest book ever written." Dr. Schaff calls it "the most important literary work ever composed by man; the gospel of gospels; a marvel even in the marvelous Book of books." Origen terms it "the main gospel." Chrysostom says, "It is a voice of thunder reverberating through the whole earth." Jerome says, "John excels in these depths of divine mysteries." Calvin says it is "the key that opens the way to a right understanding of the other three gospels." Earnesti calls it "the heart of Jesus;" Lange, "the diamond among gospels," and Herder says it was "written by the hand of an angel." It is indeed the Holy of Holies in the beautiful temple of Revelation.—The Evangelical.

SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' MEETING AND OTHER METROPOLITAN INTERESTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—After a busy three days' session in New York City spent in the discussion of educational problems, the semi-annual convention of Public School Superintendents, a branch of the National Education Association, adjourned February 20, to meet at St. Paul next July. Resolutions were adopted approving the plans of the government for the education of Indian children, as outlined by Commissioner Morgan; recommending that a suitable, separate building be provided for an educational exhibit for the World's Fair; commending the recent movement in certain sections of the country to place an American flag on every school-house; and setting forth the great need, especially in the South, of National aid to education, as provided in the Blair Bill before the United States Senate.

In an address emphasizing the importance of government in schools, Mr. Wm. E. Sheldon, of Boston, recommended the separation of unruly pupils under teachers known to be good disciplinarians, as well that the well-behaved might not be contaminated, as that discipline might be made a special feature in the education of those especially needing it. He said this experiment had been tried in one city for ten years, and that the separated, unruly pupils now numbered only two hundred out of a total school enrollment of 35,000.

The paper of Prof. J. A. B. Lovett, state superintendent of Alabama, produced a marked impression upon the convention. He spoke on negro education in the South, and declared that while some opposition to negro education exists, it is generally of that character which does not manifest itself in aggressive demonstrations. That the progressive, intelligent, and patriotic white population of the South are favorable to negro education is seen in the fact that the colored youth share equally with the whites in the state appropriations of school funds, and this, too, although the colored people of the South contribute a very diminutive per cent to the fund.

Professor Lovett said the negroes were making commendable headway where they had good schools, but that the great majority of their schools were open only sixty days in the year, and then under incompetent teachers. "The colored people in the South," said he in conclusion, "present a strong plea for national aid to education. With their rapidly-increasing population there is a proportionate increase of illiteracy, and the meagre educational advantages they now have can never bring the race into intelligent harmony with the nature and genius of our free institutions. If an economic administration of the government be the watchword of the hour, our patriotic statesmen should remember that no economic measure is comparable to the education of the masses of the people to the level of modern civilization.

Unfortunately, an economic administration of the government is not the watchword of the hour, and Senator Blair's Educational Bill, recommended by Professor Lovett and by the convention as the best solution of the Southern problem, stands less chance than ever of becoming a law, since the huge pension appropriations of more than $99,000,000, the Naval Bill, and other liberal proposals, bid fair, if they pass Congress, to rid us entire of the troublesome treasury surplus, if they do not leave a deficit in the treasury.

The new High License Bill introduced in the New York Legislature is the work of a joint committee, consisting of Bishop Doane, of the Church Temperance Society; Dr. Howard Crosby, of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, and Dorman B. Eaton, of the New York Citizens' High License Committee. It provides elective boards of salaried excisemen in towns and cities who may issue licenses not exceeding one to every five hundred of population. Regular saloon licenses are from $300 to $500 in cities; from $100 to $200 in towns. Hotel licenses in cities are from $100 to $500; in towns from $75 to $250. For beer and wine alone the fee in cities is from $60 to $150; in towns from $40 to $100. Sales of liquor are forbidden to minors, habitual drunkards, or persons whose relatives have given notice to prevent the sale. Saloons are closed from midnight until six a. m. in winter, five a. m. in summer. For the proper enforcement of the law it is provided that the drinking of liquor on the premises shall be prima facie evidence that it was sold for that purpose; and in a case on trial where a bar-tender has handed out anything in compliance with a customer's request, it shall be taken for granted that the article furnished was the thing called for.

Dr. A. L. Wood, philanthropist and scientist, is endeavoring to raise necessary funds among the public-spirited citizens of Brooklyn for the establishing of a system of free Turkish baths for the poor of that city. "Any instrumentality," says the enthusiastic doctor, "that will aid in lessening disease, crime and poverty should be eagerly employed. I hold that the Turkish bath is such an instrumentality. Regular baths would induce habits of cleanliness and sobriety, and if they were free, and good reading matter could also be supplied, these institutions might become attractive resorts for those needing companionship and recreation, as well as affording the opportunity for enjoying a needful bath."

Senator Stadler's bill extending the time during which wine may be sold at public balls in New York City from 1 a. m. to 3 a. m., passed the Senate at Albany without much opposition, but was defeated in the Assembly. A vote to reconsider was obtained, however, and the bill has been laid upon the table. It may yet be taken up when the Assembly is in the humor for it and become a law. "It is evident," says the New York Herald, "that a number of members in the House are holding back with the expectation of being paid by the wine importers to vote for it."

The Paulist Fathers, in charge of the Catholic Church of St. Paul, the Apostle, in New York, have organized what they call the Temperance Cadet Society, for the promotion of temperance in their parish. Its members, of whom there are two hundred and fifty at present, are boys over twelve years of age who have pledged themselves to abstain from all intoxicating drinks until they are twenty-one, and also to avoid the saloons, and refuse to procure or carry liquors for any one else.

A revival of interest in temperance among the Sabbath-schools of Brooklyn is largely due to the recent organization of the Brooklyn Juvenile Temperance Union, which aims, by representation, to gather all the young folks' temperance societies of King's county into one body, for the purpose of securing unity in views and methods, and affording help and encouragement to weak organizations. The first public meeting of the union, held February 11, was largely attended, and addressed by Mr. Albert Griffin and others. The movement owes much to the personal efforts of the union president, Mr. J. Bicknell, a gentleman familiar with the methods employed in the organization of the Bands of Hope which have sprung up throughout Great Britain.

The Woman's Prohibition Party League of Brooklyn show a most commendable activity in the matter of securing the enforcement in the schools of the law in regard to scientific temperance instruction. Of the sixty-six city schools visited by the League investigating committee, only eleven made any pretense of temperance instruction, while in most of these cases the only text-book used was the ordinary physiology. In one instance a lecturer makes the school an annual visit to enlighten the pupils as to the effect of alcohol upon the human system. And not only was there very little attention paid to temperance instruction, but one teacher informed the committee that the children in some schools are so stupefied by the beer which they drink with their lunch, as to be wholly incapable of study in the afternoon.

The League has prepared a petition to be presented to the Brooklyn Board of Education which is substantially as follows: "Knowing that the habit of drinking alcoholic beverages assails the youth of our city in an alarming manner; that yearly many are lost by and through it; and that by the use of intoxicants the minds of children are made unable to grasp the many subjects presented to them in our schools; and believing that it is through ignorance of the evil effects of alcohol and narcotics upon the human system that they are so freely used, we therefore respectfully petition you to give the subject of scientific temperance instruction a prominent place on the list of studies for our schools, having a certain time regularly set apart for instruction on this subject in the primary as well as the grammar schools, as many children leave school before they reach the higher grammar grades; and we also request you that text-books on the subject (not merely books on physiology) be used in all our public schools."

OUR ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARY.

(Concluded.)

A short night run brought us to the island of Fernando Po, a Spanish place. The shore, a vertical bluff, has a concave, semi-circular sweep, and is probably part of the rim of a volcano. The water is fifteen fathoms deep in the harbor, while on and beyond the reef which completes the circle of the crater, it is only five fathoms.

An English Primitive Methodist Mission has been maintained here many years. At present Rev. and Mrs. Fairley are in charge. Many have died or gone home disabled. This couple are in their second term; both are Scotch. They came on board to see if they could buy some articles they needed, and took me off with them to spend the day. It was a very pleasant change for me, but I perceived before the day was over, one of the causes of illness. The breeze came charged with the breath of decaying vegetation. Elephant grass grows to the height of ten to fifteen feet; it ripens, falls, decays, poisons the air and water, so that, as Mr. Fairley said, "We constantly breathe and drink poison." They always boil and filter the water, but until there is a population sufficient to till the soil and consume its produce, the mischief will go on. The fact of being under a Spanish government is a great hindrance to the work of the mission.

From Bonny, south, we have averaged one day sailing and two days stop for discharge of cargo. San Thome, (pronounced To-may) originally Portuguese, but now a French town, has a lovely situation on the sea, with varied and beautiful heights back of it: some low, gentle, smiling and farther back, others high and grand. From their forms I am sure some of the peaks must be volcanic. How I have wanted the artist's hand or photographer's skill in order to seize and keep some of these beautiful scenes. We lay off Gaboon over the Sunday, but I could not get ashore, though I wished very much to visit the missionaries there.

The next place was Londana, a trading-post, with no European ladies. After lying here twenty-nine hours, a night's sail brought us to the mouth of the Congo. The first indication of its neighborhood is a change in the color of the water. It is like very, very strong tea, and has been perceived one hundred miles from the mouth. I think we saw it first at less than thirty miles. But what a turbulent oceanic torrent it is! The Columbia has dwarfed all other rivers I have seen or sailed upon till this, but now it stands second.

The banks are densely covered by tropical vegetation, even into the water. Banana, the port, is a tongue of sand a few rods in width, behind which, in Banana Creek, is a very good harbor. Still several wrecks lie along one side. Through the courtesy of Lieutenant Taunt, acting American Consul to the Free State, and who was a fellow passenger, a boat was sent off for me, and I was soon in health and comfort, in the only hotel of the place. Mr. Van Meter, chief of the Dutch trading-house here, immediately set about searching for means of conveyance up the river. Before nine o'clock I received word that the state boat, the "Heron," goes up to Boma on the second morning hence, and that a smaller steamer will probably go on to Underhill in a few days. Meanwhile, as there is no hotel at Boma, Mr. Van Meter offers me hospitality in their house at that post.

This voyage has lasted thirty-seven days. The weather has been a marvel all the time. We had one small shower, and one short, sharp, furious thunder storm, when the rain came down in streams, and big, broad bolts of lightning followed each other in rapid succession from near the zenith, quite to the horizon. The thunder, however, was not louder than I have often heard at home. We had also a few dull days. Captain Cloucey was most kind and considerate, the officers and stewards all that could be desired, the doctor a pleasant gentleman. Being the only lady on board, tended to isolate me a little. I conducted worship the two first Sundays, which perhaps was the main reason that I experienced for the first time, to any great degree, the sort of treatment which so many missionaries have mentioned to me as being dealt out to them on shipboard. It is not exactly being "sent to Coventry," but it is very nearly that. Consequently, I had more silent, solitary hours than ever before in the same length of time.

After the two first weeks we were in port on Sundays, and could not have service. Two or three of the passengers were very agreeable gentlemen, and not to be counted with the others in their treatment of me. A certain class of traders on this coast are called "Palm Oil Ruffians," and properly. Their unscrupulous methods of dealing with the natives, their cruelties to those in their employ, and their very immoral lives, are a blot upon, a shame to the countries from which they have come. The first part of the voyage was encumbered by a representative of this class. Other traders are, without doubt, respectable, worthy men. We had one of that stamp, quiet, dignified, and with something in his face that would encourage one to trust any loved friend, any dearest interests, to his care.

I have not forgotten "Rum on the West Coast," and "Rum on the Congo," but I prefer not to speak of it yet. If I would allow myself to do it, it would be very easy to mourn over the lack of mails. Not a syllable, of course, on arrival here, nor can I hope for anything for four weeks longer. After hearing from my dear children, convention news is most longed for.

At this moment a bird sends forth a beautiful song, somewhere close at hand, a sweet message from our Heavenly Father of His loving provision for all our needs.

GOSPEL VS. LAW.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Some of your Boston readers would like a reply to a few questions that naturally arise from such a report as we found recently in our evening paper, entitled "Iowa's Miserable Farce." It states that, "A committee on ministerial correspondence, operating from Sioux City, is sending to the preachers of the state a circular letter asking them to unite in keeping the prohibition statute as it is, until the people have a chance to vote on it. T. J. McKay, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, which is the wealthiest and most influential in the city, in reply to this, addressed an open letter to the committee, in which he refuses to join in the effort suggested. The following is, in substance, the reason he assigns for his refusal: After several years of trial of prohibition in this city the law has proved a miserable farce."

Is this true? What is the mental and moral status of a community that will allow an experimental law intended for its well-being—whatever may be the opinion in regard to its advisability—to become a "miserable farce"? Is there no dishonor in refusing to recognize the will of the majority, for majority there must have been, or whence the law? Are law-breakers to be commended for having their own way, when a law aimed at a recognized evil is not a popular one with them? Is there no standard of honor among right-minded citizens in regard to allowing a fair trial to be given to any law which may be rescinded at the will of the people?

"I have always thought and taught," he says at a later point in his argument, "that nothing but the religion of Jesus Christ could change a man's nature."

Would the reverend gentleman limit all attempts for the uplifting of fallen human nature to the preaching which presents Christ as the foundation? That His teaching accepted and practiced all over the world would supersede the need for law, none can doubt. That His law should be the moral basis for all civil law, who denies? That it is the moral basis of the prohibitory law who questions, after reading the terms of that law and applying the touchstone, which is, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." Does Dr. McKay forget the young man who was worthy of Christ's love, who was bidden to show his allegiance by selling all that he had, and does he believe that the liquor dealers of Iowa, most of whom could probably not bear so severe a test of morality as that young man, would be any more willing than he to give up their lucrative business at the bidding of the Divine Master? If there is a teaching of Christ which is in harmony with the business of the saloons, the world ought to be made acquainted with it.

Further, he says, "It is as easy to make a drunkard a Christian, as a temperance man."

The religion of Christ has had a pretty fair trial in the two great Christian countries of England and America, and what is the record, increase or decrease in the liquor traffic? Will the candid preachers of the gospel all through Iowa please hold up their hands and let us have a count, and see how many of them have found that it is as easy to bring a drunkard to accept the precepts of Christ, and to model his life upon them, as it is a temperance man?

"I can hardly imagine that He"—Christ—"ever expects we would have to call on our Legislature to help us in the reclaiming of sinful men. I feel that I should be admitting His religion to be a sad failure should I declare that the aid of the Iowa Legislature was necessary before we could reform the drunkard, or prevent a new generation from arising in our midst. I believe that the whole subject should be taken out of the domain of politics. It is a moral question, and should be so handled," thus continues the letter.

"Reclaiming sinful men"? By implication, the drunkard, then, belongs to that class. And not the drunkard-maker? There is no allusion in Dr. McKay's argument, as quoted in our paper, to this latter class of "sinful men" at whom prohibition is primarily levelled, the whole assumption being that it is an absurd and futile effort to reform the drunkard. The drunkard-maker, the one who not only hurts his own soul but hurts the souls of those on whom his traffic depends, the man who fills his own purse at the expense of his neighbor's welfare, and does it in so public, unclean, and offensive a way as by means of the saloons, is ignored by this teacher of morals. The traffic which is lamented by the majority of sober-minded people as a great public evil, which ought to be regarded as illegal because it is wielded as a mighty political power, even if there were no other reason for its reprobation, receives no mention from this Christian clergyman. Is not a traffic which so seriously affects the condition of the community, a traffic which is always debasing in its ultimate, a fit subject for the consideration of citizens and legislators? Does Iowa trust to its pulpit utterances alone, in dealing with thieves, adulterers and murderers, who trespass on the rights of society?

A writer, Edward F. Hadman, in the North American Review of November 1, 1888, says: "It—intemperance—is chiefly a physical disease, and can be cured. Drunkenness is only a mental skin disease."

In the service of sanitation, then, our communities should seek for the truest intelligence on this subject, a commission should be appointed to seek for the microbe of this disease, and to tell us authoritatively whether that germ exists in the moral nature, the mental nature, or the physical nature.

Christ is undoubtedly the only true Saviour from sin, but it is not alone the Christ who is professed in the churches, it is the essential spirit of Christ taken into the heart and made its dominant motive, which is the Saviour from sin.

TEMPERANCE DELEGATION BEFORE THE MARYLAND LEGISLATURE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A large delegation of ladies and gentlemen from the Prohibition party, W. C. T. U., and the Maryland State Temperance Alliance of Baltimore, went to Annapolis February 18, to meet the joint temperance committee in the chamber of the House of Delegates at 4 p. m.

Mr. Wm. Daniel addressed the Committee on behalf of the visiting delegation, and then read the prohibitory restrictive bill, which he said they wished to have incorporated in the present liquor license law. The bill was an able document, and seemed to cover all the requirements of local option in resident precincts. At the close of the reading, Mr. Joshua Levering spoke. He prefaced his address by stating that he wished it distinctly understood that the delegation were Prohibitionists, and were not in favor of license, high or low, but would join hands with any movement that tended to the destruction of the liquor traffic. He then proceeded to make a statement backed by statistics and clippings from the leading liquor dealers' organs of the country, to show that in every instance they favored high license. He also read editorials from other papers friendly to high license, in which they acknowledged it a failure as a temperance measure. The proofs adduced were unanswerable, being furnished entirely by the friends of high license.

After thanking the Committee for their patient attention, Mr. Levering presented Mr. W. Frank Tucker, who, he said, would make the egal argument in the case. Mr. Tucker slowly and surely rose to the height of the occasion, and with burst after burst of eloquence, held his audience in the closest attention. He pleaded for prohibition from every standpoint, "It would lower taxes, it would also be an educator—all law educates, according as it is moral or otherwise." He closed with a strong appeal to the Legislature to rise in their might and ignore political selfishness, and give their moral influence to these measures, for the good of humanity, and the safety of the Republic. He was frequently applauded. Thus closed the proceedings of the afternoon, which had been conducted with rare dignity and impressiveness.

The House at eight o'clock in the evening, was filled to overflowing by the delegates and residents of Annapolis, to hear Dr. Anna Shaw on the benefits to be derived from prohibition. Mr. Summerfield Baldwin presided, and gracefully introduced the speaker with a few well-chosen remarks. Dr. Shaw, with great tact and ability, demonstrated beyond a doubt, the success of prohibition in Kansas and elsewhere, and gave many amusing illustrations of the methods used to evade the law, which frequently elicited laughter and applause. She closed with a grand peroration, in which she said, "We women are sometimes called dreamers—Christopher Columbus was a dreamer, when he went up and down the courts of Europe to get assistance, but without success, until a woman came to his relief. And then there have been those that dreamed all men should be free—yes, and we, too, are dreamers, dreaming of a happy time yet to come!"

Dr. Shaw concluded with an appeal to the men present to rise in the power of their manhood and protect the women and children from this curse, or, if they were not equal to the emergency, to grant to women the right to protect themselves.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

MATILDA B. CARSE.

Dear white-ribbon sister, brother, boy or girl: Have you a Temple mite-box on your table? If not, write to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, inclosing a two-cent stamp, and it will be promptly sent you on condition that you will drop into it a cent a day, or its equivalent, during the next twelve months. Mite-boxes in quantities will also be sent to unions for the cost of transportation.

The central city of the United States, Chicago, has been selected by the vote of Congress as the city which is best suited to commemorate the four hundreth anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America. Chicago in 1892 will be the mecca to which all feet will tend. With what amazement will the dwellers of the old world look upon the magnificence of this new city of the West.

The great exhibit at the World's Fair, no matter how magnificent it may be, will not have half the interest for the sight-seer from other lands and states as the marvels of this wonderful city—built upon ground which a little over half a century ago was inhabited by the red man. No doubt among the noted buildings which will attract greatest attention, will be the Woman's Temple, which by that time will stand forth complete in all its beautiful proportions.

As there will be a great reduction in railroad rates during the Fair, most of our white-ribboners will be able to visit Chicago; we are sure the feature of greatest interest to them will be the Temple, which their money has helped to erect. The architects, Burnham and Root, are busy on the new plans for the building—as the change in the size and locality of the Temple required somewhat of a change in the plan. As soon as the plans are completed and the weather permits, work will be commenced on the building. The corner-stone will be laid sometime during the spring. Let all unions and Loyal Temperance Legions who have not yet sent in the names of their members to be placed under the corner-stone, send to us at once for lists and have them filled out, as a few months hence it will be too late.

Below we give a list of the articles contained in the box received from Durban, South Africa, from the Free State W. C. T. U., and forwarded by their active and able president, Mrs. Gray: Four Zulu strainers for liquids; these are made of grass, and could be hung on the wall and used as "catch alls" (trimmed with a little ribbon they would make a beautiful ornament); four satchels made of grass; three spears; one knob stick from Zambezi; three Kaffir brooms; one Angora goat skin, large and beautiful; two sets copper bracelets; two wooden spoons; one Zulu pillow; one Kaffir snuff box; purses, collarets, necklaces and belts made of beads; two dolls made of bottles covered with beads; one Basuto pottery jug; one Basuto cup and saucer; one wooden jar; two flower and grass fans; one dozen grass bracelets; three bunches everlasting flowers; four Zulu spoons; three hair ornaments; six Zulu snuff spoons (could be used for mustard spoons); two Zulu baskets; two dozen photographs; three long canes.

Mrs. D. A. Hudson, of Wakayama, Japan, sends us several articles from that far-off land to sell for the Temple. She took the contents of her little son's mite-box, which we sent him a few months ago, and, instead of sending the money to us direct, purchased a beautifully-painted silk bolting cloth panel, showing a mountain scene in Japan, near Kioto. We will sell it for $4. She also sent some fine photographic views of scenes in Japan. One is a group of singing girls so generally employed in Japan on festal occasions. Another, the former residence of Hinde Yoshi, an ancient hero in Japanese history; and still another shows the exterior of a Buddhist temple. We will sell these pictures for $1 each.

Some of our W. C. T. U's are hard at work for the Temple; we hope that all will soon fall into line. Mrs. Ellen L. Hogle sends a check for $100 for the W. C. T. U. of Cambridge, Mass.

Alice E. Parker, of Elkhart, Ind., sends for twenty-five mite-boxes, and says her union is at work raising $100 for the Temple.

The Central W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis, Minn., has sent for fifty mite-boxes, and pledges $100. The president of the union, Mrs. H. J. Moffitt, writes that the $100 sent the Temple by this union over a year ago was the gift of one of their members, Mrs Mary C. Ninds; they now desire that her name shall be engraved in Memorial Hall. The Griggsville, Ill., W. C. T. U. is also at work to raise $100 for the Temple. They have just had a mite-box opening which netted $16.95, and not all the boxes heard from yet; they were out only six months. All took the boxes home with them again, to return them in another six months. The president, Mrs. McMahan, tells a pathetic little story about the contents of one of the boxes. She says: "Six months ago, when we distributed the boxes, when one of our ladies went home, her little boy asked that he might fill the box; he went to work at once to earn money to help build the Temple. Last October the little fellow was taken violently ill and died. The poor heart broken mother brought in the box to-day. When it was opened it contained $1.35. So one pair of the many little hands that have worked for the Temple are stilled. His name was Ervin Rush."

All money orders and checks for the Temple should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, National treasurer, and treasurer of the Temple fund. All information in regard to the Temperance Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres. Woman's Temperance Building Association, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Our Children.

A LITTLE GIRL'S SPEECH.

BY A. S. K. BURTON.

I'm a full fledged prohibitionist,
Though such a little girl,
And in honor of my "principles"
This flag I now unfurl.

I believe in prohibition
Of everything that's bad,
And in "government protection"
That will make all good folks glad.

I believe if women just could vote
For "home and native land,"
They'd make the "rum fiend" hide himself
Beneath the salt sea sand.

I can't see why all Christian men
Who want to do what's right,
Don't take their ballots and come on
And help us win this fight.

THE TRUE LADDIE.

BY JULIA M. THAYER.

Here's a laddie, bright and fair,
And his heart is free from care;
Will he ever, do you think,
Learn to smoke, and chew, and drink?
Make a furnace of his throat,
And a "chimney of his nose,"
In his pocket not a groat,
Elbows out and ragged toes?

Here's a laddie, full of glee,
And his step is light and free;
Will he ever, do you think,
Mad with thirst, and crazed with drink,
Stagger wildly down the street;
Wallow in the mire and sleet;
Hug the lamp-post, and declare
Snakes are writhing in his hair?

Not an ill this laddie knows
And his breath is like the rose;
Will he ever, do you think,
Poisoned by the cursed drink,
Fever burning in his veins,
Soul and body racked with pains,
Sink into a drunkard's grave,
Few to pity—none to save?

No; this laddie, honor bright,
Swears to love the true and right;
Keep his body pure and sweet,
For an angel's dwelling meet;
Never, never will he sup
Horrors from the drunkard's cup;
Never in the "flowing bowl"
Will he drown his angel-soul.

"Hurrah, mother! I belong to a secret society."

Otis Adams came hopping into his mother's room, first on one foot, then on the other, banging the door, upsetting a chair, and making as much noise as a nine-year-old boy can.

"Isn't it jolly, mother—a sure enough secret society!"

"Do all the members make as much noise as this one?" asked his mother, with a pleasant smile; "because, if they do, I hope the meeting will be held out in the field. But what is the secret, Otis?"

"Oho!" cried the little boy; "that would be telling, and we are not to tell anybody."

"I don't think much of secrets that are not for mothers to know," said the lady.

Otis looked rather sober.

"Well, mother," he said, "at the next meeting I'll move that all mothers be made honorary members and be told the secrets. But I'm to be on duty to-night, and I can't tell you what I'm going to do."

His mother shook her head, and Otis began to be dreadfully afraid he would miss his appointment.

"Just try me this time, mother," he said earnestly. "It is something I know you would like me to do, and Mr. Ross knows about it—indeed, he gave us our society name and motto."

"I think I could trust my boy," she said fondly, looking into his clear, truthful eyes, "even if Mr. Ross did not know about it; but, as nine-year-old judgments are not apt to be very ripe, I am better satisfied that your teacher should be in the secret. What is the name of your society?"

"The Left Hands," he replied proudly; "but don't ask our motto, for that would tell too much."

The next morning, before school time, Otis was seen flying wildly over the house, hunting in vain for his satchel of books.

During the morning Mrs. Adams put on her bonnet and coat and went to see a sick neighbor—a poor widow whose sickness would have been starvation to her family except for the kind charity of those around her.

"Ah, Mrs. Pool," she said, entering the sick woman's room, "I see you have a nice supply of wood laid in for your kitchen stove."

"Yes'm," said the poor woman, "and I reckon you are at the bottom of it, ma'am."

"I? No, indeed. What makes you think so?"

"Don't you know how I got that wood, ma'am?"

"Not a word of it."

"Well, about dark last night some boys came into my little yard as mum and quiet, ma'am, as if they had come to steal, and piled up three barrow-loads there where you see it. As they kept quiet, we kept quiet too; but the children made sure they saw your Otis among them."

"Very likely," said Otis' mother, remembering "The Left Hands;" but she said nothing to the boy until that evening, when Barry Mitten, the blacksmith's son, brought Otis' satchel to the door.

"Dad said he'd ha' went for you-uns 'bout usin' his grindstone ef he hadn't seen Mrs. Pool's wood-pile."

So "The Left Hands'" first secret was out, but that has not seemed to discourage them at all, for every week some good turn is being done secretly to somebody; and it is not hard to guess that the motto of the society is, "Let not your left hand know what your right hand doeth."—Sunday School Evangelist.

JUST AS IT HAPPENED.

A TRUE STORY.

When little Clinton was five years old, his mamma showed him a pledge roll, to which she had persuaded several boys and girls to sign their names. He seemed very anxious to see his own name written there, and after impressing upon him the solemnity of the act as well as the great benefit it would be to him, mamma put his chubby little fingers around the pen handle and guided it for him until his name appeared in full.

About a year afterward Clinton sat down to a dinner where, among other desserts, mince pie was served, and as he heard those about the table tease mamma and sisters about refusing it, he wanted to know what was the matter with the pie. When told it had liquor in it, he looked very sorry, for he was fond of pie. One and another urged him to take it, arguing that that little bit of liquor would never hurt him, and that if he never did worse than that he would do well. Dear little Clinton! He looked at mamma, but she dropped her eyes, realizing that the moment was one in which he must decide for himself; she did not forget, however, to offer up a silent prayer that He who was tempted like as we are would help her boy in this first temptation. There was a pause—one look at the pie, and then the beautiful blue eyes changed their expression, and clearly and distinctly said the child, "Mamma, I will take some custard." God only knew the joy of that mother's heart when the decision was made, and angels seemed hovering near that evening, when, closeted in her own room, she took Clinton on her knee and encouraged him to be always firm and to always dare to do right; and together they kneeled and asked the Father's blessing and protection.

During the late presidential campaign some one asked Clinton which party he was going to vote with when he grew to be a man, and he answered, "Whichever goes against the beer saloons." God grant that not only this little boy, but the boys all over our land, may come out fully for that party which is to remove the curse of liquor from our country!

The Still Hour.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 16, 1890.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

(Luke 5:1-15; Judges 14-19.)

Sunday, 16; Luke 5:1-15. Verse 5, Peter is an example for us; we should hear when the Lord speaks, labor when the Lord commands, believe what the Lord promises, and follow whither the Lord calls. Verse 6, There are remarkable transitions in every life of faith, from disappointment to surprise, from want to plenty, and from fear to hope. We cannot know what is before us, but all the Bible examples show that it is best for us, in every circumstance, to trust God. Verse 7, Abundance makes not less care and trouble than lack. Verse 11, Christ forsook more for us than we ever can for Him. They gave up nets, but received imperishable crowns.

Monday, 17; Judges 14. Verse 4, Strange instruments are sometimes used by Providence. Sometimes it was a numerous army, now it is a single-handed champion of Israel who awakens hostilities which result in the deliverance of the nation, by bringing about a private quarrel with the Philistines. Verse 6, By such private incidental circumstances, Samson was trained to have confidence in his strength, in order that he might be fitted for the more public work to which he was destined. Diligent and faithful young people who seek every opportunity for improvement, can trust God that they will be fitted to do their future work in life.

Tuesday, 18; Judges 15. Verse 6, Sooner or later, retribution comes to those who do wrong. Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished. (Prov. 11:21.) Verse 13, We cannot live entirely to ourselves. Our acts may bring sorrow and trouble to those who are related to us. With a view of freeing his own countrymen from all danger from the angry Philistines, Samson allowed himself to be bound and surrendered a prisoner into their power.

Wednesday, 19; Judges 16. Verse 17, Samson was wonderful in power and mighty to overcome others, but was a slave to passion; and, like many others, was overcome by his own lusts. The Lord departed from him, when his relation to God, as a Nazarite, was broken. Many a one who started well has been attracted by the Delilah lap of the pleasures of this world, until, blinded and fettered, the signs of his former consecration and strength are gone, and he bears only the marks of his wretched and fallen condition. Verse 28, It is probable that Samson had become a sincere penitent, and renewed his Nazarite vow, and that in his death he acted in the capacity of a public magistrate and gave his life for his country's cause.

Thursday, 20; Judges 17. Verse 4, The faith of Micah and his mother was blended with a sad amount of ignorance and delusion. They are examples of religiousness without conformity to the just and holy requirements of God's Word. Verse 6, Many now, in the matter of religion, do only that which is right in their own eyes. They are not careful to study the Bible, and to make it the guide of their faith and practice. They do not live lives of true obedience to God. Verse 13, God will not set aside His righteous laws, or release any from the obligation of obedience in order to gratify desires that are the outgrowth of ignorance and superstition.

Friday, 21; Judges 18. Verse 5, The answer, though apparently promising, was as delusive and ambiguous as a heathen oracle. The seeking out of mediums, ever ready to be used for such inquiries, has always accompanied a low state of religion and the prevalence of superstition. Verse 19, A Levite who dared to assume functions contrary to the law of Moses, and to fill sacred offices for the sake of favor and money, was ready to sell himself to the highest bidder. But he was no worse than those ministers of the present time who are drawn by large salaries or popular applause.

Saturday, 22; Judges 19. Verse 19, The painful story of this chapter shows to what a wretched state of wickedness society may sink where there is religious apostacy and political anarchy. If such shocking facts of vileness did not exist, it would seem incredible that men could sink to such a low state of morality. The amount of immorality and wickedness in our own times should lead us all to do our utmost to help forward the great regenerating and saving work of the gospel.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(Service. Deut. 10:12, 13.)

1. God made us, and therefore He must have meant us It is for us to find out the object of our mission in this world, and to spend our days, as well as we are able, in doing the work we are put here to do. The business of our lives is to serve the Lord. Phil. 2:12, 13.

2. The first business of all right service is to own and receive the work God has done for us as our Saviour. When we have accepted salvation as a free gift to us, and by living faith have come into personal relations with God we are best prepared to serve the Lord who has saved us. Luke 1:74, 75.

3. It is the most pleasant and satisfactory way for one to live, to meet the duties of every day, and at last to finish the work of his entire life as the servant of God. Psalm 119:47, 48; Matt. 11:29, 30; 2 Tim. 4:6-8.

4. We have no need to borrow any anxious trouble about our service. God will supply all needed wisdom and grace, that we may be helped through the work of each day. Phil. 4:19; 2 Cor. 12:9, 10; Rom. 6:13; Cor. 9:8.

O Lord, that lends me life, lend me a heart replete with thankfulness!—Shakespeare.

MARCH.

BY MRS. JANE GOODWIN AUSTIN.

There is no month so fair a type of life
In its first conscious strength and joy of strife
As thou, wild moon of March!
Thou with thy hurtling storms and soft blue sky
Within whose depths the great white cumuli
Sleep under heaven's arch.

Thou with thy swift chill winds that snatch the breath
From pouting lips, and swoop to grewsome death
The sailor and his ship,
And then in sudden sunburst triumphing
Make rainbows in the shining drops that cling
Upon his frozen lip.

I love thee well, nay, but I love thee not,
How can I tell if I do love or not,
Unstable and untrue!
The raging lion now, and now the lamb,
The winter's blast, laden with springtide balm
O wild March, which is you?

A type of life, yea, of thy life, O friend!
And yet I know not thy life to the end:
Thy life holds better things.
And March holds May, and May sweet summer time,
And summer dies and in its death sublime
The grain of autumn brings.

THE HIDDEN WORKERS.

BY MRS. C. H. SPURGEON.

At the manufactory of the "Gobelins Tapestries," in Paris, the weavers sit concealed behind the beautiful fabrics on which they are engaged, working from a pattern designed by some great artist, and perhaps only taking occasional peeps at the fair exterior and the marvelous effects which their patient labors are producing. Passing along the room in front of the brilliant pictures, the visitor's attention is concentrated on their loveliness. He knows that they are in process of manufacture by men whose persons are partially or wholly hidden behind the massive drapery; he may even see the work growing, thread by thread, under the weavers' busy fingers; but he gives scarce a thought to the workmen, so ravished is he with the beauty of design, the richness of coloring, and the unique texture of these renowned productions.

I have been thinking that, in a very humble fashion, I and many others of God's small and weak children, are like these weavers; for day by day we sit, adding a few touches to our work; with pains and patience, and sometimes with trembling fingers weaving in the daily mercies, trials, and experiences which our Father puts as threads into our hands, and trusting Him to make the pattern show gloriously on the other side. When the finished tapestry shall be displayed, it will not be as a triumph of our skill, or a credit to our labor, but as a trophy of the Lord's grace and goodness, and the wondrous unfolding of His great design of loving kindness and tender mercy to His chosen ones.

For truly our work is all His—in direction, in design, and in development. Its foundation lines were laid in His love and compassion, its pattern is traced in the golden threads of His faithfulness and favor, its embroidery is clustered with the precious stones of His mercies, and its beauty is great because of the "blessing of the Lord" upon it. Behind all this grandeur of grace the workers may well be concealed; it is enough that they should marvel at the condescension which placed them there, and taught their fingers to fashion this goodly work for the King and His servants. It is so great an honor to be allowed to put even one stitch into the tapestry of the wonderful providences which are being wrought all around us, that we might well crave to be employed upon the selvedges, or be happy only to ravel out the fringes of the great Master's designs, rather than bear no part in that solemn labor which promotes us to be "workers together with God."

I noticed that the pattern from which these weavers worked was placed above their heads—they had to look up for direction and guidance as to every stitch they wrought. A sweet lesson this, and one to be well conned over!

Our life plan with all its varied detail, is traced by the Father's hand, and day by day as we look up He unfolds it, asking that our imitation be tender and true of the pattern He sets before us.

"Looking unto Jesus" is the secret of all satisfactory and well-done work, and no stitch can go awry when set by fingers which follow faith's steadfast gaze. Then, whether He fill our hands with golden filaments making our woven work bright and gay, or whether He employ us on the black border, where the strands are laid in tears—either way will be right, because He directs, controls, and approves.

I cannot tell why I have recalled a scene which must have lain long buried in the dark places of my memory; perhaps it is intended to comfort or reassure some timid, troubled worker who can see no beauty or utility in the service which yet he feels constrained to render, because of the love he bears his Lord and King. Courage, dear friend! You are to stand behind your work, whatever it may be. You are to labor diligently and faithfully at the wrong and knotty side of it, content to be unknown and unrewarded, if the Lord so wills it; but restfully certain that, if you are doing what He tells you, the result may be safely left with Him. He will bring out all the harmony, and beauty, and glory of His own designs; and when they are perfected, and you are allowed to look upon the right side of the Lord's "marvellous work," you will wonder, not only at its splendor as a whole, but at the brilliance of the stitches which were woven in by you with so many sighs and tears, and you will never cease to sing to the praise of Him who "doeth all things well."

When we come to gather up the last thread of our life's task, and tie the finishing knot, God grant that our little piece of broidered work may be accepted and precious in His sight!

EFFECTS OF TOBACCO UPON THE CHILDREN OF THOSE WHO USE IT.

BY J. H. KELLOGG, M.D

There is no doubt but that a large share of the hysterical girls, and the boys who have a tendency to inebriety, owe their condition to the tobacco habits of their fathers. I have seen numerous dreadful illustrations of this. One gentleman brought his boy to me whom he said "seemed to have been born with the nerves all on the outside of his body." When a child, he had the St. Vitus' dance; as he grew older, and recovered from this, it was found impossible to keep him in school, for he became exhausted at the least exertion, could not sleep nights, and his nervous system seemed a complete wreck. I looked into the case carefully, and could find no reason in the boy for his extreme nervous condition. Finally I asked the father if he used tobacco. He replied, "Yes, I've used it all my life; began when a mere boy, and it hasn't hurt me a particle." I told him that his son was suffering from its injurious effects, and that the only time to cure him extended back of his birth.

A physician only forty years of age came to me, and when I examined him I told him that he had a tobacco heart, and that he must stop smoking or die. He said he did not see why tobacco should hurt him at that age, when his father and mother, who were each eighty years old, had smoked all their lives, and were hale and hearty. I replied that his father and mother had smoked his heart away. I remember one young man, only twenty, with a bad tobacco heart, who did not understand why he could not smoke as his father and grandfather had done before him.

A great many nervous diseases, cases of neuralgia, hysteria, etc., as well as heart disease, are directly or indirectly attributable to the use of tobacco. I am sure that the next generation will be convinced of the enormity of the evil which is second only to that of alcohol, and perhaps in some respects worse. The alcohol habit produces more social distress, but the evils it entails upon posterity are no worse than those imposed by the tobacco habit, if they are so bad.

It has been argued that tobacco does not produce organic disease. This is not true. It causes a failure of the eyesight which nothing can cure, and brings on a tobacco heart which nothing can cure.

BEST METHODS OF CONDUCTING GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.

Believing that this department of our work needed strengthening by a concurrence of testimony and experience, we have invited the state presidents and a few others to contribute brief points on the best methods of conducting gospel temperance meetings, and hereby submit them to our readers with the hope that local unions all over the land may thus be aroused to a revival of interest in this good work.

FROM OUR NATIONAL EVANGELIST.

First, in arranging for a gospel meeting, care should be taken that it is a gospel meeting, not a literary entertainment or a debating club. I should deprecate the introduction of recitations of any sort, for such things are very apt to degenerate in character and to become a demoralizing element in a religious service.

There should be one woman who will be responsible for the meeting—not necessarily always leading it, but who will see that it opens and closes on time, that books are passed, and the invited or appointed leader or speaker is brought properly before the meeting. There should be a regular organist and a leader of singing. A song service of fifteen minutes should be the first thing on the program—ringing, triumphant songs, such as everybody sings. One or two new songs may be ventured if the leader has a good solo voice and knows how to draw music from others.

Let the selections of music be made to tell some connected story of salvation, or to teach some one truth, and, if practicable, they should be in harmony with the subject of Scripture and address. Close the song service with some old hymn, all standing; then, while standing, a few words of prayer. Insist on short, pointed, real prayers. Set apart thirty minutes for the Scriptures and exposition. Let the Scripture lesson be brief, and endeavor to bring out but one point in the sermon or exposition or talk—whatever it is to be. Much is lost by trying to carry too much at a time. Let the truth be made clear, enforced by apt illustration, and then left for the audience to digest.

Prayer should follow the talk, and the remaining fifteen minutes be used in song, prayer, testimony, invitation, or inquiry as the Spirit seems to indicate. The meeting should close promptly with the hour, and be followed by an inquiry or consecration meeting, to which those only should be requested to stay who have personal motives for doing so.

Literature should always be distributed at the door as the people pass out. Requests for prayer should be asked and kept on record. The pledge should be used as the indications shall direct, and opportunity given for joining the union. Never forget that the one purpose of the gospel meeting is to bring people to Christ, and that we are to teach a whole gospel, having the fear of God before our eyes. S. M. I. HENRY.

PRESIDENT OF MISSOURI.

Advertise well. Begin promptly. Have a prepared program. Sing gospel hymns with a good leader. Give short Scripture lesson; not necessarily the "Prodigal Son." Let remarks on lesson be short and to the point. Invite short prayers and short experiences. If any bore tries to tell all he has done for temperance, ring him down. Don't drag; fill gaps with verse of song; close promptly, and expect a blessing. C. C. HOFFMAN.

PRESIDENT OF NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

1. Have a band of earnest and consecrated workers, who will always be present with kindly greetings, and words of cheer and comfort.
2. Good music, and plenty of it.
3. A short but attractive Bible reading.
4. A short address from an interesting and sympathetic speaker—man or woman.
5. Short testimonies from any or all who desire to take part.
6. Constant reliance upon the Friend of sinners for a blessing upon our work. ROSAMOND R. JOHNSTON.

SUPERINTENDENT OF SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

One or two opening hymns. Prayer for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and the yielding of all hearts to its influence. Brief and plain exposition of the Scripture lesson, followed by prayer and singing. Meeting freely open for testimony, prayer, repeating of Bible texts, and requests for prayer. The after meeting for signing the pledge and religious conversation is, perhaps, the most helpful of all. It is of the utmost importance to remember that the spirit of any meeting is of far greater value than the method.

LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL.

PRESIDENT OF OHIO.

Permit me to say that the first Sabbath gospel temperance meeting which occurred in Xenia was held about ten days after the beginning of the Crusade here, in the Third United Presbyterian Church immediately after the regular morning service, and occupied only thirty minutes, the entire time being taken in prayer. Believing in the power of prayer to hold us "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," we think it is needful to turn aside from all conflicting opinions, all controversies, all contradictions, and be alone with God, seeking His wisdom, His guidance, in order to be filled with His spirit in such large measure as will enable us to speak the truth with love; taking from us all fear of men, all desire for the praise of men; putting on the whole armor of God, so that through storms and doubts, opposition and misrepresentation, we may do His whole will in the work to which we have been called. After more than fifteen years of experience in gospel temperance meetings held on Sabbath afternoons, we are convinced that the best method of conducting them is simply as prayer-meetings. HENRIETTA L. MONROE.

NATIONAL SUPERINTENDENT OF THE Y. W. C. T. U.

Important for conducting a gospel temperance meeting:

1. That the leader should trust in and rely upon the leadings of the Holy Spirit.
2. That the singing should be with the spirit and with the understanding.
3. That the Scripture reading should be in harmony with the object of the meeting, and the prayers simple, direct, and fervent.
5. That there should be a definite purpose in view, and that results should be summed up at the close. Better to have many speak briefly than for one to be "heard by much speaking." FRANCES J. BARNES.

PRESIDENT OF MINNESOTA.

The secret of an effective gospel temperance meeting is in having the hearts of the leaders and singers so full of love to Christ (which is manifested by love for perishing humanity), that the songs will be fitted with the spirit of love, and the addresses will be so warm with the spirit of love that the hearers will be melted to thoughtful tenderness. Then clearly present the awful sin and defilement of the drink habit—the degradation to soul and body of manufacturing and selling that which defiles another, and the enormity of voting to license that which only ruins. Let Christ be held forth the Saviour He is—able to save to the uttermost all who will seek Him in the forsaking of sin, and fleeing to Him for help. Our women should hold their own gospel temperance meetings.

THE WORK-HOUSE BOY OF ST. ASAPH.

We read the lives of great men backward, through the genealogy of events, to find the antecedents of their power. Thus we trace the history of Henry M. Stanley back to the little windowless dwelling in Denbigh, Wales, where he was born in 1840, of a parentage so poor that when his father died, three years later, he was removed to the almshouse of St. Asaph. He is said to have been a sharp boy, and his grandfather used to call him, "My little man of the future," yet no one saw in the small Ishmael the torch bearer of civilization to a continent in barbaric darkness. A child is a mysterious unit enfolding the nameless something foreknown of God, which predestinates his future in the realm of good or evil according as he shall choose.

John Rowland—that was his birth name—graduated from the workhouse school at an early age, the masters of that institution testifying to the "extraordinary talents of Betsey's little son." Then he had a year or two of farm life, with the thirst for knowledge in him. He engaged in teaching in the next parish, but the schoolroom could not long hold one destined to make geography from elemental matter. At the age of seventeen the light-weight youth found himself in New Orleans, having worked his passage on an English trading vessel. Seeing "Boy Wanted" in a shop window, he entered.

"What can you do, my lad?" asked the tradesman.

"Anything that a boy of my age and size could be expected to do," was the prompt and comprehensive answer. He was set to work, and so pleased his employer that he was finally adopted as a son and took his foster-father's name, Henry Mortlake Stanley. He says: "One beautiful text I have always kept before me: 'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.'" The South had been good to him, and at the breaking out of the war he entered the confederate service, was taken prisoner near Pittsburg, but swam the river under a hail of bullets, made his escape and went home to his mother in Wales, as ragged a soldier as ever ran away.

His next venture was in the Northern navy, where shortly he distinguished himself by swimming, under fire, with a rope to a confederate ship, deserted by its crew, yet so under protection of other guns that she could not be carried away as a prize. Mr. Stanley secured her, and she was towed off in triumph. For this he was made an ensign, and in that capacity began his correspondence for the New York Herald. At the close of the war he went to Crete as war correspondent for that paper, his own sympathies being with the oppressed islanders. Next, he joined the English expedition into Abyssinia. The line of his early travels is similar to that of Childe Harold's pilgrimage, but its real sweep is as unlike that of aimless Byron's as the steady roll of a planet upon its heaven-laid track is unlike the reeling movement of a wandering star, through unsurveyed space.

In October, 1869, Mr. Stanley was summoned from Madrid to Paris to meet James Gordon Bennett, Jr., from whom he received his great commission: "Go and find Livingstone." No man had ever marched under such orders. It meant to pass beyond the outermost border of the civilization whose warp is electric wires and steel rails. It meant to leave the world he knew and loved to enter another, and, single-handed, to grapple with Nature in the fierce heat of her tropical mood,—all her forces active, from the seductive miasm of lily-scented swamps to the brutal strength of savage man.

The record of his interview with young Bennett shows that he did not underestimate the magnitude or peril of the undertaking. In parting, Mr. Bennett said, "Good-night, and God be with you." Stanley's reverent answer was, "On such an errand as I go upon, God will be with me." That faith in the Divine presence never left him during his three expeditions into the Dark Continent, and it transformed the adventurer into a hero. In a letter to the New York Herald, as he was returning for the third time, he says: "My faith that the purity of my motive deserved success was firm, but I have been conscious that the issues of every effort were in other hands." That thrilling letter written last November, which scarcely mentions his own part in the rescue of Emin Pasha, but gives all honor to his men, closes with the fervent words: "For what has been done and is now near ending, thanks be to God forever and ever."

On January 6, 1871, Stanley set foot in Zanzibar to begin his search in the jungle of a continent without rail or telegraph, for a man or a grave. He appeared to Africa's Elias as a ministering angel, and that journey to the coast, with Livingstone's body borne upon the shoulders of men for whom he had lived and died, will stand alone in history. The great Congo undertaking occupied five years, beginning in 1879. It resulted in the establishment of an independent nation on the west coast of Africa, consisting of a confederacy of four hundred chiefs, bound by treaty to promote trade and keep the river open. This opens up a great water way into the heart of Africa, for fifteen hundred miles.

In 1884 the great explorer started home, believing his hardest work for the world was finished. He had scarcely touched American shores when the cable brought him an urgent plea from the King of the Belgians and Sir Wm. McKinnon to go to the rescue of Emin Pasha.

This last expedition demanded all his ripened, disciplined powers. He knew the land and was known of the people. He had commanded an industrial army of seventy-five Europeans and 2,000 natives. Seventeen stations had been under his control, besides a flotilla of twelve river steamers. But to reach Emin he must pass through a forest of trees from 100 to 180 feet high, matted together by briers, thorns, falling and decaying trees, and all the rank undergrowth of perpetual summer. This jungle was the home of venomous insects, and gigantic elephants, and all grades of animal life between. Through this he "tore, ploughed, and cut his way for one hundred and sixty days." This was but one of many obstacles, but none proved insurmountable.

He gives a fine point in scientific temperance, which may as well be noted right here: "From the moment of arrival the body begins to undergo a new experience, and a wise man begins to govern his appetite accordingly. Any-liquid that is exciting, or as others choose to term it, exhilarating or inspiring, the unseasoned European must avoid during daylight." He enumerates the many which are called "innocent wines and beer," and declares "the slightest indiscretion may in one short hour prove fatal." This seems like extreme abstemiousness to one who, as a boy, drank ale with his mother, and as a soldier drew whisky with his rations, while his later years have been passed outside the zone of temperance agitation. He apologizes for such radical ground, saying: "I am compelled to speak strongly by our losses, by my own grief in remembering the young, the strong, and the brave who have slain themselves through their own ignorance." That sentence could well be written upon the title page of a temperance text book.

Astuteness and inflexible will are the qualities that win and hold the negro; Mr. Stanley possesses both. His ability to "set a stake and work to it," is shown by the remarkable fact that he reached the farthest point projected by the expedition, 1,413 miles from the coast, in 1883, only one day behind the time predicted by him before the committee at Brussels in 1879.

His reverence for Dr. Livingstone is akin to worship. He had formerly sneered at missionaries, but he says, "When I saw Livingston, I saw what a noble type of physical and spiritual manhood a missionary could be, and I have felt differently ever since."

Indeed, the young representative of the English press became a very important missionary himself. King Mtesa, who fairly held the keys of the native kingdom of Central Africa, became much attached to him. One day he said: "Stamlee, the white men know everything; now Stamlee, tell me and my chiefs what you know about angels." Mr. Stanley's resources were equal to this, also. He drew a vivid picture of Michael Angelo's and Gustave Doré's illustrations, and then read from his Bible what Ezekiel and John have to say about them. The dusky monarch was charmed, and insisted upon hearing all about Christianity. Mr. Stanley translated a summary of the Bible into his language, embracing all the principal events from creation to crucifixion, giving St. Luke's gospel entire, on account of its complete history of the Saviour's life. King Mtesa declared he could see nothing in it too hard to believe, so he embraced Christianity, and Mr. Stanley appealed to Christendom to send missionaries to Uganda.

It has been asserted that Stanley is not loved by many, and that his affections are undeveloped, but his old mother was not forgotten in all the applause that would have turned a head on less rugged shoulders. He brought her up to London and kept her in a grand hotel, to share his honors with him. Dualla, the black "boy" who has waited on him for many years, loves him, too, and the man who has the love and respect of his valet must, in spite of all appearances to the contrary, have a great heart, as well as a great head.

THE LOCAL QUESTION.

To what extent may the local, or small political subdivision denominated a township, or village, enjoy autonomy in moral matters? How far may it umpire its own game in health regulations, in Sabbath observance, in religious worship, in gambling, licentiousness, and the liquor traffic? Regardless of the value, or non-value, of the policy called "local option" in the conflict of the age with crime, is the practice in harmony with our American theory touching the relation of the locality to that aggregate of localities we call the state and the nation?

Certainly it is the broad, democratic theory we politically are builded upon, that the individual city, or village, like the human individual, shall possess all the personal liberty it can use without damage to its neighbors—to the larger community of which it is a part. But just as certainly is it bone and blood of our theory that neither the individual man nor the individual spot six miles square shall cross that limit. Foster and cultivate to yourselves anything you like that is decent and peaceable, but not saloons, gambling-dens, and the other cat-holes of crime to your vicious taste, even inside your own line-fence. And if bad legislation says you may, the unwritten part of our constitution says you must still see to it that the thistle-down of your shame and infamy blows not over the fence into your neighbor's garden of rose and tulip—chokes not with moral weeds his boys and girls.

Can this be done? Did ever a village elect saloons under its "local option" without damage, moral and financial, to the neighboring villages that had chosen the better way? Did ever a county under the local option misfortune grant a hundred saloons the legal right to do a moral wrong in dealing out intoxicating liquors to a thousand citizens of that county without damaging—in part destroying—one thousand citizens of the state of which the county is but a factor, and thereby mournfully, perpetually, damaging the state itself, and all its people?

Emphatically we say, No; the grogstall in Bridgeport lowers the moral barometer in Evanston; the outer precincts of Illinois have their uncleanness, their reproach, and the danger to every inhabitant increased by reason of the saloons at the metropolis of Illinois. For the liquorish evil is a pestilence that blights distance, a contagion that travels by rail, a vulture ever in quest of innocence; and where the young lambs are at peace, thither it takes its flight. An unstable youth—something of a bat in lack of vision—is fascinated toward the glare of evil—this whited sepulchre—especially when its dead men's bones are draped with highly licensed "respectability." People travel; the young of the farm seek positions in the city; the son and daughter of the cleanest county in local option Missouri fall victims to the saloons in St. Louis.

Since their city limits and county lines are not barriers that keep the evils of the saloon within the locus where they originated, this is the proposition we kindly submit to the thought of our readers, not as the dictum of an autocrat in reform, or the finding of the Supreme Court, but as the suggestive result of our thinking, and with a view to the highest good of all:

While local option graciously cleans some localities, it is good only so far as it becomes prohibitory. And the option that grants to evil an equal chance with good, is at least a compromise with evil.

Again, local option laws seem at variance with the thought of our national founders, the spirit of our hundred years of history, and the purpose of the Constitution, that every state, not every locality, should, within the limitations of that instrument, determine its moral, social and political habits. In other words, the state is the smallest unit of territory that, consistently with domestic quiet and uniformity in government, is entitled to enact laws affecting the welfare of the people of the whole state. Hence, said laws seem to us, if not literally, yet in a larger, higher sense, to be unconstitutional.

Every criminal sent to prison, every lunatic sent to the asylum, every boy sent to the reform school by the village saloon is a tax upon the people of the commonwealth. And may the town in order to maintain a local wrong, rightly tax the state?

Is not local option legalized conflict, rather than peaceful uniformity? Is it not the law of drunkenness on one quarter section, the law of sobriety on the next? And can that system afford to all the safest government? If the state may rightly delegate to a petty corporation "option" in liquor vending, why not in the traffic of all vice, in title to land, in health measures, in church establishment, in marriage, in gambling, lotteries, and whatever else its little appetite, or covetousness, may consider criminal, or innocent? The principle seems the same; but apply it in all points, and state government is at an end, and our liberty that of the tribes in Africa, each encampment tossing spears at all the rest.

Of course we here assail no efforts in honest reform, but merely suggest whether each community may not most help itself and all the rest by glancing beyond its narrow limits and pushing for national prohibition as the largest benefit to the smallest municipality.

WOMEN AND THE CZAR.

Miss Willard writes us urging that the protest of universal womanhood go to the Russian Czar because of the outrages and cruelties inflicted upon the political prisoners in Siberia. Mr. George Kennan has reversed the telescope of observation that we had so long held "wrong end to," and shown us the awful situation as it is. His latest declarations are the most appalling, and bring to our view these modern protestants against worse than mediæval tyranny, imprisoned in the same cells with thieves and murderers, and noble women among them, who after having been treated indecently, were for their resistance inhumanly flogged, and then in their desperation committed suicide. Surely it is time for the deep heart of the American home to speak its sense of outraged human nature in the presence of such abominations. Why should not each and every society of women, whether a W. C. T. U. or not, pass resolutions, and individual women write out their hearts in letters short and earnest, addressed simply "To the Czar"? If they will do this, and send them to Miss Willard at Evanston, she will have them fastened together in one great book, and forwarded to that greatest of autocrats. But do not send him a harsh word. His antecedents, education and surroundings are all to be considered; his father's pitiable taking off, and the constant danger to his own life and those whom he holds dearest. Nobody was ever hated into doing any good thing yet. "There is nothing inexorable but love."

Miss Willard says: "I only suggest this method that we may have something definite to act upon; doubtless many will prefer to send through their own society channels, but will not THE UNION SIGNAL try to enlist the press generally so as to set its wide white wings in motion for the uplift and shelter of those men and women who with motives of true patriotism are the martyrs of a living death among the polar snows."

To all this we say amen, and amen, and beg our confreres of the press to help us all they can, and women everywhere to appeal to the Czar by pen, and to God by earnest prayer.

MRS. MATILDA JOSLYN GAGE, a pronounced Free Thinker, has left the ranks of the Woman Suffragist Societies because they recognize and welcome evangelical women to their platform. A few of the same mind with herself have signed the call for a seceders' convention in which they specially mention as "a pet aversion" the W. C. T. U., and in the accompanying circular attack Miss Willard as "the most dangerous woman in the United States," because of her following among Christians. Some of many citations given by them go so far as to call our National W. C. T. U. President "Pope Willard." That one so liberal in spirit as she should be thus dealt with seems unaccountable, and helps to illustrate the many humorous aspects of the present unique season. The chief accusation brought against Miss Willard is, that she favors a union of church and state, than which no possible criticism could be more unjust. We doubt if a woman in America has shown a broader or more kindly spirit toward those of diverse religious creeds. She has spoken in all churches, from a Jewish synagogue to Cathedral Hall, Philadelphia, just alongside the Catholic, and while always a stanch Methodist, has never written an unfriendly line about those from whom she differed. Here is what she has said on the union of church and state: "Our declarations must be clearly divested of anything that looks toward a union of church and state, to which all enlightened Christians are thoroughly opposed." This latest attack is almost as droll in its absurdity as those of the political press. Verily it may be said that the intolerance of the self-styled "tolerant" people is among the freaks of human nature.

THE Executive Committee appointed by the late Reform Conference was in session in this city last month, and has since issued a stirring address appealing for a union of all the reform parties and elements in a National Reform party. The politics represented on this committee were: Union Labor, through Hiram Maine and W. W. Jones; Independent, Edward Evans; Prohibition, J. H. Comings; Greenback, Mrs. S. B. Heath. The members of the committee during all the session were remarkably unanimous in their opinions as to what reforms are most needed, and upon what principles the best elements of the country can readily unite, to-wit: Temperance, suffrage, finance, tariff, civil service, etc., etc. A convention is called for the purpose of completing the union, September 3, 1890, at St. Louis.

THOMAS BURTON, of the Southwest, organ of the Liquor Dealers' Association, Cinninnati, is at Columbus, working for the repeal of the Owen law, and the substitution for it of a species of local option which places the licensing power with the municipal government. A German society of Cincinnati, the Rheinlanders, in a masked parade, grossly insulted the city government, by displaying a huge float on which was a iron-barred prison in which "languished" the well-known saloon-keepers; outside were a professional bondsman and the clerk of a police court; the whole affair was intended as a burlesque on the enforcement of the Sunday closing law.

Special Difficulties.

OUR MEMBERSHIP.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have seen so many statements that the W. C. T. U. had lost members by its political stand, that I am very anxious to know if such really is the case. Was there any loss of membership after the passage of the St. Louis resolution, which is, I believe, the first record for the Prohibition party? If there was, then has it continued? I trust you may obtain for man exact, reliable and authoritative answer. The General Officers have their offices in your building. Their records should surely settle this question. INQUIRER.

ANS.—At the Philadelphia Convention, following that at St. Louis, the gain in membership of the W. C. T. U., as taken from the treasurer's books, was sixty-nine per cent; the largest gain any year preceding had been fifty-nine. There has been no loss of membership since the St. Louis Convention, but instead, a constant increase, as the books of the treasurer will show.

A NEW CRUSADE.

QUERY:—Should we not make greater effort to enlist our fathers and brothers in our peaceful war for "God and Home and Native Land," by inviting them to become honorary members of the W. C. T. U.? A WORKER.

ANSWER:—Let us have a new crusade, with more members as its goal. The number of golden opportunities to secure this end that we allow to slip through our fingers is simply enormous. Here, for instance, is an audience, great or small, gathered up through W. C. T. U. efforts and good will; here is a speaker, man or woman, to urge them to take decisive relationship to the reform which, as Richard Cobden said, "underlies every other reform." In such a gathering the "arrest of thought" comes to many a brain, the stirring of sympathy to many a heart. Now is the time to strike; now they can be won to action; now their interest and courage are "screwed to the sticking point." What is before everything else the thing to do? What but to secure the names of men and youths to the total abstinence pledge, and as honorary members of the W. C. T. U. (all of their membership fees remaining with the local W. C. T. U. for its own use) and the names of women and girls as regular members of the same society.

But what is the most effective way of doing this? It is not to ask them forward, but to have placed in each pew, or handed around by a committee, our membership cards, having the pledge and all needful information; then gather up these cards left in the pews or on the chairs, and send out your visiting committee (of which each local W. C. T. U. should have one,) to collect the dues, leaving literature with each new member.

Besides, I urge that each town and village be districted, and a house-to-house visitation for members made. If we do nothing else in 1890 but carry out this single plan, we shall double our numbers and carry our literature into the homes of the people who love and believe in the W. C. T. U. just in the proportion that they know its real spirit and work as set forth in our Timely Talks and leaflets. Beloved sisters, let us out and away to the homes of the people, scattering light in minds mystified by the misstatements of bad men, and the misunderstandings of the good. Our Heavenly Father will bless such work as this, for Christ's heart beats in the gospel temperance movement of to-day.

Yours for a membership crusade,

Frances E. Willard

The Watch-Tower.

Christians should never say, "I fear," "I am anxious," "I am worried;" leave that to atheists. "Perplexed" is a good substitute. I heard a grand white-ribboner use it the other day when a crisis was upon her. She made no fuss, cast no aspersions, but clasped her hands quietly and said, "I confess I am perplexed—but it will all come out right; of that I feel assured."

Miss Willard writes that when she "finds a sick or dying W. C. T. U., it is usually dying of one meeting a month. Unless the executive committee meets weekly, there is very little hope for their longevity, to say nothing about their usefulness." This is sound. On Duty knows it, and THE UNION SIGNAL would mildly add that any local W. C. T. U. whose members do not read their own paper is dead already.

DeTocqueville's parting words to Charles Sumner are worthy to be the motto of a life or of an enterprise: "Life is neither a pleasure nor a pain. It is serious business, to be entered on with courage and in a spirit of self-sacrifice."

Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, National superintendent of evangelistic work, has this week entered upon her second series of engagements for the season in Washington, D. C. Her first engagement under the auspices of the District W. C. T. U. was so successful, that immediate arrangements were made for her return. Such earnest evangelistic work in the heart of the great nation's capital cannot fail to do infinite good and add greatly to the world's redeemed.

Tennyson said recently in a letter to a friend: "I think it wisest in a man to do his work in the world as quietly and as well as he can, without much heeding praise or dispraise."

In the February number of Education, Katherine Cowan, professor of history and political economy in Wellesley College, tells how she is preparing her students "for citizenship."

Another unique suggestion comes from Vermont. It is an evening's entertainment with the stereopticon, originated and conducted by Mr. J. E. Crane, of Middlebury. In a pleasing manner it shows the absurdity of the claims of high license as a lucrative or a moral movement. Tables and diagrams are thrown upon the screen, as well as allegorical pictures, some serious, some humorous. It is an effective way of teaching facts.

The W. C. T. U. of New Jersey is trying to wrest from the present Legislature a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of that state. Miss Willard and Mrs. Downs argued eloquently for it before the Senate Committee last week.

We have two notable white-ribboners in Vineland, N. J., who entertain all our speakers and stand at the battle's front; moreover they are unusually handsome, capable merchants, whose "name and style" is "Leavitt & Sherburne." They hail from way down East, and have made fifty thousand dollars out of their store. For thirty steadfast years they have been each other's partners, not in business only, but in heart and hearthstone also, and are Ladies Bountiful to everybody and to all causes that need help in the flourishing prohibition town of Vineland, whither they came as pioneers. There is not a prettier home than theirs in New Jersey, "nor a peaceabler," as Samantha would say; long may its watch-fires glow!

There is a "marking time" sentence that our boys and girls should learn, namely, "The saloon, the saloon, the saloon must go!" I wish our workers everywhere would try to inculcate this as a sort of standing word and action among the young people; and if Anna Gordon in her new Marching Songs could have this, with a movement of feet by which the children should stand and mark time, saying these words, it would have a great effect as they march the streets. Just as the Republicans said in their campaign of 1884, "Blaine, Blaine, James G. Blaine," so we can teach our army to say this other thing, which is so much nobler and will last so much longer.

Probably the handsomest county headquarters on the continent are those of Chester county W. C. T. U. at West Chester, Pa., Mrs. Ella B. Gordon, president. They are in a fine large building, stone front, and consist of a room twenty-two feet deep, with two small rooms in the rear and a lunch room. Kennett Square (the early home of Bayard Taylor, a fine old Quaker village) has headquarters for its W. C. T. U. also Phœnixville, both in the same county. ON DUTY.

CONNECTICUT.

GLEANINGS.

After several months of pleasant wanderings, I seat myself at my long unopened desk, and, brushing away the accumulated dust, try to gather again the scattered threads of my work. The very first object to claim my attention is our new state paper, The White-Ribbon Banner. We bespeak a hearty welcome for it. Its editor is the former editor of the W. C. T. U. column in The Home, Mrs. R. N. Stanley, who has associated with her Mrs. S. B. Forbes, state president, and Mrs. C. L. Diven, one of our brightest young women. The initial number is attractive in appearance and entertaining in matter, and is but a foretaste of the delights in store for us. Having thus heralded in the new year, we feel sure that 1890 will be a good year with us, for we look to our Banner to aid us very materially.

Every county union now holds two conventions annually, instead of one, as formerly, and Middlesex county held its first semi-annual convention in the First Congregational Church and chapel of Saybrook, January 30, where, despite threatening clouds and hidden sunshine, a goodly number gathered, and spent the day in profitable and interesting exercises. In the absence of the president the county secretary presided, and Miss Marion G. Chapman, secretary of the Saybrook union, acted as secretary pro tem. Among the visitors were Mrs. M. M. Andrews, state corresponding secretary; Mrs. C. H. Fitzgerald, superintendent of juvenile work; Mrs. J. H. Leeds, superintendent of UNION SIGNAL work; Mrs. M. L. Bogue, superintendent of social purity work, and Mr. A. M. Kendricks, of the order of the Sons of Temperance.

The exercises of the morning, aside from the usual routine of business, consisted of a devotional service conducted by Mrs. E. R. Hefflon, an address of welcome by Mrs. Robert Chapman, president of the Saybrook union, a paper on "W. C. T. U. Membership," by Miss Ellen A. Whitmore; a letter from Mrs. Forbes, a short address by Mrs. Andrews on "The State Work," and remarks by Mrs. Fitzgerald and Mr. Kendricks. After the noontide prayer, led by Mrs. Fitzgerald, the ladies repaired to the chapel, where a bountiful lunch was served to all.

During the intermission many came into the convention, and when the ladies were again called to order at two o'clock, a perceptible addition had been made to the number in attendance at the morning session.

After a short devotional exercise ,a paper was read by Mrs. M. L. Bogue, upon her work of social purity, which contained many helpful suggestions and earnest thoughts. This was followed by a paper by Mrs. Augusta Starr, on "Health and Hygiene." Miss H. E. Culver, one of the state's most energetic workers, sent a fine paper upon her line of work, "Scientific Temperance Instruction." This met the approval of the convention so thoroughly that by a unanimous vote it is to appear in our state paper. Mrs. R. N. Stanley also sent a bright letter to the convention, urging the claims of her department work among colored people, and the new paper. She also sent a package of Banners, which were distributed through the audience, and several subscribers were secured.

A charming letter was received from Mrs. H. B. Brown, from her sunny Southern retreat where she is spending the winter, in which she sent kindly greeting and sympathy, By vote of the convention this letter and that from the state president were replied to by the acting president.

Mrs. Leeds said a few words on behalf of our National organ, THE UNION SIGNAL, and subscribers were solicited. The Rev. Mr. Paine, pastor of the church, was introduced and spoke a few words of greeting. Mrs. Bogue introduced Mr. Willis N. Parker, a bright young man who is deeply interested in social purity work among boys, and who is himself a member of the White Cross Society, and is eager to interest other young men in raising themselves to a higher plane of manhood.

At four o'clock two meetings were held; the one in the church was in the interest of the Loyal Temperance Legions, and the exercises consisted of reports from the Legions, a paper on "Temperance Teaching in Sunday-Schools," prepared and read by Miss Abbie La Place, and an address by Mrs. Fitzgerald, which was followed by a poem, recited by its author, Miss Anna Jones. The gathering in the chapel was a boys' meeting conducted by Mr. Parker, whose subject was "The Complete Man," and who founded his remarks upon the words of David to his son, "Be thou strong, therefore, and show thyself a man."

A cordial invitation was sent by the Portland union to hold the next convention with them, which was accepted. Election of officers resulted in the reëlection of the old staff, Mrs. H. B. Brown, president; Miss M. B. Smith, secretary, and Miss E. A. Whitmore, treasurer. With the singing of a parting hymn the convention adjourned, and so ended our conference together. The local unions and Loyal Temperance Legions are still working bravely. The county is prosperous in many ways, and only the harvest time will reveal the result. With stronger faith and purpose the work is again undertaken, and thus working together as a unit, may Middlesex county become one of the best organized unions in the state!

The state minutes are printed, and are most interesting from cover to cover. We are now working in seventeen different departments, each line of work having an energetic superintendent at its head.

MICHIGAN.

ALL ALONG THE LINE.

At Detroit we had a State Prohibition Convention, at which Professor Dickie, ex-Governor St. John, and our own Mary T. Lathrap were the stars. The points in Mrs. Lathrap's paper on "Township and County Organization," were especially noticed and commended by the president. Since my last, our annual circular, prepared by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Wheeler, has come to all the unions in Michigan. The text heading is very suggestive: "Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." Mrs. Lathrap's letter beginning on this wise: "We send you this leaflet because it is a good time to 'speak often one to another'," after speaking of past loyalty, says: "Most women dislike a contest of any kind; but our work is not an easy one, and we need not expect unbroken peace. Our little lever is under foundations that will not be moved without resistance. We are not necessarily wrong because our peace or unity is broken. Even Christ said, 'I came to send a sword.' The answer to 'Truth in the Case' has been prepared by the appointed committee, and printed in THE UNION SIGNAL. We urge a careful reading by all our women, and as wide a circulation as possible among all where good will come of it. We ask for the utmost frankness. If any union or woman in Michigan feels disturbed; if any choose to walk no more with us, it is the part of fidelity to past relations, dear and sacred, not to criticise in discontent or go forth in anger, but to reason together. Let us come near to each other and to God. We need just now the unity of the human, the wisdom and strength of the Divine." She gave us also a plan for reading circles.

Our faithful treasurer, Mrs. Holden, gave an itemized report of the many gifts by kind friends to our suffering treasury, made empty by the bank failure of last fall. The unions of Michigan have been most liberal in making up this loss, also twenty of the superintendents sent words of suggestion in regard to their special lines for the coming year, the key-note of them all being to hold fast the ground already obtained. Our new department of ethical culture, Mrs. Jaynes superintendent, gives us these soul-stirring thoughts: "Our all-sided World's president allows little to escape her eagle eye which pertains to human need and human good. While our Mary H. Hunt has set us all keenly alive to the welfare of the 'house we live in,' and sent us out with the ringing words, 'Ye are your brothers' keepers,'—to make sure that the 18,000,000 living child temples in our land are built after the pattern pronounced good in Eden, the National President has this year sent all along the lines the potent thought, 'Keep the soul on top.' Every one's weal is each one's care."

From the ninth district, which of all responded most generously to the treasury fund, come these additional items: The Big Rapids union sends its eleven clergymen THE UNION SIGNAL, making them and their wives honorary members of the W. C. T. U. They have also here headquarters, in which a kindergarten is being held. This union, before this reaches you, will have held on February 22, "Ye Hatchet Partie."

The Oakland county convention, in sixth district, was postponed on account of the illness of the president.

Ingham county convention, the first held since re-organization, was at Lansing, a two days' session closing with a Demorest gold medal contest. This live president has brought the county up from three unions last June to nine at this time; a new Y just reported. She says, "When the work came to me, I said, 'This one thing I do,' so I squared out Ingham county on paper, and made a dot just where I wanted to plant unions this year; I had nineteen dots, but have not quite reached them yet. Am working at the twelfth, with several waiting to be organized."

The president of the fourth district, in writing of a medal contest held at Berrien Springs, says that the ladies of the union presented each of the unsuccessful contestants with books; to the girls, "Nineteen Beautiful Years"; to the boys, "Boys and Other Boys"; an example which I hope others will follow. St. Joseph union recently gave a social in the parlors of Mrs. W. W. Cooper. More than a hundred guests enjoyed the literary program, and at supper a "Timely Talk" was placed by each plate; the money taken was not a little, but who can estimate the influence of one such gathering in these times?

WORK IN WASHINGTON.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. of Chapin auxiliary held a large and interesting meeting at Central Union mission rooms, February 12. Mrs. J. A. Pickler, wife of Congressman Pickler, of South Dakota, gave the Scripture reading and led in prayer. Many earnest experiences were given. Three new superintendents of departments were announced as follows: Parliamentary usage, Mrs. J. A. Pickler; social purity, Mrs. Senator Pettigrew; scientific temperance instruction, Miss Louise Weightman. The new superintendents were all present and were introduced to the ladies.

It was announced that Miss Greenwood, of Brooklyn, a woman of rare culture and deep piety, would give Bible readings February 23-26, at three o'clock, the first day at the Congregational Church, and the others at the Church of the Covenant.

NOTES OF EARNEST WORK.

On January 14 a local option election was held in Lynchburg. It is said that there never was as much enthusiasm in Lynchburg over an election of any kind. Two weeks before the day appointed, this subject overtopped all others, and during this time the temperance people held meetings day and night, always with full houses, and at night to crowded houses. The audience, for the most part, was composed of the best classes of both races. It must have been inspiring to the speakers to view such an audience.

Colonel Cheves, of Georgia, Mr. Miller, Grand Chief Templar, with Captain I. N. Williams, were the white speakers. Among the colored, were the Revs. Granderson and Price, of North Carolina, Professor Vassar, of Lynchburg, and others. They worked nobly, and accomplished grand results, as will be seen.

Four years ago, when the first effort was made for local option, the measure was defeated by the large majority of 1,188, and on January 14 it is said that we were defeated by the very small majority of seven. In order to win, the opposition resorted to every means to secure votes. Up to noon, on the day of the final contest, the temperance people were certain of success, and the liquor party were almost certain of defeat. They were visibly discouraged. Their committee sent out dodgers with such accusations as might be expected from such a source, which were answered in time by the local option executive committee. As a final resort they got out a bogus ticket, by which they won the victory. To complete the fraud, the men who held these tickets wore the blue ribbon. Many ignorant persons voted these tickets, thinking they were "dry."

The W. C. T. U. bore its share of the burden. Prayer-meetings were held every afternoon. The ladies were at the polls early on the morning of the 14th, and were busy during the day furnishing coffee and sandwiches to the men. They were sorely in need of such attention, for many of the workers were out all day, not taking time to return home. The ladies met with some opposition in regard to the lunch stands. They persevered, and did a noble work.

Some of us were discouraged the morning after the election, when the dailies announced the result. But only for a little time; for, although the bar-room with all of its evil influences is still in our midst doing its dreadful work, yet we are planning and working in every way open to us to educate public sentiment against it, and we hope eventually to drive the hydra-headed monster out of our city, county and state; and then, by uniting hands North and South, East and West, drive it from our own America. Let us do our duty and look to our Father with eyes of faith for the grand result.

Public sentiment has changed very much within the last four years in our city, as the figures prove; then 1,188 majority; now only seven. This is very encouraging. And think of it! The school children are almost a unit on the abolition of the bar-room. Boys and girls have their influence, and they will be men and women in a few years, and the boys will be ready to cast their ballots against this soul-destroying traffic.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Temperance work is moving slowly in our state, but it is gaining in solidity and strength as scarcely ever before. The special movement on foot now is the Demorest medal contests. These are being held in all parts of the state, and reports show that much good is being done in this way. We are just starting our first competing class in Fayetteville. Everybody seems to be interested, and the only wonder is that we did not begin the work months ago.

The W. C. T. U. work in our state is in a healthy condition. Though smaller in numbers than in the past, the workers who remain are devoted, tried and true. Our last state convention showed a large amount of work well done, and the workers full of faith and a determination to do even better in the future than in the past. Our president has sacrificed time and money in her labors as few others would have done. She is faithful and devoted, and has, as she deserves to have, the warmest love of W. C. T. U. women throughout the state. Our other state officers are loyal and efficient, and their places, if eft vacant by death or resignation, would be hard to fill.

The seceders have, I think, very little sympathy in this state. I know of no one who would be willing to leave the National Union to go with them. It seems to us so natural for Prohibitionists, as all W. C. T. U. women are, to lean towards that party, of whatever name, that is the best exponent of their principles, that we wonder how any one could object to their doing so.

The "race question" is assuming great proportions throughout the country. Almost every difficulty between the two races has its origin in liquor. Yet every such difficulty may be found in papers throughout the country under the heading of "Race Riots in the South," when, nine times out of ten, it is nothing more than a whisky brawl, and deserves no more special notice or comment than any other whisky brawl in the North or South, or East or West. When men or women, of whatever color, show themselves worthy of honor, they should receive their dues, and will in the end in the nature of things; and gradually the vexed question will settle itself, if permitted to do so.

The General Conference of the M. E. Church South will meet in St. Louis, May 7. All W. C. T. U. workers in the department of unfermented wine will watch the proceedings with greatest interest, as we are earnestly hoping that they will pass a resolution directly recommending the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper. At their last meeting in Richmond, four years ago, they passed this resolution (found on page 199 of the Conference journal):

"Resolved, That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is opposed to the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes."

There being no exception made in favor of their use for sacramental purposes, the resolution practically commits the great Southern Methodist Church to the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper. But the attention of the church has not been called to the matter as it would be if they should directly recommend the use of unfermented wine. So we are hoping that this time they will pass a resolution directly recommending the use of unfermented, non-alcoholic wine at communion. This church has a larger following in the South than almost any other. And such a resolution would do incalculable good in this particular line of our work. May God guide their deliberations, and help them to decide the matter aright.

BERKSHIRE COUNTY CONVENTION.

This was held in the Congregational Chapel in Dalton, Friday, January 31. Miss Elisabeth Tobey, state president, Mrs. Helen G. Rice, state superintendent of Sunday-school and juvenile work, and many other honored ladies were present to enliven and entertain as well as instruct the convention. The meeting was called to order with a few appropriate words by Mrs. J. Lee McCutcheon, our county president, followed by singing, "My Faith Looks up to Thee." Devotional exercises were conducted by Miss Clemence Bull, in a very impressive manner. Rev. Mr. Andrews, pastor of the Congregational Church, gave us earnest and hearty words of welcome in behalf of the Sons of Temperance, through whose kindness we were invited to Dalton (there being no union there). Mrs. Sarah Spalding responded in behalf of the convention in a graceful and thoughtful manner.

Interesting reports of superintendents followed; especially so were those on literature, by Mrs. H. E. Smith; Temperance Temple, by Mrs. Brigham; railroad work by Mrs. Henry, and scientific temperance instruction by Mrs. Lewis. After the noontide prayer, led by Mrs. Electa Collin, was voted to send resolutions of sympathy to Miss Bessie Gordon, our state corresponding secretary, who by her unselfish devotion, self-sacrificing spirit, and unceasing interest in the work throughout the state, has been obliged, on account of ill health, to lay aside the work for a season.

The afternoon session opened with prayer and Bible reading by Miss Tobey, from Exodus, third and fourth chapters. Encouraging reports were then given from the different unions; roll call showing the presence of seventeen delegates and eighteen visitors from the local unions. Mrs. Helen G. Rice gave a very instructive talk on Sunday-school and juvenile work. The committee on resolutions reported excellent resolutions, which were unanimously adopted. The address by the state president gave us most practical and valuable suggestions on different branches of labor, also encouraging reports of the work throughout the state, and urged activity in the different departments. She closed her remarks by asking all to consecrate themselves anew to the work, and open our hearts to let God do with us according to His will. Mrs. H. E. Smith gave a very able paper on what the W. C. T. U. was doing, as she saw it from her standpoint. A report of the National Convention was then given by our county president, which was gladly received and listened to with great interest.

The evening session was held in the Congregational Church, the Sons of Temperance attending in a body. The music throughout the whole day and evening was very fine, especially the beautiful solos by Mrs. Lucas, which were enjoyed by all. Mrs. Helen G. Rice read the Scripture lesson from the thirty-first of Isaiah, after which the Rev. Mr. Noble, pastor of the Methodist Church, offered prayer. She speaker of the evening was the beloved National superintendent of evangelistic work, Elizabeth W. Greenwood, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The foundation of her remarks was our motto, "God and Home and Native Land," and was listened to with close attention by a large audience. The convention was pronounced an inspiring success. The kindness and hospitality of the Dalton people could not be excelled, and may the unseen and uncounted results of our convention far exceed those which are noted!

DEMOREST MEDAL CONTESTS.

Wright county, Iowa, has the honor of winning a gold medal. Eight silver medals have been won at eight contests conducted on the plan laid down by the Prohibition Bureau, and on January 24, 1890, the contest was held for the gold medal.

The medal was awarded to Addie Theodosia Whiting, aged fourteen, she rendering, "The Enormity of the Liquor Traffic," by Bishop Foster. Ray Hemenway, of Dows, stood No. 2, and Anna Swenson, who promises much for the future, stood No. 3.

One school, consisting of Norwegians, Danes and Germans, taught by Miss E. G. Whiting, a loyal Y, took three silver medals, the contest work being entered upon with great zeal and interest by the young, and encouraged by the parents. Four of the eight silver medals were won by foreigners, and it is a surprise to all who listen how they can so fully enter into the spirit of the authors as to convey their thoughts so perfectly to others. We think this excellent work in the educational line.

DEMOREST MEDAL CONTEST IN PHILADELPHIA.

The contest of the Loyal Temperance Legion for the Demorest silver medal was held at the Diamond Street M. E. Church, Friday, February 14. The competitors were members of the Sabbath-school.

Besides the recitations, they had vocal and instrumental solos, duets, quartettes by first-class artists, also piano whistling solo. The church was crowded, and many were unable to procure seats, but rather than be disappointed, the great crowd stood, enjoying the entertainment, and patiently waiting for the decision of the judges, who declared Miss Georgie Hussy the successful winner of the prize medal, which was presented in very fitting words by Rev. W. J. Mills, the pastor.

WORK AT TITUSVILLE.

A union meeting of different denominations was held in the Presbyterian Church to celebrate the fifteenth anniversary of the Woman's Crusade. The Crusade hymn was well rendered by the choir; the Crusade psalm was read by the pastor; the president of the W. C. T. U. read "What it Meant," from THE UNION SIGNAL. Several ministers spoke on different phases of the work. The pastor of the Methodist Church made the principal address of the evening, which was logical and eloquent. The large church was well filled. The meeting closed with a good collection.

On Monday evening, December 23, a glowing camp fire was lighted in the Baptist Church, at which were given music and appropriate recitations by the children. "Reminiscences" from THE UNION SIGNAL were read by ladies of the union. Our president, Mrs. P. A. Painter, an original Crusader from Ohio, related some thrilling incidents out of her own recollections of that wonderful uprising of women. We all felt a rekindling of the fire of that glorious Pentecost which shall glow through all time.

CRYSTAL UNION NOTES.

The Crystal union, whose domain lies upon the fair north side of this bustling city of Spokane, celebrated Crusade Day in unison with her many sisters. The parlors of Spokane College were well filled with members of the W. C. T. U. from different parts of the city. Mrs. A. P. Crystal, our efficient president, had arranged an interesting program. The Crusade Psalm and grand old "Rock of Ages," with other Crusade hymns, had an honored place. Sketches of Mother Thompson, Mrs. Woodbridge, and other leaders were read by different ladies.

Short and breezy scraps of the later work and history of the W. C. T. U. and of the last National Convention were then given. The little band of women seemed quite thrilled with the old-time Crusade spirit. A solemn service of re-consecration to the work was led by Mrs. Abernethy, of the Leavitt union. All felt new inspiration for the good work as a result of this Crusade Day.

Dr. Orpha D. Baldwin, National superintendent of health and heredity, has been treating us to some of her good sense as well as science, upon important subjects.

Her afternoon lecture, to women only, was well attended though the "chinook" blew and the snow lay deep. The combined wisdom and common sense which Dr. Baldwin teaches should make every W. C. T. U. wife and mother dress and cook wisely and well. Her excellent lecture, "How to Make Life Worth Living," was delivered to a mixed audience that appreciated her treatment of the subject. Over thirty dollars were raised at this lecture, entitling our union to an honorary life patron. This honor was conferred upon Mrs. C. A. Hamblen, our worthy treasurer, who has recently been bereft of her husband, an honorary member of the Crystal union.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A MEMBERSHIP of thirty is reported from the Aurora, Neb., W. C. T. U., and the society is doing good work. It is hoped that much literature may be distributed before the amendment campaign is over.

A BLESSED work has been done by Jennie Smith, National superintendent of railroad work, in Ludlow, Ky.; over twenty-five middle-aged persons have become Christians, one over seventy-five years of age, all railroad people. An association will be organized there. The meetings at the shop have reached people who have not been in a church from five to thirty years.

THE W. C. T. U. of Preston Minn., mourn the loss by death, of Mrs. Alice Conkey, their superintendent of social purity work. She died of consumption in Los Angeles, Cal., where she had gone in the hope of finding health and strength. Appropriate resolutions were passed by the union, in memory of this beloved worker.

MRS. M. E. COHEN 513 F street, Washington, D. C., is appointed recording secretary of the district in place of Mrs. Lydia W. Tilton, and Miss Lavinia Chace is no longer superintendent of soldiers' and sailors' department.

MRS. L. S. ROUNDS, state president of Illinois W. C. T. U., spoke seventeen times lately, within two weeks in Wisconsin, making the first address February 9, and returning to Chicago February 21. She is now in New York filling a series of important engagements which will occupy her time until the last of March.

MRS. HAGAR A. MURRELL, president of the W. C. T. U., and principal of the Garnet School at Pollocksville, North Carolina, writes this touching appeal: "I have organized in my day school a society called 'Careful Builders.' We now have thirty-seven boys and girls that have signed their names to the 'Careful Builders'' pledge. I am teaching a school for the Freedmen, which is a power for good in this place. A great many of the children in the school are very poor as well as illiterate; some of them have no father and some have no mother, and I would be very glad if the friends of Christ's poor would help me to some second-hand clothing for them. The poor parents are not able to clothe the children as they ought to be clothed, consequently, many of them suffer in the cold winter. Some of the children who read this may have old, outgrown dresses or old shoes that will do to scare the cold; these, or anything else that you may send, will be gratefully received by these poor children."

THE Aberdeen, North Dakota, union, mourns the loss of a beloved and honored co-worker, Mrs. Sophia C. White, who fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of February 3, at Casselton. Mrs. A. E. Cranmer wrote this heartfelt tribute: "No one in North Dakota was more thoroughly consecrated to the temperance work. To Mrs. White, more than any other woman, was due the victory of constitutional prohibition. Unceasingly she worked for months at her desk, as assistant secretary of the Non-partisan Prohibition Alliance, receiving no remuneration for her services except the secret consciousness of having done what she could for the cause which lay so near her heart. As a token of appreciation she was sent as fraternal delegate by the Alliance to the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Chicago, and it seems but yesterday since her earnest, thoughtful face was seen in that wonderful gathering of women. She was a faithful Christian, and a devoted wife and mother. Heartfelt sympathy goes out for the invalid husband and the little son and daughter in this saddest of afflictions."

BY an invitation from the local union of Havre de Grace, Maryland, Dr. Anna Shaw lectured February 10, in the Presbyterian Church to a large and appreciative audience on "Temperance Reform." Representatives of all the churches in the city was present, and prominent among these on the platform was the Rev. Father Hannan, of St. Patrick's Church, who is very active in temperance work here. Miss Shaw held her audience with wonderful interest for over an hour and a half. The church was beautifully decorated and appropriate vocal and instrumental music was rendered.

MRS. HIBBEN writes from Peoria, Ill.: "Those of your readers who were privileged during our late National Convention to listen to the Bible expositions of Miss Elizabeth Scovel, may be interested to know something more of the work of this gifted, consecrated woman. Peoria has just been favored with a visit of eight days from her, that may be written as red-letter days on the hearts of very many Christians in our city. The meetings were held each afternoon during the week, in the beautiful new chapel of the Second Presbyterian Church, with large and constantly increasing attendance and interest, and on Sunday the main audience room of the church was filled to overflowing, some nine hundred being present, and many failing to gain entrance. Miss Scovel has a keen, logical mind, a wonderful flow of strong, simple language, that pours forth like a river; a gentle, sweet, womanly manner; all being dominated by the power of the Holy Spirit to a very unusual degree, which carries her message with great power to hungry hearts. Many, through this rich feast of heavenly things, have been quickened to a higher spiritual life, and we believe the precious seed-sowing will ripen into an abundant harvest. We praise the Lord that He has raised up this blessed messenger, and clothed her with such rare spiritual power, and we pray that He may give us many more as richly endowed for His service."

THE following is Miss De Velling's plan for supplying her audiences with temperance literature: "At my request, several gentlemen or ladies pass through the audience and serve those who desire the literature. All are quietly given a chance to secure it. None are urged; those who desire it, extend their hand, and pay their money as the messenger passes their seat, and the package is delivered to them. In some places I put up and offer them packages worth ten cents each. In the South this was largely my custom. In the North the five-cent packages seem to answer the purpose better. In this way I have put into the hands of people who would care enough for them to read them, over fifty thousand pages of clean, pure, helpful literature in the five years since the plan first occurred to me. As a rule, people who care enough for temperance literature to read it, are willing to pay what it costs, and most of those who do not care to invest five cents in the liberal-sized package I furnish them for that sum, would scarcely have interest enough in the matter to read the literature if it were given to them, as I have abundantly proved. The old-fashioned way of thrusting literature upon people without money or price, greatly cheapened it in people's estimation. I am trying to dignify the use of literature in public meetings, and know that my plan succeeds in doing this, and also in doing much good in other directions."

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

The time is drawing near when the petition of the World's W. C. T. U. for prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors and narcotics will be presented to the potentates of the nations. Sixteen million signatures, individual and representative, have been secured to the petition for a Sunday Rest Law in these United States. Surely such petition as ours, reaching to the wide world, should not receive a less number.

It is thought that this unparalleled success may be somewhat traceable to the manner of presentation, and we are thus led to the adoption of a similar form of heading, by which the petition may be presented to every church; to religious, educational and medical associations: to lodges of every form; to labor and other organizations, located, or appointed meetings in any city or borough.

An energetic effort on the part of unions would greatly increase the number of signatures and add mightily to the power of the petition. "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession," is a divine promise. Its fulfillment cannot be, while a legalized liquor traffic exists. Should not the World's petition be of equal interest to women's missionary societies of every denomination, in all of which W. C. T. U. women have membership? Believing it to be so, we earnestly ask the union of their effort with ours, that our united prayer for the coming of the kingdom of our Lord may be made potential by our own signatures, and those of others thus secured. May we not believe that these, reaching the eyes of human rulers, will, under the blessing of Christ, the Sovereign of the world, move their hearts to the overthrow of the evils we seek to banish?

Copies of the petition, and of the heading (to be pasted upon the same) in number sufficient to meet all demand, may be secured by application to me. Please write very plainly the number desired and full address of person to whom they should be forwarded.

EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT.

COURSES OF STUDY.

In order to extend to the masses of W. C. T. U. workers the benefits of the Evangelistic Department Course of Study, the instructor, after conference with Miss Willard, has decided to offer abridged Courses of Study and of Reading, extending through four years. These courses are as follows:

1. The W. C. T. U. Evangelistic Course. Tuition, ten dollars per year. Text-books not over five dollars per year. Open to all persons.

2. The W. C. T. U. English Course. Tuition, five dollars per year. No text-books but a revised Bible. Open to W. C. T. U. members only.

3. The W. C. T. U. Greek Course. Tuition, one dollar per year. No text-books needed. Open to W. C. T. U. members only. For similar tuition all others are paying five dollars.

4. The W. C. T. U. Bible Reading Course. Tuition, one dollar per year. No text-book but a revised Bible.

These Courses are completely described in a Private Circular that will be sent to any person addressing the instructor, at Cambridge, Mass.

In THE UNION SIGNAL for February 13, it was stated that a patron of the Course of Study had arranged to pay one-half the tuition fee of the first six women who should apply for membership in the W. C. T. U. English Bible Course. Up to date there have been sixteen applications, all of them full of rejoicing that this work had thus been placed within their reach. I have been compelled to write to the ten, that I regret I can do no more than file their applications, state the facts in THE UNION SIGNAL, appeal to patrons of the Course of Study, and as soon as any one sends me $2.50, send the applicant next on the list her instructions and work.

Will you, dear reader, "help those women" that are "fellow athletes" with us all in the gospel? And do you know that I have a "Private Circular" issued only to members of the W. C. T. U., and relating to "Courses of Study"? Write for it, addressing me at 9 Clinton Street, Cambridge, Mass.

PROMOTION OF SOCIAL PURITY.

PURITY IN LITERATURE AND ART.

In this department we are to labor against the spurious in literature and art, and to establish in the highest degree possible the best and truest in both. The land is flooded with evil things, and there is an imperative need that women shall lay their hands upon them to destroy them.

The first business of this department is to be the carrying of a petition addressed to the Congressmen of the various states, asking them to so amend the United States postal law, that the Police Gazette, and papers and books like it, principally made up of stories of crime and criminals, shall have no right to carriage in our United States mails, as they now have.

Miss Willard, in her annual address, recommended that we carry a petition of this kind in order to obtain the amendment of our law. This is very necessary, as in some of our states the United States postal law is in direct conflict with the law of the state on this subject, and therefore needs to be brought into harmony.

It is desirable that in each state and territory the women make a list of all objectionable or doubtful "shows," so called, and especially of those which display bad advertisements, and that they send these to their National superintendent, that steps may be taken to check these worst features. Also all bad publications, so far as possible, should be listed and reports made, that we may known in the whole United States what we have to oppose.

I desire also that each state superintendent shall send me a copy of the law of her state concerning obscene pictures, etc., and bad literature. In order to make good literature as easy of access to our youth as the bad, it seems desirable that efforts should be made everywhere for the establishment of free libraries of good literature. Some states have made most excellent provisions for the establishment of these by law—notably Illinois. I would be glad to receive from state superintendents copies of all laws relating to the establishment of free libraries, and also reports of those already established. I hope the work of this department may be pushed as never before during the coming year.

The Peace of Europe.

The peace of Europe depends upon the will of one monarch. He has but to speak, and a bloody war will ensue. And yet this mighty ruler, with thousands of his subjects, bravest officers and soldiers, has been forced to submit. To what? To an epidemic catarrh, a cold in the head. After all, disease is the great conqueror.

But read what Compound Oxygen has done for the alleviation and cure not only of catarrh, but other chronic diseases:

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"Before using your Compound Oxygen Treatment, I supposed I had consumption, but now my lungs are sound."
MRS. H. L. HADLEY, Seneca Falls, N. Y.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"I have had catarrh for about 23 years. I have tried various remedies and found no relief until I tried your Compound Oxygen Treatment." F. B. D. VAUGHN, Higley, Fla.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"I have used your Compound Oxygen Treatment for catarrh and have been greatly benefited by it." R. C. FOSTER, Greenville, S. C., July 19, 1888.

You will find more evidence in our brochure of 200 pages. It treats of Compound Oxygen, its nature, discovery and results.

This book is sent free. It is the result of twenty years' experience in the treatment of over 55,000 patients. Read the record of cases, and you will, no doubt, find some similar to your own. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

CHILDHOOD: Its Care and Culture.

is the title of a book that must commend itself to every one interested in the future welfare of our country. "The childhood of to-day is the nation of to-morrow; there is no more important work than its care and culture." For many reasons this book takes a place peculiarly its own. It is written by a woman of rare experience and educational power—Mary Allen West. For many years a teacher, and leader of teachers, and with the one thought ever uppermost of doing all the good possible to all with whom she came in contact, her life of steady literary labor results in great breadth of character.

"Childhood: Its Care and Culture," has been a work of loving care. A glance over its pages will convince any reader that here speaks one who knows—and that this is a sincere and earnest attempt "to impress parents with a sense of the dignity, the responsibility and the privilege of parenthood, and to help them in a measure to rightly 'think God's thoughts after Him.'"

The book contains nearly 800 pages, and is beautiful and attractive, and worthy of the careful perusal of both old and young. For terms to solicitors, apply to us or to the general agents, R. S. King, Publishing Company, 278 Michigan Ave., Chicago. Address WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Don't forget Vaughan's Seed Store, 148 W. Washington St., Chicago. It is a very large and reliable house, and is worthy your patronage.

A Fine Common-Sense Cart.

There is nothing in the carriage line that has become more popular in the last few years than the two-wheel road carts. Although there are many kinds and styles, none has gained so much public favor and popularity as the "Murray Improved Elegant," it being a high-class cart in every respect, having a good-sized bundle-rack under the seat where packages can be carried, which makes it very convenient and practical. The attention of our readers is called to the advertisement of the manufacturers of this cart in another column. The Murray Mfg. Co. are manufacturers of the "Murray" $55.95 Buggies and $5.95 Harness, and a full line of all kinds of vehicles and harness. We would advise all who contemplate buying anything in this line to write for their catalogue and prices. The address is Wilber H. Murray Mfg. Co., 139 W. Front St. Cincinnati, O.

BOMBAY, IND.

To-day's mail brought the first W. C. T. U. pin that I have seen. I am delighted with it. In this climate it will be a great comfort, and to travelers it will come to be known as the ever-ready pin.

E. BRAINERD RYDER.

PORTLAND, ORE.

I have just received the sample sent of the "new W. C. T. U. pin," for which please accept special thanks. I am much pleased with its style, and shall take great pleasure in commending it to the white-ribboners of Oregon. Only this morning I met Rev. Mr. Marks, of Wasco, Eastern Oregon, who tells me that they have absolute prohibition in the town of Wasco, which fact is due to the influence of the W. C. T. U. which is strongly inforced by a goodly number of honorary members, all of which esteem it a privilege to wear the W. C. T. U. badge along with their sisters in the temperance work. I think the gentlemen will hail with joy the new W. C. T. U. pin, as it is better protected against dust and other unfriendly influences than the usual ribbon badge.

MRS. A. R. RIGGS, State Pres.

VIRGINIA CITY, VA.

The new W. C. T. U. pin is "as neat as a pin." I know of nothing that suits my fancy better, except the simple white ribbon. LUCY M. VAN DEVENTER.

A G. and U. Offer!

Do you want an opportunity to get your own UNION SIGNAL free,

Absolutely Free,

for one year? Well, then, if you send us the names of three new subscribers (with $3.00), we will extend the time of your subscription one year from its present date. This offer is good

Till July 1st Only!

Any use of a lot of arguing? It's a good offer—plain, simple, easily accomplished. If you run across three of the people, tell them you'll advance the dollar needed, and come to them for two cents each week! Try that once. You might have the paper sent to you, and you collect the two cents on delivery of same. It would not be long before they would pay up and say,

C. A. I.

Can't Afford to Do Without It!

Wouldn't it be fine, now, if half our list would get 3 new names each? 40,000 x 3 = 120,000 + 80,000 = 200,000!! Just think of it!

{and please do a good deal more than just think. "Done" has only two more letters than "Do."}

Scintillations.

WHITESVILLE, N. Y.

Inclosed please find $3. I wish Frances Willard's "Glimpses of Fifty Years," and one celluloid pin. Please send at once. I cannot get the book of an agent, and I must have it. Our union owns it, and I've been reading it, and feel that I can't live one day without it in my home. I shall keep the copy I have and give the new one to the union, as it seemed impossible for me to read that book and not mark it all along for reference and re-reference. What a book! "Full orchestra," indeed; and what a life. I'd like a thousand shares in such a life, at once. Tell the world that it does not and cannot know Frances Willard until it reads her "Glimpses of Fifty Years." There is ammunition and power in it to revolutionize the world. It is a "liberal education." Blessings be upon her head who so faithfully wrote it out.

REV. EMMA E. BAILEY.

The new celluloid pin is just as near being a ribbon bow as can be, and not be. It is just what we want, because we can wear it every day, and have it look fresh and graceful all the time.

The white-ribbon bow, dear as it is to every member of the sisterhood, will get awry and soiled sometimes. We shall always cling to the ribbon for state occasions, but for constant wear the celluloid pin will certainly come in favor.

MARY E. BALCH.

"The work is new here, but the leaven is working. God and THE UNION SIGNAL are the best helpers we know."

"To those who 'can't afford to take THE UNION SIGNAL,' let me say that if you will really try to see how you can save two cents a week—one egg! a small piece of butter! an infinitesimal bit of ribbon, you will find out how to afford it—but alas! those are the folks my urging won't reach."—True, and those who read these columns must act as the messenger, will they?—[PUBLISHER.]

Children always Enjoy It.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

of pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda is almost as palatable as milk. Children enjoy it rather than otherwise. A MARVELLOUS FLESH PRODUCER it is indeed, and the little lads and lassies who take cold easily, may be fortified against a cough that might prove serious, by taking Scott's Emulsion after their meals during the winter season.

Beware of substitutions and imitations.

"MURRAY" No foe, no dangerous pass they heed; Brook no delay, but onward speed With loosened rein; And when the fatal snare is near They strive to check their mad career, But strive in vain. "MURRAY"

THE HOT SHOT

that we have poured into the Buggy and Harness Pools and Trusts for the last year has had a tendency to make them try to stop their mad career.

WE ARE THE UNLOOKED-FOR FOE

that have overthrown the High Priced Buggy and Harness Factories who have joined in the "Pools" and "Trusts" to enrich themselves and impoverish the consumers by giving them inferior goods at exorbitant prices.

OURS HAS BEEN A HARD FIGHT

with all the Buggy and Harness Factories and Agents against us. They have done everything in their power to overthrow us. But we were on the right side, "the side of the people," and with their hearty support we have achieved

A GLORIOUS VICTORY

of which our Gigantic Business is a positive and certain proof. The Millionaire Pool-Trust Buggy men and their Agents have lost lots of their valuable (?) time in trying to injure the sale of the "Murray" Buggies and Harness, but have made a glorious failure of it, and they have found out to their sore regret that

YOU CAN NOT KEEP A GOOD THING DOWN.

While they have been trying to injure our business, instead of remedying their existing evil, we have been gaining ground, and have now risen so far above them, that it takes a powerful microscope for us to distinguish their dying struggles. Our "Murray" Buggies and Harness do not have to be talked up, for they do all the talking themselves, and we can give no better recommendation than the goods themselves.

WE SELL DIRECT TO THE CONSUMER

and from the hearty support we have received from them, justifies the decision, that they know where to buy the Best and Cheapest Buggies and Harness. We are progressive, and do not allow the moss to grow on our backs in these days of electricity and steam, but keep abreast of the times, and with unlimited facilities, are always adding to and improving the "Murray" goods in every way that is possible and judicious; and this year finds the "Murray" Buggies and Harness even better than they were last year.

SOME OF OUR PRICES:

HARNESS.

All "Murray" Harness is made of Best No. 1 Oak Tanned Leather.

No. 1 Murray Single Harness $5.95
NO. 2 Murray Single Harness $9.85
No. 3 Murray Single Harness $10.95
No. 4 Murray Double Harness $15.20

A "MURRAY" $66.90 TURNOUT. This turnout includes our Brewster Side Bar "Murray" Buggy and our No. 3 Single Strap Trotting or Track Harness, with either Open or Blind Bridle, as desired.

BUGGIES.

All "Murray" Buggies have double Collar Steel Axles and double bolted Wheels, with screwed rims, which prevent all possibility of splitting.

MURRAY BREWSTER SIDE BAR TOP BUGGY $55.95
MURRAY END SPRING TOP BUGGY $55.95
MURRAY JUMP SEAT CANOPY TOP SURREY $99.00
MURRAY ROAD CART, $15.00

Write us for our large, illustrated Catalogue, containing full description and Net Cash Prices of the "Murray" Buggies and Harness; also book containing words of praise from people in all parts of the United States, who have bought, tried and tested our goods; and then read them carefully, and we know that you will not buy nor use anything but our celebrated "Murray" Vehicles and Harness. Address all letters plainly to

Baby Barendse,

Three months old when cured by the use of

Steketee's Worm Destroyer.

Read what its mother says:

"The undersigned has a child only three months old. It became sick with pains in its bowels and stomach when scarcely two months old. It cried and whined nearly all the time, and was completely run down in flesh. We gave it everything that we thought would relieve the child, but it grew worse all the time. We made twenty powders from a teaspoonful of Steketee's Worm Destroyer, gave it one powder three times daily. To our astonishment it was relieved of thousands of worms. We have given the child but twenty powders. It is entirely cured. I shall always recommend Steketee's Worm Destroyer. MRS. B. BARENDSE, Oakdale Park, Kent Co., Mich.

Signal Notes.

WHAT is the Irish question? It is the whisky question. If the Irish had been able to live in their true majesty and conquer the appetite for drink, there would be no nobler people. There are no more loyal hearts on the face of the earth. Whisky is the cause of the Irish question. The whisky bill of Ireland is $2,250,000, which is more than the whole rental of the country.—Canon Wilberforce.

A FRIEND writes The Boston Transcript concerning Miss Elizabeth Peabody: "I see her every week or so, and find her lovely in her waiting to go up higher—no whining, no fretting, no garrulousness. Upon my asking her recently if death had any sadness for her, she said quickly: 'Oh, no; death is only more life.'"

A SOLDIERS' institute has just been opened at Woolwich, England, free from drink, and in every respect made most attractive.

GENERAL RAUM stated as follows at the nineteenth annual convention of the Brewers' Association, amid great applause: "More than $10,000,000 are realized to the public treasury from the manufacture and sale of the products of the breweries." He also congratulated them thus: "American malt liquors are now successfully exported to England, Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia, and the islands of the sea."

THE W. C. T. U. recently gave a reception to three hundred guests at the new "Hotel Fredonia," in Washington, D. C., whose hostess, Mrs. La Fetra, is the president of the District. Assisting Mrs. La Fetra were Mrs Senator Pettigrew, of South Dakota; Mrs Ormiston Chant, of England; Mrs. Representative Pickler, of South Dakota, and Miss Greenwood.

THE State Prohibition Convention was held recently in Indianapolis, Ind. It was strictly a delegate convention, but the attendance of earnest Prohibitionists other than delegates made a larger crowd than has ever attended a state convention before. A number of white-ribbon women were among the accredited delegates from the counties. A full ticket of state offices was nominated. They are good men and true. A new state central committee was selected, on which appear the names of Mrs. G. Hazleton, of Gibson county; Miss Mary Hadley, of Parke county; Mrs. A. J. Pollock and Mrs. R. T. Brown, of Marion county.

THE Salvation Army recently sent abroad thirty officers to continental and colonial stations. Their work among the Tamil coolies is very successful.

AT Hunnewell, Kansas, two violators of the prohibitory law were found guilty in a recent trial, Charles Petersen pleading to three guilty counts, received a fine of $300 and ninety days in jail, and Frank Petersen pleading guilty to one count got a fine of $100 and thirty days in jail. They were also adjudged to pay the costs.

THE Brewers' Journal gives what it states to be an authentic list of all the American breweries which have, so far, passed into the control of English buyers. The list includes thirty-three breweries, consolidated into seventeen companies that have passed into English hands, the gross value being stated at £9,013,000.

A RECENT letter states that as one of the results of Major Hilton's recent work in Pomona, California, J. L. King, a violator of the law, was brought to trial and convicted, the court fining him $100. The upholders of the saloon in Pomona are so incensed at the honest interpretation of the law, that they threaten to burn the new M. E. Church (in which Major Hilton's meetings were held), and to kill Rev. J. W. Phelps, the pastor, state Senator McComas, and Dr. Brown; and armed guards are stationed to protect property and lives from these murderous contributors to the nation's revenues.

THE following resolution was passed by the Aqua Pura Lodge of Good Templars, Chicago, in regard to the proposed lottery scheme in North Dakota:

"WHEREAS, We gratefully acknowledge the service of the public press and the fearless and uncompromising attitude of honorable men of various creeds and parties who have wisely counseled against the base offer of gold for public virtue, Therefore,

"Resolved, That wherein we have given permission for the existence and license of the saloon evil for a money consideration, we have parted with public virtue and honor, have accepted and are cursed with a bribe. The proceeds may fittingly be applied toward a new 'potter's field,' and poor-house, the criminal court and county jail, bridewell, insane asylums and police protection."

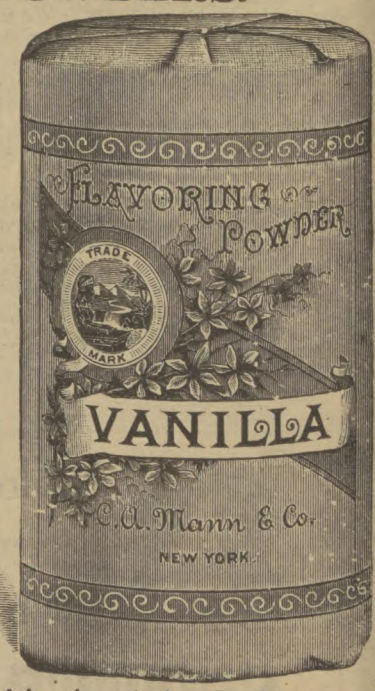
FLAVORING POWDERS.



Social entertainment in this country is becoming more of an art every year. When one rode twenty miles to an apple paring or a quilting bee, the affair itself was an event, and meeting one's friends was sufficient entertainment. There are more of us now, and we live closer together as a rule. We see each other two or three times a day sometimes, and we feel the desire for something new to do or talk about. The result, when we come to think of it, shows that care and originality have been put into entertaining, so that it no longer resembles the old ideas of hospitality at all, except in the good feeling which has prompted it. Who thinks of all the new and pretty devices for enjoyment, we wonder? The odd and fanciful souvenirs, without which it is said society refuses to be amused. The tasteful arrangements for tea-drinking, from the Russian Samovar to the funny looking Chinese ball, made of gold or silver net-work, opening in half, to be filled with fine tea and swung by a chain into your cup of boiling water until it is of the right color. The list is endless. We don't have tea-parties any more. In their place we give Japanese Teas, Pink Suppers, Nut Socials, Lemon Parties and Conversaziones,—anything, so long as the idea is new and attractive. Hard work has done it, too.
No inventor will admit that his greatest achievements have been due to inspiration. It was hard thinking, he will tell you, and the careful notice of trifling details. This is true of less important work. The story of the accidental discovery of the telescope by means of a child's playing with two lenses, is very pleasant, but such accidents are rare. Our Flavoring Powders were not the result of any inspiration. They are the outcome of careful attention and study as to the best means of putting up flavorings, and they are far more satisfactory to those who have tried them than the Liquid Flavorings. A lady writes us that she finds the Strawberry Powder excellent for coloring icing for cake. With regard to the Vanilla Powder, which colors the article flavored about the same as nutmeg does, she says: "This is easily avoided by tying the requisite quantity in a bit of cloth, which is then soaked or boiled in a little water or milk till the colored juice can be pressed out with a spoon. This can be used like the alcoholic flavoring in white cakes, frostings, etc. The little bag of powder can be thrown into milk for custards while it is heating, and taken out when sufficient flavor is imparted. If quickly dried and carefully kept, it can be used a second time." If your grocer does not keep the Powders, and will not order a supply of them, send us 50 cents, and we will mail you a 1-ounce bottle each of the Lemon and Vanilla Powders to try. Also satin packets Powdered Perfumes, sent by mail for 30 cents each.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

A rich vein of coal has been discovered near Chamberlain, S. Dakota.

The new mayor of Duluth holds pronounced views upon temperance, and promises to give saloon-keepers all the law there is.

A "special" to the Chicago Tribune says of the election held last week in Otsego, Mich.: "The Republicans and Democrats fused to beat the Prohibitionists. A saloon will now open in the temperance village."

The Mississippi river in front of New Orleans has passed the high water mark of 1874, and is now the highest on record. A crevasse in the levee at Arkansas City threatens the whole Tensas basin with inundation.

Henry Colby, famous in Northwestern Iowa as the originator of the "blind pig" system of liquor selling, has given up the struggle against the prohibitory law of the state. He paid a fine of $2,000 last Saturday, and signed an agreement to quit his surreptitious business. He has fought the state for years, but evidently believes now that prohibition is, and that it is not going to be repealed.

Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross Society of America, has ascertained by personal investigation that there is necessity for immediate action in relieving the distresses of the pioneer settlers of North and South Dakota. She says there are at least 5,000 people dependent upon charity, and appeals to the public for cash subscriptions. H. Y. Helgesen, State Commissioner of Agriculture, Grand Forks, N. Dak., will distribute all funds sent to his address.

THE prevalence of drunkenness in Russia is said to have become so great as to attract the attention of all Europe. In Odessa alone during the past year 300 deaths have been directly due to the use of intoxicants. The government refuses to do anything toward checking the evil for fear of losing the revenue from the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors. Our new minister to Russia, Charles Emory Smith, will set the wine-drinking aristocrats of St. Petersburg a good example. He turns his glasses right side up which is upside down when wine is passed at public banquets, and has not tasted intoxicating liquors in fifteen years.

A BOOK goes on the English press this week which will greatly interest all friends of the temperance reform this side of the waters. It is the biography of Margaret Bright Lucas, so long the president of the British Woman's Temperance Association, and for two years president of the World's W. C. T. U. It is designed not only to be a tribute to a long and noble life, but a stimulus to temperance women the world over. The data are furnished by the family and friends of Mrs. Lucas, and can be relied upon as authentic. The author is the Rev. J. H. B. Heath, editor of the Monthly Record of Eminent Men.

THE Young Men's Christian Association of Kansas City was recently presented with a library, valuable far beyond the list price of the volumes it contains. The donor is the Rev. Dr. Palmore, pastor of the Walnut M. E. Church. The story of this library deserves to be known and considered by young men everywhere. Fifteen years ago Dr. Palmore decided to stop the use of tobacco, and every day he laid by the amount he had been accustomed to invest in the seductive narcotic. The aggregate is now sufficient to purchase the 2,000 volumes, which constitute his generous gift. This fact should be written in glowing letters over the door of the room containing it, for it is doubtful if any recorded within will teach a truth so practical.

LAST Sunday was a red letter day in Colorado. The decision of the Supreme Court in favor of Sunday closing was the occasion for great rejoicing. The long struggle of two years, begun by the W. C. T. U. of Denver, received its happy climax in the judicial rendering, and was fitly celebrated by an outpouring of the people into the Grand Opera House which would not begin to hold the multitudes who were anxious to thus attest their gratitude. An impromptu celebration of the event occurred in the union rooms at the regular meeting of the week before. The law of the state so grandly enforced in Denver, is also in action in many of the other towns, the contingency seeming to depend entirely upon the sympathies of officials with the saloons or with the temperance sentiment of the different communities.

COMMENTING upon the downfall of the Mormon hierarchy in Salt Lake City, a secular paper of large circulation says: "Any reliable account of the influences which produced such satisfactory results must largely credit the success of the movement to the persistent efforts of the intelligent and virtuous women of America, as contrasted with the female serfs and concubines of this system of serfdom and concubinage in Utah. The best and bravest of the teachers, preachers and missionaries who have been for years engaged in forming patriotic opinions against the institutions of Utah have been women." A statement containing this idea of contrast could hardly have appeared outside the Woman's Journal thirty years ago. There it would have been prophecy rather than affirmation. Now it is proven that the vantage ground of power for woman as for man, is the place where she has broadest outlook, and largest liberty of action. The location of that place is a problem nearing solution, and one in which the temperance reform is a prime factor. We predict that it will be found in blessed homes, where the "obedience" of the wife is not serfdom or concubinage, but glad allegiance to him who loves her, and gives himself for her. There will be many such, when the serpent of strong drink ceases to coil itself about men, benumbing them in every faculty except lust and selfishness.

CAN the pauper labor of Europe tell a more pitiful tale than this which that grand workman, Terence V. Powderly heard from the lips of a miner in the highly protected state of Pennsylvania: "I have a wife and five children, all girls, pay $6 rent, $2.40 a ton for coal each month. I worked but four and one-sixth days last month, and was docked half a car. Had one child sick the greater part of the winter, and all of them are sick now, and I know it's because they don't have enough to eat. I must see the butcher drive past with a wagon-load of meat, and, good God! it is hard to feel the want of it; hard to know that the babies are crying for just a little of it; hard to think that I, who never wronged a man in my life, must choke back the feeling that prompts me to go out and steal some of that meat for my family. I am not lazy, don't drink, work hard when I get it; but it's no use, they only want us as they do the tools in the mines, to make money on us. I often go out and walk up and down this street in the evening so that I won't hear the little ones asking for a bite before they go to sleep." The cry of the needy and oppressed at last reaches the ears of kings, and meets with response in the call made by Emperor William for an International Labor Conference at Berlin. By many this is deemed a forced concession to soothe the socialistic element in German politics, with no sincere purpose behind it of improving the conditions of the working classes. We prefer to believe that it indicates a generous policy, which will work out a better condition for the masses. Republicanism is in the air, and princes breathe it as well as the sons of toil. The Prince of Wales is an ardent advocate of Imperial Federation for the British empire, and the rising generation of rulers are finding where the real foundations of government lie—in the consent of the governed. France responds heartily to this call, which meets with remarkable favor. The best feature of this material age is, that in it truth, which for generations has been only in word, now takes practical form, and the International Labor Conference at Berlin, if what it purports to be, is a materialization of the word spoken on Mars Hill eighteen centuries ago: "God hath made of one blood all nations of men."

"WHICH of the alcoholic liquors is, in your opinion, the least injurious as a beverage for a man who drinks, or who thinks he must?" The replies to this question from several of the most eminent medical men in this country have been published by the New York Press. Perhaps the most widely known of these as a medical man is Dr. William A. Hammond, of Washington. He declares for beer or a light wine on the ground that "that alcoholic liquor is the least injurious, and hence the best for men to drink, which possesses the smallest proportion of alcohol." He adds: "The use of any form of alcoholic liquor is liable to create a desire for larger quantities, and liquor drinking is one of those things of which it may only too often be truly said that 'increase of appetite grows by what it feeds on.'" Dr. Austin Flint, for several years past Professor of Physiology in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, of New York, says: "I am not prepared to state that any one alcoholic drink is less injurious than another. . . . Alcoholic liquor of any description should never be used except when prescribed by an able and conscientious physician in cases of absolute need from sickness." Dr. N. S. Davis of Chicago, an eminent authority on the effects of alcoholic liquors, and author of a work on the "Influence of Alcohol on the Human System," writes: "There is no such man or person as one who 'must' drink alcoholic drinks. . . . If you ask what kind of alcoholic liquor is the least injurious for a man or person who will persist in drinking, I answer, that kind which has the smallest per cent of alcohol in it." Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the author, quotes another man's opinion on the ground that he has "had too little experience with alcoholic liquors to be any authority on the subject." He continues: "It is years since I have practiced medicine, and, except an occasional glass of champagne, I have hardly used alcoholic fluids for these twenty or thirty years."

THE account of the death of Mme. Sigida, in the Kara mines, from the effects of a hundred lashes, given by order of General Korff, is denied by the Russian government. The slaughter of political exiles at Yakutsk last March, was officially denied, but the proof will be laid before a committee of the International Prison Association at its next session. The evidence is satisfactory to every one outside of Russia that Mme. Sigida was carried from flogging post to cell, unconscious and bleeding, and that she died two days later of heart failure. It will be remembered that this woman was not a criminal, but a "political prisoner." She dared to have an opinion at variance with the brutal administration of affairs in her native land, and this was the penalty. Last August the women political prisoners of Kara attempted to starve themselves to death in order to escape the outrages of their jailors. This "hunger strike" lasted fourteen days, when they were compelled by violence to take food. Then Mme. Sigida begged for an interview with the director of the prison, hoping to secure some amelioration of their condition. She found him as inhuman as his subordinates. Two months after, for disregarding some fiendish order, she was flogged to death. George Kennan, who has consecrated himself to be a trumpet through which Siberian exiles may voice their woes, and appeal from the most horrible tyranny known among nations claiming civilization, says: "I desire to call the attention of the American people to the fact that the government which shoots and hangs administrative exiles at Yakutsk and flogs an educated and refined woman to death at the mines of Kara, is the same government that is now striving to get an extradition treaty through the United States Senate, and the same government that has just advertised in European newspapers the offer of a prize for the best essay upon the life and services to humanity of John Howard—such essay to be read in St. Petersburg at the forthcoming meeting of the International Prison Congress." Russia needs a thorough breaking up of the iniquitous deeps of her tyrannous system. Such reform as is there required never has been accomplished anywhere except by revolution, and recasting of the government in new molds suited to the needs of the age.

THE GREATEST GIFT.

BY WARNER SNOAD.

An angel stood one night beside my bed,
His accents sweeter than Love's tenderest tone:
"I come to bring God's greatest gift," he said,
"And carry back your wishes to the Throne."

With one wild bound, like an enfranchised slave,
My heart leapt forth to welcome health once more;
The greatest gift that God in mercy gave—
That He has taken will He not restore?

Yet, through the darkness, soft my fingers stole
To his, whose life with my own life is spun;
I craved, for him, wealth, ease, a goodly dole
Of honor, by each action justly won.

But the words would not come! for on my lips
A glowing coal from God's high altar laid,
Turned back Earth's shadow from the Sun's eclipse,
And all unwittingly this prayer I prayed:

"Give me the highest life," but as the words
In weird, unspoken utterance cleaved the night,
So to my heart-string's inmost shuddering chords
There swept the passion of a Master's might.

"This is the highest life," the angel said,
"To offer up the Isaac of your will;
Nor, dreaming of a sacrifice, instead
To pile the altar faggots—and be still.

"Meekly to bear with sorrow's crown of thorn,
With suffering's sword thrust through your quivering side,
Nor count your cross too heavy to be borne,
Nor, though the path be flinty, turn aside.

"And from your brow in spikenard beads of dew
Your life-blood poured in pity all may share,
And sympathy's full purple, strong and true,
Wrapped round the lives that else were cold and bare."

Then cried I, with exceeding bitter cry,
"I cannot live it!" "By God's grace you may;
Faith knows no halting when He passes by."
The angel fled—and it was dawn of day.

CRUSADE INCIDENTS.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

In looking over the carefully kept minutes of the "Hillsboro League," during those days so wonderful, when there was time for morning and evening meetings, prayer service, in or outside the saloons, private visitations to the erring and afflicted, and nothing seemed neglected, one must be struck with the faithful attendance of the loyal temperance men of our community at every public service. Some of these are still living, others have passed over to their reward. Among the latter, Gen. Jos. J. McDowell, perhaps more than any other, possessed that old style chivalric admiration and sympathy for "the brave women of the Crusade" (as he was wont to call them), and with his faithful, noble wife (our first vice-president) could be seen as often as the bell rang, wending their way to the place of service.

During the early years of his manhood, General McDowell became a member of the Presbyterian Church, but in the course of time some misunderstanding with a brother member caused him to withdraw from the church of his choice. And, as is often the case, the separation widened with time. During the late Civil War, being a prominent Democrat, and of Southern blood, he found it very difficult to tolerate the name Christian, in connection with the actions of "brother fighting brother!" And it is not wonderful that his spiritual experience became more and more darkened. The General was a genial man, of rare tenderness of heart, and he suffered keenly with those who were in trouble; he was also a man of great spirit, hence his uncompromising aversion to those who sold liquors, thereby causing so much sorrow to some for whom he entertained great affection, and many in whom socially he was much interested.

As the time seemed to have arrived in the history of the Crusade in Hillsboro, when a change must be made, and a local habitation sought where the temperance work could be carried on with method and system, a modest one story frame business house on High street (opposite the only two remaining saloons) was secured, fitted up in neat style, and occupied as Crusade Headquarters. The invitations were general to the services in the "New Hall," which were usually in the morning from nine until ten or eleven o'clock. One evening in each week was assigned to the "Juvenile Temperance Society," and this service in the quaint little hall, with its songs, recitations, experiments, etc., became quite an attraction.

Thus, our gospel temperance work was fairly inaugurated, and greatly desiring to increase the spiritual interest of all, it was suggested that we hold a series of morning meetings for a week or more, as the interest might indicate. Dr. McSurely was invited by the League to take charge of the first meeting on Monday morning; there was a good attendance, and we met to rejoice in the fact that our new habitation was dedicated to the Lord and His service. These meetings were to be presided over by the Crusaders, alternately, and this Tuesday morning service was assigned to me. As our audience increased and the sweet songs of Zion floated out upon the clear, crisp air of that December morning, a noble heart for whom earnest prayers were ascending from that consecrated room felt "strangely drawn"—and when the dignified form of General McDowell entered this newly dedicated "temple" and took a seat near the door, there was a visible "mark" of answered prayer upon the faces of many present.

After several prayers, songs and telling experiences, the leader invited her "Uncle McDowell" (in a friendly way) to say something to them; as he had throughout the Crusade been such a wonderful stay and help to the ladies, all felt a desire to hear from him now in their new line of work. At once he arose, laid off his overcoat and walking slowly up towards the front said (with quivering lip), "I am not worthy to speak before you good women! During the war I grew more and more hardened and embittered, as those professing Christianity vilified each other, and brothers shed their own brother's blood! I confess I came to believe there was no such thing as religion! But I have watched the Crusaders with an interest few understood, and as I have seen those among you who were tenderly reared, kneel upon the sawdust floors—yea, even upon the pavements in front of barred doors, and have heard them (with tears coursing down their cheeks), pray for their worse than murderers, and for their wives and children, and then have followed them to the churches, and found the same spirit evinced there, I have been led to feel—yes, that is the Christ love! And I want to tell you, my dear sisters, that I feel it in my heart this morning!" He was deeply moved, and so were all who heard him. And that dear little wife, who had prayed so faithfully for the beloved husband of her youth for fifty years, now realized with new joy the faithfulness of her covenant-keeping God, and joining the happy group of sympathizing friends in songs of praise, that meeting, long to be remembered, closed with a new seal of God's approval upon the Crusade, and a recognition of His presence in our "gospel temperance" meetings.

General McDowell lost no time in communicating with his friend and pastor, Dr. McSurely, and at once renewed his membership with the Presbyterian Church. From the hour of his new life-experience his growth in grace and marvelous Christian development were "known and read of all men," for the tender Savior knew how soon he would be called from labor to reward, hence He made of him a "shining mark." Gen. Joseph J. McDowell was a successful man in life, possessed a fine personal appearance, was an attractive speaker, fine conversationalist, and during his terms of public service in "state and national council," won laurels socially as well as politically. But what were all these perishable gifts and graces, to that touch of "Divine love" which transformed his nature into the "image of the heavenly," and made him meet for the kingdom that "endureth forever."

In these days of war and contention, when human opinions and prejudices seem used by the "arch enemy" as cudgels in the hands of the "very elect," it is comforting to turn to the record of those days of holy communion and oneness of spirit, when cross-bearing meant "Peace on earth and good will to men." When the philosophy of long-suffering, and "turning the other cheek" for oft-repeated injuries was developed, and when obedience to the law was held a command from God, even if it required the deepest humiliation of spirit and crucifixion of judgment, as was the case in this Crusade town of ours. "Brother Sayler" (a class leader in the M. E. Church of long standing), who, as one of the champion sympathizers of the "temperance women," received in the "dead of night" a notice from the sheriff of Highland county, to remove "under pains and penalties," the Tabernacle, a tent erected in front of "Dunn's Palace Drug Store" for the protection of the Crusaders during their devotions. For they had been locked out, then "enjoined" from use of the pavement. In obedience to the command of the "powers that be" this bitter cross was shouldered by this law-abiding citizen, and ere the morning light, not a vestige of the "Tabernacle" remained!

But the prayers, and the songs still ascended, and before many months had passed away, the valuable building, known as the "Palace Drug Store of Wm. H. H. Dunn," was purchased by the Crusade sympathizer, Mr. Jacob Sayler; the drugs and liquors were disposed of by Mr. Dunn, and books, stationery, and other valuable merchandise were substituted by the new proprietor. Thus one more "mountain" was removed, and the faith of the Crusaders strengthened.

I could go on enumerating the brave, kind acts of sympathy and helpfulness on the part of our temperance men during the Crusade days of 1873-'74, but will only, for this time, give you one more index to the spirit of the times, by reference to our first donation. Captain Amen, deceased, was one of the generous, firm friends of the temperance workers, and one evening at a public meeting in the Presbyterian Church presented our League with two large illuminated wall mottoes, bearing sentiments that seem at this remote date, almost prophetic:

One reads, "God's Work pays sure Wages." The other, "In Union there is Strength." The mottoes were handsomely framed for us by Dr. Fulleton, and hung, one in the Presbyterian Church, and the other in the Methodist, where we met alternately, week after week during our Crusade campaign, for morning and evening services. These wall mottoes are carefully preserved and greatly valued; and while (to human judgment) the sentiment, "God's Work pays sure Wages," may be doubted as saloons multiply, and they that "tarry long at the wine" become living verifications of the woes pronounced against them. While the "Law is slackened, and judgment doth never go forth." And "because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil."

But, with the old prophet, we Crusaders will stand upon the tower of faith and watch what God will say to us about this "vision" of sobriety—and this is what He tells us: "The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie! though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come!"

A STUDY OF THE POSITION OF PETER AND PAUL.

BY W. HOWATT GARDNER.

CHAPTER II.

The precepts of Paul express the real condition of the people, and any precept that does not represent reality, must become a dead letter. To-day these precepts are failing to set forth reality, just as many precepts of the Mosaic Law have been outlived and hence have not application to the conditions of society. At some future day, when the liquor traffic shall have been abolished, woman allowed to do her duty before God, and many other acts of injustice righted, will not the rules, which we call laws on our statute books regarding license fees, prostitution and divorce questions cease to represent reality? Will not the historian of that day read our present condition in our statute books and write of us as living in a most depraved age?

Apply this reasoning to many of the Mosaic precepts, for instance: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." When we read the story of the manner in which our Puritan forefathers tried to obey literally this precept, does it not cause our blood to chill? Again, if a master having a slave to whom has been given a wife who has borne children, sets the slave free, the wife and children belong to the master, but if the slave, loving his wife and children, prefers to stay with them, then "his master shall bore his ear through with an awl, and he shall serve him forever." If a man has a stubbornly disobedient son, he must be stoned to death. These are examples from the law to which Paul is supposed to refer for authority for his injunctions regarding the best subordination of woman. On what grounds can we hold that Paul's injunctions are binding, and these others are not? If it is because we have outlived, or gone beyond these others, that they are obsolete, the same answer holds good respecting Paul, for we must recognize the fact that the women of the nineteenth century are vastly more capable than the women of the first century of Christianity. If we are to obey one precept which we find in the Bible as binding for all time, would it not be consistent to obey all, irrespective of conditions and needs of our civilization?

The fact is, the law of Christianity is progress. God still reveals himself in every reform, or onward step of civilization. The book of revelation is not yet closed. The writer believes that to-day God inspires men and women to inaugurate great uplifting and progressive movements as he did Malachi, the reformation prophet, and Paul in his missionary work. God has not ceased to work for and through mankind, because the canon of Scripture has been decided as so many books of the Old Testament, and so many in the New Testament. In the light of a higher Christian civilization these precepts which so trouble us to-day will be found keeping company with those which were used to enforce the divine right of kings and slavery.

Peter's only utterance is as follows: "Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that even if any obey not the word they also may without the word be won by the manner of life of the wives." Peter wrote to Gentile Christians in certain provinces of Asia Minor. They were suffering under persecution, so that they were being severely tried. In accord with this fact, Peter exhorts all classes to some degree of subjection. Dangerous revolts were pending in Judea, Christians were charged with "turning the world upside down." Already Christians at Rome were suffering under the hand of the cruel Nero. It would not do for Christians to be too much elated over their gospel which taught them truths so much beyond the idolatrous people about them, hence submission, quietness of spirit, best fitted Christians at this time. "Submission, therefore," says Farrar, "was at this time a primary duty of all who wished to win over the heathen, and to save the church from being overwhelmed in some outburst of indignation which would be justified even to reasonable and tolerant pagans as a political necessity. Nor does St. Peter think it needful to lay down exceptions to his general rule. In his days the letter of Scripture had not yet been turned into a weapon wherewith on every possible occasion to murder its spirit He could not have anticipated in even the humblest Christian convert that dull literalism which in later ages was to derive from such passages the slavish doctrine of 'passive obedience.' He felt no apprehension that an unreasoning fetish worship would fail to see that 'texts' of Scripture are to be interpreted, not as rigid and exclusive legal documents, but in accordance with the general tenor of revelation. He was writing to Christians who had not yet invented a dogma about 'verbal dictation,' which necessitated ingenious casuistry on the one hand, or unreasonable folly on the other, and which turned both into a deadly engine of irresponsible tyranny."

Wives having heathen husbands might think themselves superior because of their religion, but it is better for them to be submissive, for though their husbands "obey not the word" they might be gained for the gospel by beholding the life of their wives, and so be won by deeds. This seems to be the thought of Peter. He did not enjoin abject subjection, nor that woman because she is a woman must be subject to man. He simply enjoins submission upon a wife in her relation to a heathen husband just as he also does upon all Christians in their relation to a heathen government, for instance, "submit yourselves to every ordinance of man, for the Lord's sake, whether it be to the king as supreme, or unto governors." Our forefathers disobeyed this injunction when they opposed the "stamp act." Do those who insist upon Scriptural authority for the subjection of woman condemn them for their action? No, they commend it, but yet in the case of woman make an exception. On what grounds? In his injunctions Peter well adds "for the Lord's sake." They were to submit "as free, not using (their) liberty for a cloak of maliciousness," that the Christian cause might not be harmed.

Paul, also, in his chief utterance on submission in the family adds, "as unto the Lord." "Wives, be in subjection unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, being Himself the savior of the body. But as the church is subject to Christ, so let the wives also be to their husbands in everything." (Eph. 5: 22-24.) This passage is from the revised version. The words, "be in subjection" are supplied from the immediate context which reads, "subjecting yourselves one to another in the fear of Christ." The words "let" and "be" of the part beginning "let the wives also be," are also supplied by our translators. On what grounds have they made the injunction commendatory, in the imperative mood?

Paul here enters upon a new thought and proposes to illustrate the relation of Christ to His people. Paul was brought up in the Rabbinical schools and was familiar with their method of teaching. He often allegorized, as notice in the fourth chapter of Galatians the manner in which he taught the two covenants by the two sons of Abraham, "one by the handmaid, and one by the free woman." He siezed upon conditions analogous to that which he wished to teach. Any one acquainted with the time in which Paul wrote knows that woman in general was held in subjection to man. The manner in which she was treated in the Grecian and Roman civilization had still its full effect upon her when Paul wrote. She was included among the despised classes, children and slaves. Aristotle held that if she had a will, it is powerless, and if she is capable of virtue, it is a virtue very little different from that of a slave. If a woman married, the law considered her husband her master. Marriage, instead of elevating her, enslaved her still more as the pagan philosophers did not consider marriage as a union of soul as Christ considers it, but for the interests of the state as a means of furnishing citizens. Aristotle enforced her subjection to the absolute authority of her husband; he is the soul to whom belongs dominion, she is the body which must obey.

Thus Paul takes a fact made by man's law and custom, and illustrates by the relation of husband and wife at that time the relation of Christ to His Church. Further on he states, that "This mystery is great; but I speak in regard of Christ and of the Church." This is the object, not that he would indorse the law and custom-enforced subordination of woman. "Nevertheless," he writes, (though I have thus spoken on the subjected position of woman), "do ye also severally love each one his own wife even as himself." Let him live the Golden Rule, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them." Would any man like to be given the position which he gives to woman? Would he like his sphere circumscribed and he himself held in strict subjection and inferiority to another?

Omitting the words, (imperative mood) supplied by the translators, our translation reads: "Wives are subject to their own husbands as to the Lord, for the husband is the head of the wife, as also Christ is head of the Church, being himself savior of the body. But as the Church is subject to Christ, so also are wives to their husbands in everything."

But after all that we may say of epistolary teaching we must go to Christ, the source of truth for final decision. Paul's and Peter's highest and only claim to authority is that they are apostles of the Founder of Christianity. Is it not strange that Christ did not lay down restrictive precepts, especially upon one-half of humanity? He nowhere speaks derogatory of woman. Indeed, He went directly against the prejudices of His time by having women among His followers. For a great teacher to have women as his disciples was an unheard of thing. A Rabbi would not speak to his own wife upon meeting her on the street.

To the woman of Samaria, a people with whom the Jews had no dealings, Jesus made his first clear announcement that He was the Messiah. He laid down broad principles, which, carried out, bring the highest development to the individual and to society. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and the Golden Rule will vindicate the truth of the equality of man and woman. In Christ's life was set forth the truth uttered by Paul that in Christ "there can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male and female." Christ has said that He is the "truth"; surely, when we consider His manly attitude toward woman, and consideration for her, He should be accepted as "truth" as respects her position. "Know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Said Jesus: "The words I have spoken unto you are spirit, and are life." They animate and through the ages are steadily freeing every human being who is in any way oppressed by man-made custom and law.

It is unwise to depend upon a literal interpretation as is shown by the mistakes of the Church in the past: that if an injunction does not harmonize with subsequent progress of truth, it has no application, as witness the Pharisees with their law in detail which in many respects did not have the spirit of Christ; that if it does not represent reality it is a dead letter; that many injunctions were given by the apostles to certain specified churches to meet prevailing conditions, or such conditions were used to illustrate some truth; that in Christ we find our supreme authority, and the "letter" interpretation does not agree with the spirit of His teaching.

INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE STUDIES.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

III. AUSTRIA.

A favorite argument of the alcoho. champions, especially of our beer-drinking fellow-citizens, is the robust appearance of the rustics in Eastern Germany and other parts of Central Europe, where alcoholic liquors form the habitual beverage of the working classes.

The real significance of that fact is plainly illustrated by the comparative physical vigor of the various nations included under the government of the Austrian Empire. With all the recent progress of their social and political development, the populations of the Danube Valley have failed, in an industrial sense of the word, to keep up with the advance of their Northern neighbors. Labor-saving machinery is scarce, and the hardest kind of work is still performed by human hands; men, and even women, become inured to sorts of toil which our western farmers have long delegated to steam-machines and beasts of burden. Hence the athletic appearance of the peasants tilling the valleys of the Eastern Alps and the broad plains of the lower Danube. A large percentage of the produce of their fields is certainly converted into alcoholic liquors, but it so happens that the frequency of rustic athletes bears an inverse ratio to the frequency of breweries and distilleries. The finest specimens of physical manhood are not found in the alcoholized lowlands of Bohemia or in the vicinity of the larger cities, but among the comparatively abstinent natives of the Tyrolese highlands and in the mountains of Transylvania where the progress of intemperance has been checked by the influence of the surrounding Moslem populations. In the upper Alps thousands of lads pass the summer in Senner Huetten (herdsmen's cabins), thousands of men spend the larger part of the winter in lumber-camps, without tasting a drop of alcohol for months together. They subsist on rye bread, cheese, fresh milk, dried or salted meat, berries in summer, and an occasional cup of coffee on a frosty morning; but little of their scant earnings is wasted on intoxicants, though on holidays and rustic festivals the beer-reeking village tavern is crowded with convivial visitors, who, like their forefathers, still associate the ideas of good cheer and alcoholic stimulation. Habitual drunkards, however, are very rare, and total abstinence, not from brandy only, but from wine, beer, and coffee, is by no means exceptional amongst the chamois hunters and professional guides whose experience at the brink of dizzy precipices has impressed them with the value of steady nerves.

Kirsch-wasser (cherry-brandy) is manufactured in large quantities along the southern slope of the Alps, and forms an article of considerable export, but like the opium-planters of northern India the cherry-distillers well know the banefulness of their merchandise, which, by a sort of local option vote, is often excluded from the bars of the neighboring tavern-keepers.

In the highlands of Styria the prevalence of the alcohol vice is limited, if not directly counteracted, by the strange habit of arsenic eating. Beginning with a minimum quantity, the devotees of the baneful drug gradually accustom their organism to a dose that would prove promptly fatal to any non-habitué, and persist in excusing their practice by all sorts of sophisms: Arsenic counteracts the raw air of the bleak uplands, it enables travelers to resist the fatigues of mountain-climbing, it stimulates digestion, etc., etc.

"South of this city," (Gratz) writes an Austrian physician, "arsenic eaters are found in nearly every village; there are families where the drug is used by every male adult, and often by white-haired patriarchs of seventy or eighty years, for it must be conceded that the habit is not incompatible with longevity. As a rule, I have been able to recognize a poison-eater by a certain moody appearance, contrasting strangely with the jovial disposition of the highlanders in general. A sallow, though clear and wax-like complexion, is another characteristic symptom, and, in large doses, the use of the drug often involves serious digestive disorders. It must be admitted, however, that arsenic never produces anything like intoxication in the uglier sense of the word. The poison-eater, directly after a large dose, feels elated; his habitual moodiness gives way to a more buoyant disposition, but he does not become quarrelsome or maudlin-sentimental; he can keep his temper in a lively controversy and the clearness of his intellect is not visibly affected. Nor are his financial circumstances apt to be imperiled by the habit. At retail rates half a florin (twenty-five cents) worth of white arsenic will keep a whole family in stimulants for a couple of months. Very few inveterate poison-eaters can use up a florin's worth in the course of a year, while brandy-drinkers often waste the wages of a week's hard work in the mad revels of a single night. And while one such night incapacitates or indisposes the toper for work during the next forty-eight hours, an arsenic-eater, under the full influence of his tonic, and for hours after, can follow his usual occupation as if nothing had happened."

The above testimony of an intelligent observer, is, of course, not intended as an apology for the practice of arsenic eating, but it clearly proves that, as a habitual stimulant, alcohol is, in every essential respect, considerably worse than rat bane.

The plucky natives of Hungaria have often been accused of an undue fondness for the produce of the wine-press, and total abstainers are, indeed, extremely rare in the neighborhood of Tocay and Temesvar, but the period of excessive potations is generally limited to the six weeks following the vintage-season, when every proprietor of a large vineyard tries to purchase the good-will of his neighbors by liberal samples of his "best barrel," big pitchers full of new wine handed around gratis among his day-laborers and visitors, often, even, among a party of foreign tourists. The noble Magyar, at that time of the year, is liable to pay the penalty of his dietetic foibles in an attack of a gastric complaint known as the tzoemoer, and ascribed to the combined influence of pork and alcohol. All in all, however, habitual alcohol-swilling is much rarer on the lower Danube than on the Rhine and the Thames, and among the semi-feudal nobles of the Hungarian country districts there are many local autocrats who use their influence for the sensible purpose of routing out every keeper of a disorderly tavern and of encouraging field-sports (horse-races, etc.) for the purpose of keeping the young villagers from hanging about the neighborhood of the wine-cellars.

Among the officers of the Austrian army, too, there are many intelligent men who have learned the value of temperance in Italy, and in the garrisons of the Turkish border, and who do their best to discourage the bibulous propensities of their subordinates. With a view to the promotion of that purpose a board of military commissioners a few years ago adopted a rule which deserves imitation in other countries. For the first offense drunkenness in barracks is punished by a reprimand; the second time, by several days' confinement in the guardhouse. After the third relapse, the offender is considered a victim of a chronic disease, curable only by the prevention of the cause. He is put under the constant supervision of non-commissioned officers, and on pay-days his share, with the exception of a small percentage for indispensable requisites, is credited to the company's messfund and invested in lemonade and wholesome comestibles.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN NORWAY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The intelligent reader of European history will readily admit that Norway is, in many respects, a wonderful country; its history, as that of Denmark, is full of the grandest and most heroic achievements. Many centuries ago the hardy Norse seakings were regarded as the most intrepid voyagers and the most fearless warriors of their day. They were known and feared in many of the most important parts of Europe; for centuries England trembled for their power. They planted their colonies in Iceland, Greenland and Normandy. From Iceland and Greenland these hardy adventurers visited America again and again (986-1007) where they remained sometimes for many months at a time. This shows that the ancestors of the Norwegians (Norsemen) were a strong, robust and heroic race that did not fear to undertake the most hazardous exploits, and to conquer the most obstinate difficulties. But has the present generation of Norwegians degenerated? No, they are in possession of the same heroic spirit as their forefathers. The Norwegians of our day have inherited the same vigorous and persevering spirit that they had. It is therefore no wonder if those who are acquainted with this national character of the Norwegians will expect that if they undertake to begin any great reform—as for instance the temperance reform—they will persevere until they gain a glorious victory.

As the heroic Norse sea-kings centuries ago made the nations of Europe tremble before them, so their descendants of our day are making war upon King Alcohol in such an energetic and vigorous manner that every true friend of temperance must rejoice in the success and in the many victories which these Norsemen have won on the battlefield of temperance. Norway is marching rapidly forward toward the goal of national prohibition. This will be demonstrated more fully by reference to the report of the president and managers of "The Norwegian Total Abstinence Society" to the twenty-second general meeting held at Skien, Norway, July, 1889. The society had, according to this report, at the close of 1888 in a round number, 95,000 members, of which about 30,000 were women and 5,000 children. But as two of the districts had not reported to the board of managers before the general meeting, I believe I am not very far from the truth when I estimate the membership of the Norwegian Total Abstinence Society to be at the present time in round numbers, 100,000. If we add to these 100,000 the Good Templars, who are nearly 7,000 strong, the Blue Ribbon Societies, perhaps 3,000, the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Norway, who are total abstainers, more than 4,000 strong, and other scattered total abstainers, I believe my estimate to be near the mark when I say that the total abstainers in Norway are an army 120,000 strong.

To show the heroic spirit of the Norwegian temperance workers, I desire to state that it was proposed at the last general meeting of the society, that if they could not get the necessary funds for the support of the temperance work, they had better appoint a day of fasting, so that in that way they could save money for the work. In referring to the last general meeting of the society, a prominent Norwegian paper, Verdens Gang, says: "There rested such an earnestness, enthusiasm, strong faith, and such a good will to work over the meeting, that it could not but command respect from enemy as well as from friend. When it was discussed how they could best get the necessary means to spread the temperance movement, it was proposed to have a day of fasting so as to save money for the work in that way. The great fact is that the temperance work is looked upon by these men as a work for God, Home and Humanity—a work that shall be a powerful factor in the salvation, purification and elevation of the race. It is this that kindles fire in the will and gives joy in the battle. And who will not lift his hat with reverence for such qualities when they honor human character?"

The prohibition sentiment is taking a strong hold upon the Norwegian people. The president and managers of the Norwegian Total Abstinence Society said in their admirable report, "The prohibition idea (Forbudstanken) is coming more and more to the front in all deliberations and discussions in connection with the temperance cause. It seems as if the friends as well as the enemies of the temperance cause are more and more convinced of the fact that the real fight will at last be centered around prohibition (Forbud) in one form or another."

Now, what are the prospects for prohibition in Norway? I believe that the prospects are better in Norway than in any other country in the world. In a land where there is an army of about 120,000 total abstainers, there must at least be 200,000 persons more who are so friendly disposed to the temperance cause that they, if they had an opportunity to vote on the question, would vote in favor of prohibition. And, if so, then there are 320,000 persons in Norway who are friendly towards temperance. That is to say, nearly one-fifth of the 1,818,853 inhabitants of Norway are friendly disposed to the temperance movement. This very encouraging state of things goes far to show that the valiant temperance hosts of Norway are—guided by their heroic leaders—marching forward to a sure and glorious victory over strong drink, the cruel enemy of the nations. It seems to me that there are very good prospects for Norway to be the first prohibition country in the world.

I verily believe that the child is born in Norway that shall mingle its glad voice with the enthusiastic multitude shouting "Victory for Prohibition, and glory to God in the Highest"—a shout that shall reverberate from mountain to mountain, from valley to valley, from Hammerfest to Lindesnas until old Norway shall be filled with rejoicing—with the songs of victory in honor of total abstinence, and to the glory of God. The Lord hasten that glorious day, and let all the heroic parts of the temperance movement, of every tongue and in every land where THE UNION SIGNAL is planted, say Amen!

THE WEST SHORE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We of Astoria, Oregon, are so far away from the center of our white ribbon circle that we are almost afraid our "Eastern" sisters may forget our existence unless we creep into your midst occasionally and give you the good speed of this western home. Astoria, the oldest town in Oregon, was once only a Hudson Bay trading post, filled largely with sea-faring men, but in the last ten years it has become the headquarters of the Columbia river and the Alaska salmon canning industry, whose output annually is five million dollars. Also other manufactories have been erected, until Astoria has become an enterprising city of 8,000 inhabitants. And since the transcontinental railroads have awakened to the fact that Astoria has one of the finest and largest harbors on the Pacific coast, there is every prospect that within a few years it will become one of the largest cities of this region. But alas! enterprising and prosperous as it is, and abounding as it does with some of the most intelligent and truly Christian people to be found in the United States, with nine churches and a Y. M. C. A., it still hugs to its heart its worst enemy, the licensed saloon, and today no less than seventy saloons pollute the city with their presence, so there is plenty of work for a W. C. T. U., and I am happy to be able to say that the banner union of Oregon is the Astoria W. C. T. U., composed largely of the most influential ladies of the city, in point of wealth and social standing, as well as piety.

The chief lines of work carried on by the union the past year have been the distribution of literature, work among sailors, and through our relief committee the helping of the poor. But ever since my arrival in Astoria my heart has been deeply stirred over the great number of men who never attend church or other religious services. Nearly one-half of our population are foreign born; one or two hundred of these being Chinamen, and four or five hundred are Russian Finn fishermen. Our union decided to start an evangelistic mission in a part of the city among the Russian Finns where there was no church, and being one of the evangelistic superintendents it was laid upon me to conduct these meetings. Our first service was held in a little front room of a fisherman's mess house belonging to my husband. In arranging for it, we counted that twenty-five persons would be a good attendance at any time, and for the first meeting we would be satisfied if only six appeared. But at our first meeting we had fully twenty-five, and by the blessing of God these meetings, held every Sabbath afternoon, have steadily grown in attendance until fully sixty persons were crowded into that little room, hungry for the word of life.

It soon became necessary for us to remove to some larger building and at the invitation of the Russian Finn Temperance Association, we removed our meetings to their commodious hall where for the last six weeks we are every Sabbath day greeted by a congregation of nearly two hundred of these foreign born citizens, two-thirds of the audience being young men seldom seen inside a church. One conversion has already resulted, and from several others we have heard of awakenings. For the last three Sabbaths we have had sermons from our city pastors, who cheerfully promise to help us when desired. The non-partisan furor has not struck us here in Astoria. We simply view it with amazement from across the continent. It may, however, bring this blessing to all of us who are loyal to our grand old National Union, viz.: the very annoyances and vexations it may cause can drive us closer to God, and incline us more closely to examine our own hearts and cast away every worldly desire.

NARCISSA WHITE KINNEY.

OUR SECOND ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I had never looked forward to a visit to China with any special feeling of pleasure. While I have always deplored the fact that they were a people without a Sabbath and without the gospel, I never was sufficiently interested to think it was my duty to carry the gospel to them; so when I started on this journey of course I was mindful that the Flowery Kingdom was included in the line of travel. I had greatly dreaded to come, picturing many obstacles as well as hardships, and often grew faint-hearted, but, on reaching the very first port, I was so well received that my fears and forebodings were dispelled, and often to myself have I said, "Oh, ye of little faith!"

It was about four o'clock in the morning when we reached Hong-Kong. The moon shone as clear as day, and the high and rugged hills were plainly outlined against the bright sky. The city stretching along the shore, and extending up the sides of the hill, makes the first sight a striking scene. At that early hour the bay was alive with hundreds of "sanpans," that hurried at once to the ship to see who would go ashore. As the first rays of rosy light flooded the bay, the scene was bewildering,—shippings from nearly all parts of the world were seen in the harbor, and the chatter of the thousands of natives came almost like the din of battle, and I began to wonder if we were to have another Hong-Kong riot. The sanpans (native's boats) and their inhabitants were a study. These boats are about the length, but somewhat deeper than one of our row-boats; one end has an awning-like cover, and in these thousands of poor families live the whole year around, never going ashore except for food. It is not an uncommon thing to find four generations crowded into these close quarters, and their mode of life is simply shocking. Mothers with infants strapped to their backs can be seen with heavy oars rowing to and from the shore.

On the arrival of the steamer I found a welcome letter from the ladies of the London Mission, inviting me to become their guest. One from the Mission called for me later on, when I was taken ashore, where about twenty Chinese rushed upon us with chairs and genrickshaws. I was placed in a chair upon the shoulders of the natives, and conveyed through the streets to the Mission. Everything was so strange and foreign. The city is built on the hills, the buildings extending to the very summit—a height of eighteen hundred feet. The top is reached by a finely-made winding road, and over this road men, women and children carry on their shoulders every brick, stone or piece of timber used in building, and thus become beasts of burden. About two years ago a cable-car road was laid to the very top of the mountain. This is the highest hill over which a cable has ever been laid, and it is a great success. The side of the hill has been cut into terraces, the walls built up by irregularly cut stones, and the houses erected after a most solid style of architecture, very like the old homesteads in the South.

Having seen so much of Chinese life in San Francisco, I felt I knew all about life in China, but I simply knew nothing. What impressed me most was seeing the natives used as beasts of burden. The climate is somewhat trying and the white people never walk any distance, but are carried on the shoulders of the men in sedan chairs, or driven about in genrickshaws. The latter is a two-wheeled conveyance, just large enough to seat one person with comfort; the coolie steps into the shafts just as a horse would; if the distance is great an extra coolie goes behind to push, so one is borne with great speed along the way. On most thoroughfares pedestrians are forced to the middle of the road, for the sidewalks are obstructed by the natives working at every kind of labor. Women with pinched and disfigured feet bring their sewing and sit on the sidewalks, and men can be seen doing everything, from spinning to coffin-making, and one of the strangest things of all is to see a native with a whole cooking outfit in the middle of the road preparing all manner of food, and passers-by stopping to take a dish, swallow it in great haste and pass on.

I saw many funerals while in Hong-Kong, but only one among the upper class. I heard a most unearthly sound and hastened in the direction, reaching one of the principal streets just in time to see the whole p.ocession. First came a number of young boys carrying lettered signs, painted on a narrow board about two feet long; these were fastened to a pole and held far above the heads of the boys carrying them; then followed gilded pagodas in which food was placed. I noted some baked fowl, also a young pig baked whole, then banners of different kinds and music. The music consisted of tooting a frightfully sounding horn, and beating a drum-shaped piece of brass. The coffin was draped in flaming colors and decorated with paper flowers of every hue and shade. After all this came the mourners, a large number, many of them hired. They were all dressed in white, flowing garments, with a head cover of the same material; this flopped up and down and fell in a most ungraceful fashion over the face. The mourners walked with slow and measured tread, their heads bowed very low and their bodies bent toward the earth. The mourners always walk, but following them come their friends in chairs or rickshaws, or sometimes on foot.

I was deeply impressed by seeing the degradation of the women. Of course in Hong-Kong we catch only a glimpse of Chinese life, for many have adopted our ways; but even there we see the degradation of womankind. We pass thousands bearing burdens under which we expect to see them sink every moment,—long bamboo poles with heavy water pails at each end, or great baskets of brick, stone or earth. Again we see them in the stone quarries breaking rocks. Heavy stones are broken into small pieces for paving the road, and here women and children work from sunrise to sunset.

The president of the Temperance League made all arrangements about meetings, and I held a week's mission among the sailors and soldiers. Many signed the pledge, others joined the Good Templars, of which there are five lodges. I was unsuccessful in getting a hearing among the women. As the missionaries are already overworked, and cannot give attention to any extra branches, it was useless to hold a woman's meeting among them and impossible to reach the other women, so I could do nothing in the way of organization, and after ten days in the city I took passage for Siam, going by way of Swatow, where our steamer was to stop a day or so. Some of the ladies of Hong-Kong wrote to friends in Swatow that I was a passenger. They came aboard and invited me to remain over a steamer and go into the interior, so here I am, leaving to-morrow for inland points. While here, I have been visiting the mission stations and getting an insight into Chinese life both among the natives and whites.

Across the bay is the Baptist Mission with their boys' and girls' school, Miss Field's school for training Bible women, and Dr. Ashmore's class for training native preachers. From the top of the hill back of the mission one can see a most wonderful sight. On a small plain (all of which can be seen from the hill) are thirty villages numbering five million souls; such crowds of people I never saw in my life. Every foot of ground is cultivated and scarcely yields sufficient to feed these multitudes. Across the bay is another mission, a hospital free to all. I went through the place a few days ago and I think my heart was never so touched in my life. Afflicted with almost every disease you could name, and as many of these creatures come here hoping to recover from some dreadful sickness, they hear for the first time the gospel. I wanted very much to speak to a real heathen woman who had never heard the gospel, so we looked around. Finally the missionary said, "Now here is a woman who never heard of Christ, a real heathen; ask her any question you want to and I will interpret for you."

I asked "Who made you?"

"I don't know who made me."

"Do you ever pray?"

"Yes."

"To whom?"

"To father heaven and mother earth."

"What do you pray for?"

"For good luck."

"Did you ever hear of Jesus?"

"No."

We then told her the story of the creation and of the Saviour, and the poor old woman said, "How strange! how beautiful! I have lived seventy-five years near by. I never heard this before; why did you not tell me before?" How my heart went out to this people. A whole heathen world; four hundred millions saying, "Why did you not tell us before?"

I found many cases of interest in this hospital. Almost all the women had bound feet. I supposed this relic of barbarism was dying out, but in this district only the very poor and common class refrain from it. It is a shocking sight to see these disfigured feet. Very rarely will a woman suffer her feet to be seen; even at night there were covers over them. But the missionary prevailed upon one woman to show her foot. It was after much talk between them that she went to another room and began to unwind the bandage. This was made of very heavy lines woven by hand, the strips being about two inches wide and six feet long; beginning at the great toe the foot is drawn into a most unnatural shape by drawing all the toes save the great toe under the foot flat against the sole, and as the bandage is brought over the instep and around the heel, the foot, warped in length, is pressed into a narrow shape, ending almost in a point. Large wooden heels are worn so the foot never strikes the ground but they walk entirely on the heel. Of course they walk very slowly and with great difficulty. I saw one child whose feet had been bound about a year and when we asked her if they were painful, replied, that "they always hurt her." When they become Christians they give up the practice, but the feet never again look natural.

I went through the city, the native settlement, yesterday. Every one seemed to know I was a stranger; great crowds followed us from one temple to another and through the city, and as the missionary explained objects of interest, one native was heard to say, "That old white thing speaks our words, the other doesn't know." We passed some awful sights. Going into homes we would see hens on the table or chairs, ducks or geese about the room, a pig under the bed and a buffalo in the bedroom; the filth is something alarming. Many, many lepers in all stages of the disease can be seen among the throng, and often these creatures hold in their hand—many times some of the fingers eaten off—a cup or bowl asking for help of the passers-by. Such sights can never be forgotten. I have been unable to hold meetings here; it is a small community; the missionaries are very busy and overworked, so I leave for inland points to-morrow.

Swatow, Nov. 25, '89. JESSIE A. ACKERMAN.

FROM ALL ALONG SHORE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Having "done herself proud" by her ballot reform law, Massachusetts is considering the question of granting her women municipal suffrage. If she does this she will be following in the footsteps of Kansas, Wyoming and all Canada except Quebec, none of which have ever repented the step taken. The women taxpayers of Massachusetts may be denied municipal suffrage, but it is quite certain they will still be expected to pay municipal taxes.

It is claimed that more young girls frequent public houses in England than young men or boys. Between the hours of seven and eleven p. m., one Saturday 1,469 boys and girls, apparently under twenty-one years of age, were observed to enter seven public houses in Nottingham. Of this number 460 were boys and 1,009 girls. One explanation advanced is that the girls are generally treated to drinks while the boys have to pay.

The state of affairs in Maine does not by any means justify her legislators in their recent rejection of a Ballot Reform Bill, if the statements of W. H. Looney in an address at Saco, Me., have any truth. He says the average cost of a state election to each of the old parties in a certain city is from $15,000 to $20,000, while fully fifty per cent. of the votes in many wards of other cities are marketable. Election to office, he declares, costs a congressman $1,000, a governor about $12,000, and a state senator or representative two-thirds of his salary.

Quite to the surprise of Republican and Democratic politicians alike, State Senator Carter has introduced in the New Jersey Legislature, a Local Option Bill, similar to the one passed by the Republicans two years ago and repealed last year by the Democrats. "It is doubtful," says the New York Mail and Express, "whether even Mr. Carter, who is pretty nearly a Prohibitionist, would have ventured as far as he has except for the fact that the women have been after him. The senator lives in a locality where the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is very strong, and delegates from that organization have paid visits to the State House during the past week and made Carter the especial object of their attack. Miss Frances Willard came along one day and used her eloquence. The result is the measure in question."

Two cigarette bills have been introduced in the New York Legislature. One provides a fine of $100, or three months' imprisonment as punishment for the use of any substance in the manufacture of cigarettes except pure rice paper and pure tobacco. The other makes it a misdemeanor to sell pictures, tickets or prizes in connection with packets of cigarettes or tobacco. It is said that the practice of inclosing pictures in cigarette packages has increased their sale among boys enormously.

Dr. C. L. Haynes, a woman, has just been appointed assistant physician at the Western Lunatic Hospital, of Staunton, Va. Virginia is the tenth state to place women physicians in hospitals for the insane. There are at present sixteen hospitals so provided, employing twenty lady physicians. In Massachusetts every such hospital is required by law to employ a woman, as assistant physician.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

MATILDA B. CARSE.

Dear white-ribbon sister, brother, boy or girl: Have you a Temple mite-box on your table? If not, write to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, inclosing a two-cent stamp, and it will be promptly sent you on condition that you will drop into it a cent a day, or its equivalent, during the next twelve months. Mite-boxes in quantities will also be sent to unions for the cost of transportation.

Our friend Jane E. Weeden's watchword, "This one thing I do," is bearing legitimate fruit. She has lately sent $115 for the Temple fund, the gifts being as follows: Whitewater, Wis., donations, $36.70; Whitewater Baby Band, $3.30; donations from Clinton Junction, $2.30; Baby Band Clinton Junction, $2.30; donations from Janesville, $20 60; Janesville Baby Band, $1.40; donations from Milton, $6; Baby Band, $3; donations from Stoughton, Wis., $35.60; Stoughton Baby Band, $4.40; Miss Weeden writes that the officers of the W. C. T. U. treat her most kindly wherever she goes. The presidents of unions entertain her most hospitably. Mrs. Wilson entertained her at Bismarck, and collected $4 towards the sum she sent.

Mrs. I. J. Lundy, of Palmyra, Mo., seems to be following in the footsteps of our friend, Miss Weeden, only she has set out to raise but $100. She sends $10.65, and writes: "I got my dimes and names in many places, some in Kentucky and some in Illinois." The names are for a Loyal Temperance Legion and a Baby Band.

We receive many gifts in memoriam from loving friends, who, in this manner desire not only to honor their departed loved ones, but to help the Temple fund. The following gifts have been received from such persons: $50 comes from Mrs. Anne Paley, of Lanark, Ill.; this sum completes a gift of $100, in memory of her late husband, who was a stanch Prohibitionist. This money comes not from one rich in this world's goods, but from an aged saint who, through great self-denial, has saved it from her necessities for this noble and most laudable purpose. Beside, she has sent out quite a number of mite-boxes among her friends and is doing everything in her power to further the interests of the Woman's Temple. Mrs. L. B. Duff sends $5 in memory of a sainted mother, who, she says, "answered to heaven's roll-call March 15, 1889." One dollar is sent from the Edgewood, Iowa, W. C. T. U., in memory of Mrs. Emma Hill, who died December 19, aged thirty-six years; she was vice-president of the union and one of its most efficient workers. One dollar comes in memoriam from the parents of little Frances Willard Bowers, of Lincoln, Neb., who cheered the hearts of her parents but four brief months. One dollar has been received in memory of John R. Ward, of Merrifield, N. Y., aged twenty-seven, who died November 6. This was accompanied by $1 each from his two sisters, Emma and Wealthy Ward.

Mrs. E. B. Henry, of Lexington, Mo., incloses $1, and says: "A mother slipped $1 into my hand to-day, saying: 'This would have been my son's twenty-first birthday if he had lived, but he left me fifteen years ago. He owned this dollar. I wish you would send it to Chicago for the Temperance Temple in his name, which was George H. Weeden.'" So these precious gifts come for the Temperance Temple, which seem too sacred almost for any other purpose.

Mr. James Rowley, of Flat Rock, Mich., says his six-year-old son, Clifford, received a mite-box in September, and sends his savings, $1.43, for the benefit of the Temple, "in which," he says, "we are all much interested." Mrs. E. A. Kennedy, of Freeport, Kan., in sending for two mite-boxes says: "I have two boys, five and three years old, that I want to raise temperance boys, and think for them to give their pennies for the Temple will help in that direction." Mrs. E. Church, of Washington, D. C., in sending for a mite-box, says: "Our little daughter Vivian, four years old, is very much interested in the Temperance Temple, and loves to have me read to her about it. She has saved her pennies to the amount of $1, which she wants to go toward the building of the great Temple. I think if she had a box she would save a great many more, and will get her brothers to help her. I think the mite-box should be in every household. It is not only giving towards a noble cause, but cultivating a habit among the children of saving, a lesson greatly needed in these days." Both Mrs. Kennedy and Mrs. Church have emphasized truths which all mothers would do well to heed. Little Helen Thompson, of Helena, Mont., six years old, sends the contents of her mite-box, $3.20. Mrs. J. W. Johnson, of Sutton, Neb., sends for five mite-boxes for her five boys. She says: "They promise to put in a penny in their boxes every day." In a few years our sister will have five boys that will vote for prohibition, and will scorn to be seen entering a saloon.

Mrs. Mary E. McMillan, superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion of Oxford, Iowa, sends $8 and the names of her Legion to be placed under the corner-stone of the Temple. In a little town of only six hundred inhabitants this is doing well. We have no doubt we will hear again from this wide-awake Loyal Temperance Legion. Mrs. J. W. Saxe, of Middlesex, Mass., sends for her union a Baby Band numbering eighteen, and a check for $1.80. She says: "Mrs. Strangham, a daughter of Mary Clement Leavitt, is a member of our union. Ruth Strangham, granddaughter of our round-the-world missionary, heads the Baby Band list."

All money orders and checks for the Temple should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, National treasurer, and treasurer of the Temple fund. All information in regard to the Temperance Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres. Woman's Temperance Building Association.

Our Children.

GREETING SONG.

BY HELEN M. EMERY.

TUNE:—Tramp, Tramp, Tramp. To be sung by members of club only.

We are glad to greet you now, please accept our greeting bow,
And we beg you to our program still give ear—
As you've given us your eye, in the days that are gone by,
When we played upon the village green out here.

CHORUS—Yes! Yes! Yes! we're glad to see you,
With your smiling faces here,
We may see before it's done, that your smiles are just begun,
And we wish you all a smiling, bright New Year.

Now you surely won't think queer, when we whisper in your ear,
That our bats and balls they sadly need renewing,
And we knew no better way for to gather up the fray,
Than to call you in to see what we are doing.

CHORUS—Yes! Yes! Yes! we're glad to greet you,
And we thank you, one and all,
That the long-delayed invite you did not decide to slight,
From the champions of the brave old bat and ball.

Though we may not preach or pray, we will try another way
For to please, and gladly would we profit, too—
For the days they come and go, and the right evolves so slow,
We must hasten on, some grander things to do.

CHORUS—Yes! yes! yes! we're glad to greet you,
And when earth's last game is won,
May we all unite once more on a brighter, fairer shore,
Where we hope to hear the welcome words "well done."

LILLA'S WHITE LIE.

BY FLORENCE B. HALLOWELL.

"O Margie, I do wish we hadn't accepted Kitty Lane's invitation for Thursday! Here's one from Ada Barclay for the same day," and Lilla Dent threw into her younger sister's lap a dainty envelope and card. "It is really too provoking!"

"I wonder why they arranged to have both parties on the same day?" said Margie, as she read the card.

"Oh, that's easily explained! Ada don't visit Kitty, of course. You know the Lanes don't pretend to any style at all, and their house is a regular old shell."

"I never was out there," said Margie, "so I don't know how they live; but I always liked Kitty, and she is far ahead of either of us at school "

"Yes, she's nice enough; but she always dressed so plainly that I couldn't help feeling sorry for her. I wonder she ever thought of giving a lawn party. Of course all the girls will go to Ada's."

"I won't for one," said Margie. "You can write Ada that we already have an engagement for Thursday."

"Indeed I will not! She is sure to have all sorts of grand arrangements made. Kitty's party won't be a circumstance to it. No, we must make some excuse to Kitty."

"Don't make any for me, Lilla. I promised to go to Kitty's, and I intend to go. You can do as you please, but I think you ought to keep your promise."

"Not when I know we would have a much better time at Ada's."

"But how Kitty would feel to know you were at Ada's!"

"She never will know it."

"What excuse will you make to her, then?"

"I will write her that, when I accepted her invitation, I forgot I had agreed to spend Thursday with Aunt Mary. Of course I will say I am sorry, and she won't think anything of it. And it isn't a story to say that about Aunt Mary, for I did agree to go up there some day this week."

"It's a white lie, Lilla. You know how often mother has warned us against them."

"Please don't preach, Margie. I can stand it from mother, but not from you."

So Margie said no more, and the two notes, one accepting and the other declining the invitation, were duly written and sent.

Thursday afternoon the two girls started out together, but while Lilla stopped at the great white gate before a handsome stone house about a mile from town, Margie went on to a farmhouse half a mile beyond.

Lilla fully expected to find a merry group of young people gathered on Mr. Barclay's beautiful lawn, but to her surprise Ada was sitting on the big piazza alone.

"I must be too early," she said, a little vexed. "And yet the invitation said four o'clock, and it must be long after that."

Ada ran down the steps to meet her.

"Oh, I'm so glad you've come!" she cried. "I was growing dreadfully impatient, and had begun to think you had gone on to Kitty's."

"Why, aren't you going to have a lawn party here?" asked Lilla, feeling a little bewildered.

"Not to-day," laughed Ada. "You see, just after I sent that invitation to you and Margie on Tuesday, Kitty Lane came over to ask me to a lawn party at her house to-day. Well, as she had sent out all her invitations, and I had sent out only the one to you—though I had written some of the others—we concluded it would be better for me to put off my party until some other time. And I didn't write to recall my invitation to you, because I thought if you happened to accept, you could just as well stop here and go over to Kitty's with me. I am so sorry Margie couldn't come with you."

"Margie has gone to Kitty's," said Lilla, who had changed color several times while Ada was speaking. "We didn't know that you visited her at all."

"Oh, dear, yes!" said Ada. "I see her very often. She is one of my dearest friends."

"Have you seen her since Tuesday?" asked Lilla.

"No; she's been too busy to come over, and we've had company, so I couldn't leave home. But we had better start at once, Lilla, or we may miss some of the fun."

But Lilla did not move.

"I don't think I can go, Ada," she said, "I have such a bad headache."

"Walking in the sun has given it to you, perhaps," said Ada. "But it may wear off after you are cooler."

"I don't think it will," rejoined Lilla. "I had better go home at once. You needn't say anything to Kitty about me in any way."

"But, indeed, Lilla, you mustn't go home. We will wait a while, and perhaps you will feel better."

But Lilla shook her head.

"I think I had better go home at once," she said.

She looked so pale and wretched that Ada ceased to argue with her, and they parted company at the gate, Lilla going toward town, and Ada hurrying off in the direction of the Lane farmhouse.

Poor Lilla! her heart ached a great deal harder than her head as she walked slowly along the dusty road, and her eyes were blinded by some very bitter tears. She had good reason to regret that white lie.

She was lying in bed thinking of what she had missed, and the grand time they must all have had at Kitty's, when Margie came home at half-past nine.

"Oh, Lilla, I had the best time!" she exclaimed. "Lawn tennis, croquet, boating on the river, and such a nice supper! But I couldn't help thinking of you, Lilla, and wishing you were with us. You will never know what you missed."

Lilla sat up in bed, her eyes swollen with weeping, her cheeks flushed.

"I wonder if—if Kitty and Ada—knew about me," she said.

"I'm afraid they did," admitted honest Margie, reluctantly. "I saw them talking together for some time, and heard Kitty repeat what you had said in your note. Yes, I am afraid they did."

Lilla was sure of it a week later, when she failed to receive an invitation to Ada's lawn party, and, as she saw her sister go off without her, she resolved, with a heart almost bursting with grief, that as long as she lived, she would never tell another lie, either white or black.

The boy that by addition grows,
And suffers no subtraction.
Who multiplies the things he knows,
And carries every fraction;
Who well divides his precious time,
The due proportion giving,
To sure success aloft will climb,
Interest compound receiving.

The Still Hour.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 23, 1890.

BY REV. C. C. HARRAH.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

(Luke 5:16–39; Judges 20, 21; Ruth 1–4.)

Sunday, 23; Luke 5:16–39. Verse 18, This man's friends were real and true; they were ready in the time of his need to give him help. We ought to make ourselves worthy of such friends, and they should be appreciated by us as one of life's greatest blessings. Verse 20, It is probable that the paralysis was brought on by some special sin. If we eat and drink and act so as to violate God's laws written in our bodies, we sin against Him, and will become diseased. The Christian way to live is to glorify God in our bodies and spirits, which are His. I Cor. 6:20. Verse 32, Repentance is the way of restoration of health to the soul. Those who know themselves to be sinners, have reason to praise the Lord as long as they live, for it was just such that He came to save.

Monday, 24; Judges 20. Verse 1, Terrible crimes sometimes rouse the people to see the need of reform in morals. Verse 8, Notwithstanding the great disorders that had broken out in the land, the mass of the people, when aroused, were found ready to wipe out the foul stain upon their national character. If the common people can be led to see the evils of our own country, the time will come when they certainly will be abolished. Verse 21, All the people of Israel were deeply involved in sins. They all suffered, because the nation was rotten in its iniquities. There seems to be a great law, manifest in the history of nations, that without the shedding of blood there is no remission. Heb. 9: 22.

Tuesday, 25; Judges 21. Verse 2, Scarcely had they cooled from the fierceness of their vengeance, before they began to relent and to accuse themselves for the desolation their impetuous zeal had produced. This characteristic fickleness of the Israelites, all should seek to avoid who are anxious to develop worthy characters. Verse 21, This is one of the many intimations of that injustice and cruelty to woman, which hangs like a black cloud over the history of the ancient world. Her personal rights were disregarded, she was treated as a slave, and, as the victim of man's whims and passions, she was subjected to every kind of violence. Jesus' great work for her elevation and emancipation should forever bind the hearts of women to Him.

Wednesday, 26; Ruth 1. Verse 5, Naomi is a type of desolate Israel. Ruth is a type of Israel received, on the ground of sovereign grace. This book shows the merciful providence of God in bringing good out of evil. Verse 9, Widowhood is exposed to many cares, incumbrances and vexatious troubles. The Bible makes it our special duty to remember the widow and the fatherless. Deut. 14: 29; James 1: 27. Verse 16, This devoted affection was a great blessing to the forlorn and desolate Naomi. Not the fine things of riches make happy homes, but that true love for each other, which unites the family and makes its members one in purpose, sympathy, and work.

Thursday, 27; Ruth 2. Verse 2, Ruth was willing to do lowly work. It is very unworthy of us to be unwilling to work in any way by which we can make an honest living. Pride adds greatly to the hardships of poverty. Verse 4, This pious salutation shows the simplicity of manners among the rural population of Israel at this time. How beautiful it appears, as compared with the stilted ways of "society." Verse 14, Boaz was a pious man, and obeyed the law of Moses which directed very liberal treatment of the poor at the seasons of harvest. He was also drawn toward Ruth by the kindly disposition and good character she manifested in her devoted attachment to her mother-in-law. Real virtue and goodness will bring its own reward.

Friday, 28; Ruth 3. Verse 1, The farmer remained all night, at threshing time, in order to protect his grain and to have the advantage of evening breezes for winnowing. When the master and servants were tired out, they would lie down anywhere, with the same clothes on they had worn during the day. Ruth took the place of a servant at her master's feet. Verse 15, The faithful workers in Christ's fields who humbly, as His servants, take their places at His feet, ready to do whatever He commands, will be rewarded with abundant blessings.

Saturday, 29; Ruth 4. Verse 18, The special object of this book is here indicated, to trace the genealogy of David. The light it throws upon the domestic life of Israel, belongs to an early period in the times of the judges.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(The Lamb of God. John 1: 29.)

The sacrifices with which the Jews were perfectly familiar, enabled them to exactly understand John the Baptist, when he spoke of a lamb as taking away or making atonement for sins. Jesus is the lamb that takes away the sins of the world.

1. John's words imply that the whole world is in sin, and needs to be saved. The individual conscience, human history and God's Word, all testify that this is true.

2. Jesus Christ is God's appointed way of saving the world, and there is absolutely no other way by which sinners may be saved.

3. Through Jesus Christ, God does take away our sins, and we are saved. A provision that God makes for our salvation cannot be imperfect or fail.

4. Let all of us truly and heartily come to God by faith, and accept of His salvation in Jesus Christ. John 3: 14, 15.

The Household.

MY CROSS.

BY EMMA P. SEABURY.

I never think how weary is my load,
How burdensome is my allotted care,
And look around to see if none may share,
But comes another bending 'neath a load,
Urged on and pressed by many a stinging goad,
So near me, yet I knew not he was there,
Soul sickened, trembling, fainting, in despair;
As, wrapped in self, I toiled to my abode.

I never shift my burden to one side,
To help the struggling neighbor I have met,
But it grows lighter; thus I may divide
New strength and patience with him, also, yet,
My burden lifting, spite of moil and fret.

BROKEN BARRIERS.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

In the old Spanish town of Salamanca, there stands a house noted as having been the home of Dona Maria la Brava. A traveler tells us that she belonged to an ancient and honorable family, Monsoyes by name, and had two sons "just passing out of their teens." One of them was playing with two young friends of the equally distinguished family of the Manzanos. They quarreled, and Monroy was slain. Fearing the vengeance of the older brother, they entrapped and slew him also.

Those who brought back the bodies of her sons, thought the mother would die of a broken heart. But she announced that she would go and bury her grief in her country home of Villalba. She set off at night, gathered twenty well armed mounted retainers and scoured the country for the murderers. They had taken refuge in Portugal. She followed, broke down the doors of their hostelry at night, took their heads and bore them back to Salamanca. She entered the town with these two bloody trophies on spears, and riding straight to the church where her sons were buried, she placed them on their tombs.

We may raise our hands with an expression of horror and exclaim: "Did a woman do this?" Yes, and strange contradiction of established rules as it is—the revolting act has preserved her home and story, and given her the title of "La Brava." Doubtless she should have wept silently, stifled her moans and died quietly at length of a broken heart! That she did not, and that others here and there have in like manner been goaded to desperate resistance or revenge, proves that human nature, like other natural forces, sometimes defies all barriers and ignores all laws whether real or artificial. As women, we are born and trained to use moral force alone. Our environments—so far as they are Christian—constrain us to be "womanly," and anything contrary to this awakens criticism. And this is a blessed and beautiful arrangement, since our employment of spiritual and moral agencies, even with partial success, demonstrates the possibility of a success more complete, when men and women alike shall accept and use them. But while law, written and unwritten, denies us the exercise of brute force, there are times when even women rebel—when they are borne beyond the invisible boundaries of that "sphere," outlined by the ever vascillating finger of public opinion.

"Dona Maria" is one illustration, but we take into account her frenzied mother-heart. Then we remember the terrible scenes of the Paris Commune, when women became the comrades of a maddened soldiery, and vied with them in giving the finishing touch to the nation's tragedy. But again we look for a cause, and find that long before those awful days, Paris was without wholesome laws or religion, and that the social conditions which decided a Parisian woman's career were not in her own hands. That unparalleled era was but the legitimate result of injustice, oppression and debased morals. Like lightning and thunder and storm, it came to relieve a deadly atmosphere. "But," you may say, "no such conditions exist in our land; we are a free and enlightened Christian nation!" What has been cited above was inspired by recent occurrences in Missouri. Reading the reports given in our dailies, one would conclude that in Lathrop were women with "Commune" tendencies. They are called "lawless," "frenzied," "a maddened crowd of women," "desperate and destructive," "ready to invade even private houses," etc. What! are our Christian women, calm, conservative products of a high-pressure culture, guilty of such rash and unwomanly conduct?

We search other papers of a different "school," and find that the case was not as desperate as at first represented, and yet there is enough of truth to warrant further investigation. What is the cause of this outbreak? Ah! "A stabbing affray." And what was the cause of that? Intoxicating liquor. That murderer of husbands, and brothers, and sons is abroad, and constantly at work. That national curse, intemperance, lives and fattens upon those who are dearer than life itself to our American women. And these women have been patient—O, yes! they have been "womanly" in the main, rending the heavens alone with their prayers, and dying, rather than go to battle with their enemy. But occasionally the barriers give way. Occasionally a woman whose heart-strings have been well-nigh torn asunder, vents all the energies of her nature against the foe, and carries with her in her righteous warfare, other women whose sympathies and judgment endorse her act.

This is the history of more than one "Crusade." And who can wonder at it? Marvelous indeed has been the forbearance of those who have borne poverty, and disgrace and abuse and bereavement in silence; now, a widespread intelligence, knowledge of law, and more than all a union of sentiment among women, encourages those who suffer to struggle rather than die.

"But," asks a little, soft-voiced sister who cherishes the word "feminine," "do you think it is nice for women to do such things—to break bottles and pour out beer and whisky?"

To which I reply, "No!" Men are responsible for perpetuating the rum traffic, since they are responsible for our laws. If they make laws forbidding the sale of intoxicants, or limiting such sales, they are morally and legally bound to see them enforced. If they fail to do it—if they fail to defend their own homes, then their wives and mothers and sisters must come to the rescue, as they would in case the God-appointed "guardian" were disabled by physical paralysis. I heard a gentleman say, not long since, that if ever our nation was redeemed from the infernal traffic in intoxicants, "women must do the work."

Perhaps this is true, but it ought not to be. Shame on the men with ballots in their hands, and all the privileges of free speech at their command, who stand behind the W. C. T. U. and say, "You do this work!" It is the story of "Betty and the Bear," with a tragic accompaniment.

Standing to-day in the fine capitol building at Hartford, Conn., I looked up at Nathan Hale's bronze statue of heroic size. These historic words are engraved upon its base: "I only regret that I have but one life to give for my country." And I said: "Where are the patriots of to-day who will sacrifice comfort, reputation, and, possibly, life, in our new national war?" There are some, thank God! but as in the Civil War, the call is urgent for "a hundred thousand more." And yet, and yet, the divine thought may be to give final victory only to the united efforts of men and women. Swiftly the day approaches when something must be done.

BEST METHODS OF CONDUCTING GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.

Believing that this department of our work needed strengthening by a concurrence of testimony and experience, we have invited the state presidents and a few others to contribute brief points on the best methods of conducting gospel temperance meetings, and hereby submit them to our readers with the hope that local unions all over the land may thus be aroused to a revival of interest in this good work.

WEST VIRGINIA'S PRESIDENT.

"Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in"—that is, hold the meetings where you can reach the class you desire to help. Let the singing be appropriate and tender rather than popular and artistic. A short Scripture lesson containing, in some form, God's knowledge of and sympathy with fallen humanity; His ability and willingness to save such as come to Him for help. A short experience meeting with testimonials from those who have been "kept" and those who have struggled and failed. Aim to draw out the causes of failure. A short promise meeting in which are repeated scriptural promises to those who desire and seek help of God. An opportunity for prayer for self or friends. An invitation to sign the total abstinence pledge. A lock-box wherein may be dropped special requests or statements of special cases not desired to be made public. A season of hand-shaking and personal encouragement. MRS. JANE A. JOHNSON.

Be sure that it is a gospel meeting, as well as a temperance meeting. A leader that is consecrated and prompt. Advertise meeting thoroughly. Begin on time. Key everything up sharp. Have some one responsible for the music. Enlist pastors as other helpers. Have a brief Bible reading bearing upon temperance, and bringing out the prohibition principles of the Word, against every evil. Appoint each week some one to give practical talk at next meeting. Have occasionally Scripture texts from all present on temperance. Again, a free conference. Treat different phases of question, but only one at each meeting. Close promptly. H. M. BARKER.

PRESIDENT OF FLORIDA.

We have all the variety we can command in our Sunday-afternoon gospel meetings. Sometimes we use Hannah Whitall Smith's Bible Readings. Then, again, a Bible reading of our own arranging to suit the object we have in view. If we can get a reformed man to tell how the Lord lifted him up out of the depths, we urge him to take a prominent part. Our ministers are ready to help us, but we often conduct the meetings ourselves. The Lord is with us in great power.

MRS. A. A. W. CADWALLADER.

PENNSYLVANIA'S PRESIDENT.

First, a leader constrained by love of Christ to carry message of salvation to dying souls. Good, bright, spirited singing. Vary exercises. Occasionally, service of song, Bible readings. Don't let men harp too much on their past wickedness, would rather hear testimony to God's work in their hearts now. Always present pledge —to hold until God's strength to keep is made manifest.

MARY H. JONES.

KANSAS' PRESIDENT.

First, efficient chairman. Second, begin and frequently intersperse exercises with congregational singing under competent leadership. Third, exposition of Scripture by evangelistic superintendent, or some devout person, subject to relate to Christian responsibility. Fourth, short readings, recitations and addresses pertinent to the occasion. Fifth, circulation of the pledge. Sixth, strict regard to time limit, which should not exceed one and one-half hours. FANNY H. RASTALL.

PRESIDENT OF ARIZONA.

In conducting gospel temperance meetings, seek vitality, unction, and converting grace.

1. Limit the service to one hour; have time and place well advertised, and begin promptly.
2. Read Scripture selections of brevity and point.
3. Use music freely, and secure a quick, apt and consecrated leader to catch and carry on the spirit of the meeting.
4. Have a chosen speaker for ten minutes each session; alternate ladies and gentlemen when practicable.
5. Throw the meeting open part of the hour; encourage "experiences," "testimonies," and exhortations, but keep a firm control of the meeting; keep pledge book open; get addresses of signers and do visitation work if possible.
6. Take collections; make the meetings self-supporting.
7. Have ushers of tact and grace.
8. Distribute W. C. T. U. literature.
9. Use fervent and specific prayer for the cause of gospel temperance.
10. Expect great results; watch and work for them, but be patient and continue, though the Lord's blessing tarry. Pray much in solitude for a blessing in public.

S. A. PEARSON.

PRESIDENT OF EAST WASHINGTON.

Four or five members of W. C. T. U. take place of one presiding officer and informally read Bible, lead in first prayer and announce hymn. Others, men and women follow in prayer, speaking, addresses or testimonies. Have abundance of music provided for; two or three articles of great interest in the hands of bright women and earnest men. Try to get as many men and women as possible to feel a responsibility for the success; work beforehand. Meeting informal but it must go. Take up collection. Results good. LUCY A. SWITZER.

PRESIDENT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Gospel temperance meetings on Sunday afternoon have been a success in this state. In some cities there have been union meetings participated in by all the churches by turn. In other cities they have been carried on by reform club and W. C. T. U. A brief stirring address, good singing, promiscuous remarks compose the exercises. In the country these are very effectual, especially on open Sundays. MARY C. WOODY.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF WYOMING TERRITORY.

Frequent singing by congregation, with one song by choir; prayer by member of union; Scripture read by audience after distribution of reference slips; essay on some Scriptural aspect of intemperance; recitation by one or more of Y's and Loyal Legion; select reading on some phase of the liquor problem, not political; a short time for testimony or suggestion from any present; pledge read, and made accessible to signers.

MRS. O. L. FISHER.

NEBRASKA'S PRESIDENT.

Good singing, short, but appropriate scriptural reading with short but pointed remarks while reading. Two or three short prayers for the success of the temperance cause. Two good speakers that come prepared to say just the right things. Let no time be lost, but fill it all up with singing when there seems to be no one to speak. If the leader is active she will cull out different ones and the hour will be all too short, but be sure and close in the hour. I do not favor recitations in gospel meetings. Never close without asking any one that wishes the prayers of the church people to let it be known.

M. A. HITCHCOCK.

PRESIDENT OF COLORADO.

In large cities, a paid missionary should have charge of the meetings, and conversion of souls should be the main thought. The Central Union in Denver has such a missionary, Mrs. Leonard, who gives all her time, and whose efforts are bearing fruit, many signing pledge and "clothed in right mind." In smaller towns the evangelistic superintendent should be at the head of such work; she to call on any to lead or take part. Public speakers, teachers, and the timidest women may be asked. Ministers are too busy Sunday to give any time and it is better for laymen and laywomen to do this work. All phases of the temperance question may be treated, and should be, as there are not the same opportunities to hear these things as in the larger cities. Good music should be a prominent feature, and testimonies and experiences should be encouraged, especially in the city meeting. I would always have the pledge offered. I am speaking of the Sunday afternoon meetings. A Sunday evening gospel temperance meetings I would have patterned somewhat after the noted Sunday evening meeting in Chicago during Convention, in city or country, with pledge circulated. MRS. C. D. H. THOMPSON

EVANGELISTIC WORK.

The corner of a foundation wall, builded of solid granite blocks—that is the appropriate emblem of this department. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ." On this foundation is builded all our work. This department teaches how to study God's Word and how to apply it to heal the hurt of souls. At its head first stood Hannah Whitall Smith, who opened to us the Scripture; "The Lord gave the Word, the women who publish the glad tidings are a great host." Through all the centuries of woman's ignorance and degradation, before she was prepared to rightly publish the gospel, this meaning of the passage was hidden; now when the hunger for God's Word is so great that all the ordained pastors cannot suffice to break the Bread of Life to the famishing multitudes there comes the unmistakable call of God to women and, as their encouragement to respond to it, this hidden meaning is revealed. We shall never forget how it thrilled us when first announced by Mrs Smith in a Bible reading given at a National Convention; yet some doubted, until the Revised Version gave even a stronger rendering than she had given. In the study of the Bible Mrs. Smith has been our great leader; every month she sends out a Bible Reading leaflet, for the local unions; these are used in thousands of unions, and thus tens of thousands of women are incited to study the Bible with new purpose, and are helped in this study. Especially are the readings helpful to the little, weak unions, wherein may not be one woman who feels competent to "lead a meeting" But any one can take these leaflets, announce the texts which the women find in their Bibles, and read the exposition of them, bringing the truth home to all hearts. When the secrets of all hearts are revealed, we feel sure it will appear that thousands of men and women—in crowded cities and little villages, camps and hamlets by the sea—have been led to the Savior and to see a loving Father in the face of His Son, by these Bible readings. Not less important is the help in spiritual growth which they afford to workers; through them many of us have learned practically the truth we had known before only theoretically—that God is a very present help in time of trouble; that He is always ready to guide into all truth; to give wisdom and grace, and that we may rest in Him in the midst of the hardest service.

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, our National evangelist, has proved the proposition that alcohol is the devil's imitation of the Holy Spirit, keeping souls from Christ. It is the strong man armed, who has entered the castle of Mansoul and spoiled the goods; only the Strong One can bind him and cast him out. All over the land gospel meetings are held, in which Christ is presented as the only one who can redeem men from drunkenness and from all sin. Through the pledge to the cross is the route thousands have been led. This gospel work has reached out to all classes and conditions; the Y's have gathered the "other girls" into gospel meetings, and brightened many darkened lives; first with a sense of human comradeship, and through that with the knowledge of the love of their Elder Brother. Only last Sabbath we attended such a meeting; it had grown from a small beginning in the Temperance Rooms, to the auditorium of a large church. Here were girls from the college with keen, questioning minds; girls from the shop, tired and listless; girls from irreligious homes, careless and indifferent when they came in, but soon coming under the influence of the hour. Scattered among them were "our girls," and here and there a loving mother who had come to bring her daughter in the hope that she would find Christ, or to help with her silent prayers or wise words of counsel. The leader was a young girl trained in a Christian home and the Band of Hope; near her around the organ, were grouped a bright bevy of girls, whose well-trained voices were consecrated to God. The Scripture lesson was a single verse of invitation whose every word was full of meaning, brought vividly out by the young leader; the blessed invitation was sung into the hearts of all by the choir and by a beautiful girl whose wonderful voice leads the singing in a city church; when a slight pause occurred she rose and sang "Come Home" most touchingly. Before singing the last verse she paused, and a tender, loving invitation to those who wished to come home to the Father's house brought many to their feet. There was very much praying in this meeting; experiences were briefly told, testimonials given, requests for prayer made, and then it closed; scores of girls remained, while loving-hearted comrades pointed them to the Lamb of God. Thus are the Y's working in the evangelistic department.

The Flower Mission, originated by Mary Stanley, sister of Dean Stanley and co-worker with Florence Nightingale in the Crimea, has been Americanized by saintly Jennie Casseday and made a powerful adjunct in the work of evangelization. The Bible text, tied with white ribbon to a bunch of flowers, has brought salvation to many that church and minister could not reach, the "shut in ones" whether shut in by sickness, by prison bars or by their own strong will. Very pathetic is the record in Miss Casseday's last annual report: "With the waning of its superintendent's physical strength comes new love and zeal and courage through the growth of the Flower Missions, clearer insights and deeper meanings as to what has been, what can be, and what ought to be done to further all temperance measures." It is one of God's blessed compensations that Miss Casseday who has not walked a step for twenty years, has yet brought the gospel invitation to thousands all over the land.

"Go teach all nations" is obeyed by the W. C. T. U. in its work for foreign-speaking people, which becomes each year more of an evangelistic mission, in its work for soldiers, sailors, railroad men, miners, lumbermen, prisoners and the poor. The union tries to enter every open door carrying the open Bible. One branch of this department is the work for social purity which is making a revolution in human thought as well as conduct, and that for Sabbath observance which beside all its beneficent work in securing a better kept Sabbath in the homes and less Sabbath work on railroads and in shops, has obtained millions of signatures to the Sabbath rest petition.

All these varied lines of labor have called out hundreds of women to do the work of evangelists; many have been ordained to the pastorate and are giving good proof of their divine call. The majority of the theological seminaries have been shut against them; how were they prepared for the work? They were shut up to the study of the Bible with the Great Teacher as their guide. The consequence is such an increase in the study of the Word as no other age of the world has witnessed. At first this study was largely individual, with few helps, and amid many discouragements. With the superintendency of Miss Greenwood, began a new era of Bible study by the W. C. T. U. With the coöperation of this department, Dean Wright has perfected a plan of study, something like the Chautauqua system; it embraces a four years' course, including in each year, selected portions of the historical, practical, evangelistic and epistolary portions of the Bible, with recommendations of the best helps. Instruction is carried on by means of recitations and examinations under the supervision of Dean Wright. Examination papers on exhibition at the last National Convention showed that the students were doing work that would compare favorably with that done in theological seminaries. The class for 1892 now numbers sixty-three students.

Meanwhile the question, "Shall woman preach?" is being discussed very extensively; Dr. George P. Hayes, looking at the subject from a Presbyterian standpoint, studying the Bible carefully that he might be able to settle the question for Presbyterian women who felt called to public work for the Master, and yet feared that Paul forbade them, gives a strong and unexpected affirmative in his late book, "May Women Speak?" Dr. Bashford, in "Woman and the Bible," shows conclusively that no divine command shuts woman out of any field of evangelistic work. Miss Willard's "Woman in the Pulpit" emphasizes the same point, and brings out many others. Everywhere Christian thought is turning in this direction. Meanwhile doors are opening both for work and for preparation. Conservative Hartford Theological Seminary has opened her courses of study to women, even though she does specify that study here is for preparation for all forms of Christian work, except pastorate. Garrett Biblical Institute admits women, and the ordination of women to preach in Congregational Churches is becoming so common as not to create surprise. Closely allied to our evangelistic work is the Training School for Deaconesses under the supervision of that grand white-ribboner, Mrs. Lucy Ryder Myers, in Chicago. We hope she will conduct the Bible study course at the Lake Bluff School of Methods next summer.

Thus out into the highways and hedges, into crowded city streets, and into prison cells, goes the W. C. T. U. seeking to save. It is because of its evangelistic work that thousands of gospel meetings are held weekly, that the lumbermen in the forests, the miners in the mountains, the soldiers in camp, the sailors on ship or in port, have the gospel preached to them; it has put matrons in scores of city prisons, encompassed every railroad man with prayer; established Sunday-schools where Sunday-schools were never known before, and carried the open Bible into the darkest portions of our land.

IMMIGRATION.

This country is the meeting place of the ends of the earth. Attracted by our vast natural resources, and by our popular form of government, hundreds of thousands of people from Europe, from Asia, from "the isles of the sea," immigrate to this continent annually. The latest official statistics are for the year ending June 30, 1889. The total immigration during the preceding decade was 4,981,967. The following statement shows the number that arrived each year of that decade: 1879, 177,826; 1880, 457,257; 1881, 669,431; 1882, 788,992; 1883, 603,322; 1884, 518,592; 1885, 395,346; 1886, 334,203; 1887, 490,-109; 1888, 546,889.

From the year 1882, when immigration reached its maximum, nearly 800,000, it decreased until 1886, when the number was 334,203. The figures for 1887 and 1888 show that the number is again on the increase, and with a fair degree of prosperity in this country, we may expect a constantly rising tide of immigration, unless something shall be done to restrict it. There are now over 8,000,-000 people of foreign birth in the United States—nearly one-seventh of the entire population. So large a number, many of whom are alien in thought and conduct, as well as by birth, is, of itself, sufficient to subject our institutions to the severest strain; and when we remember that these 8,000,000 aliens have 10,000,000 children as illy-qualified for the duties of citizenship as their parents, we shall see that the problem of self-government is still more complicated. Statistics of New York, Massachusetts and Rhode Island show that persons of foreign birth, together with persons whose parents are foreign born, constitute over seventy-five per cent of all criminals. Probably the same percentage would hold true for the whole country. About ninety per cent of those engaged in the business of making criminals and paupers—the liquor traffic—are foreign born, or of foreign-born parentage.

The chief peril from immigrants arises from their concentration in our large cities. Sixty-two per cent of the population of Cincinnati, eighty-three per cent of Cleveland, sixty-three per cent of Boston, eighty per cent of New York, and ninety per cent of Chicago, are foreign by birth or parentage. It is the dangerous class of immigrants who congregate in cities. The Scandinavians and the better class of Germans engage in agriculture, and so are distributed over the country. But the more turbulent class of Germans, the Irish, Poles, Russians, Bohemians, Italians, Frenchmen, constitute the greater part of our city populations. It is difficult to see how these heterogeneous masses of ignorant, impoverished immigrants from all corners of the earth can be assimilated and absorbed into the body politic. If they were distributed evenly among the native population, and thus brought into contact with American ideas and sentiments they might in the course of a generation be educated into tolerable sympathy with and comprehension of, republican institutions. But not only do the worst of them concentrate in cities; they also form themselves into communities, socialistic and anarchistic groups, which resist assimilation and make war upon our institutions. One result is that prematurely naturalized foreigners carry their nationality and their anti-republican ideas as distinct factors into politics. Thus we have the "German vote," the "Irish vote," and the "socialist vote." With neither national patriotism nor any sense of civic duty, these un-Americanized American citizens are easily manipulated by demagogues. There is no more serious menace to civilization than our alien-ruled cities.

The perils from immigration are aggravated by its disastrous effect on the labor market. It has created and is continually increasing the surplus labor of the country, which, by its very existence, unsettles all economic relations and creates discontent and disorder. Consider how great must be the peril from the continual accession of immigrants to the ranks of the unemployed. The very fact that there is no place for them, the very fact that they are, for the time being, superfluous—that disappointment and suffering are in store for them, places them in the turbulent, dangerous class which is agitating and planning for the overthrow of our institutions. The unemployed will always be found among the subverters of social order.

Manifestly, self-preservation requires that something be done to check the flood of immigration. The President's message urges that avowed socialists and anarchists shall "not only be denied citizenship, but a domicile." These are strong indications that an act to restrict immigration will be adopted by the present Congress. A bill by Representative Oates, of Alabama, wholly excludes idiots, paupers, incapables, convicts, anarchists, persons affected with contagious diseases, or under contract to labor, or whose passage has been prepaid in consideration of a promise to labor. It requires an examination of intending immigrants by the consul of the United States at the port of embarkation, and the possession of a certificate from such consul that the holder is not prohibited from entry into the United States by our laws.

Such a measure would doubtless secure to us a better class of immigrants; but it would impose upon consuls at foreign ports the difficult task of examining and sifting annually a half-million of people who would seek to embark for this country. There is no reason why our government should bear the immense burden and expense of that work; and it is probable that it would not be thoroughly done, that the consuls would be frequently deceived by bad men applying for certificates aided by persons interested in having them emigrate. A bill not open to these objections has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Mitchell of Oregon. It requires that the immigrant before leaving his native country shall obtain from his government a passport identifying him and giving his name, title, rank, occupation, etc. As political offenders and known criminals would not apply to their own governments for passports, and others that applied would fail to get them in countries that discourage emigration, it is plain that this bill would materially lessen the annual influx of aliens.

While we gladly recognize the fact that many of our foreign-born citizens are as good as the best native-born, we believe the time has come when Congress should adopt strenuous measures to prevent the landing on our shores of all who do not promise to become desirable accessions to our population.

THAT there is a growing demand for temperance literature in our Sunday-schools, is evident from the increasing subscription list of the monthly Young Crusader, and from the calls that come for special literature suitable for distribution on the last Sabbath of each quarter. Primary teachers, in particular, are asking for help in preparing the temperance lessons for their classes. The W. T. P. A. has met the need in the past by means of the quarterly temperance lessons issued as a supplement to The Young Crusader. Now, however, it purposes to supply still further help in the shape of "Illustrated Bible Temperance Lessons," prepared by Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, National superintendent of Sunday-school work.

The first quarter's Manual will be ready by March 15, and it is expected that the series for the entire year will be out by the last of June. The Manual will include the temperance lessons of the International Series, but will not be, of necessity, confined to use on any particular day. Each lesson will include advanced teaching and helps for primary teachers, recitations, etc. But the special feature, and the one for which we predict an especially cordial welcome, is the chart of pictures that accompanies the Manual. These are to be lithographs in faint outline, which the teacher may reproduce by charcoal before her class. There are three of these in connection with this quarter's lessons, together with a chart on the cost of liquors. It is intended to open thus to the mind of the child "Eye-gate as well as Ear-gate." All teachers know that this is a true principle in teaching. For terms, see advertising pages.

WE give the following subjects sent out by the Woman's Ethical Club of Rochester, N. Y. in the hope that local unions and mothers' meetings may get many good topics and helpful ideas by the attentive study of what has evidently cost those bright Eastern women much thought:

Proportion in Life.—What relative proportion of our time shall we give to home, to church and to social duties? Are we often in danger of setting aside great duties for trivial ones? How can we balance the claims of others with our duties to ourselves? What underlying principle is there which will not only harmonize but inspire all these relationships.

The Training of Children.—Education the cultivation of power. Learning to think versus learning things. How early shall we train our children to share the responsibilities of the home? May children suffer from too much, as well as too little parental attention? How can we best bring home to children the natural and spiritual lessons of their own experience?

Social Ethics.—Woman's place and duty toward the ethical questions of the hour. What are the responsibilities of women toward those who serve them? What may women with wealth do, individually, to change the false position of labor? What should be expected of those without money? What of the workingwoman herself? What associated effort can we bring to bear on these evils?

Personal Religion.—What is belief? What is religion? How may our religion glorify the "trivial round," the common task? What are the greatest aids to spiritual development? Do religious expression and association increase our spiritual power? How can we make our religion the deepest reality of our lives?

Sincerity and Conventionality.—The use and abuse of conventionality. The relation of expediency and policy to principle—where they may harmonize, and where they must be antagonistic. What is the basis of true courtesy? Can we practice absolute sincerity in our social relations? May we ever sacrifice truth to love?

Elements of Happiness.—Activity a means of happiness. The happiness possible even in uncongenial routine. May happiness be independent of environment? Have we a right to pursue happiness to an end? Is it always true that the good are happy? The happiness that may become blessedness.

THE editorial columns of our exchange, The Champion, bristle this week with points for Prohibitionists. Here is one: "While we consider $1,000 license as a legalized robbery, we prefer a high license system to prohibition." Why so, if prohibition simply takes off the restraints and provides for the sale of liquor without let, hindrance or tax, as we hear it does? Why prefer a system which costs a thousand dollars a year to every man coming under its jurisdiction? The probability of prohibition in Nebraska is conceded, although it would pay the trade to spend two hundred thousand dollars in the state to defeat it. The Champion pronounces the Dakota law, "logical, absolute and merciless, without a single concession, or shadow of compromise." Commenting upon the fact that no distinction is made between the mildest fermented beverage and the most intoxicating liquors—all alcoholic drinks coming under the same ban—our contemporary, who is in a position to judge, says, "This is logical." So hereafter we are not to have beer and light wines masquerading as the rational remedy for drunkenness. The warning is given in capital letters that something as disastrous as the Dakota law "awaits our friends in Illinois, Michigan, Kentucky, and other states where the cauldron is boiling," if they be not up and doing. The daily notification sheet of the mercantile agency of this city, in one day last month—January 22—reported twenty saloon-keepers in Dakota as having "quit business." Not one was so reported from the great state of Illinois, but one from Michigan and one in Minnesota was dead. This shows the security which the traffic enjoys in these representative states of regulation and restriction.

EDWARD B. HUMPHREYS is a leading merchant in Woodstown, N. J. His wife is state superintendent of the department for the study of heredity in the W. C. T. U. Years ago the local society had a column in the local press of this well-to-do Quaker village, but when the period of political oppression began, that column was taken away, whereupon Mr. Humphreys said, "I will start a paper that shall be freely open to the white-ribbon women"—and he did so. Then as the storm grew louder, the churches were closed to the W. C. T. U. when the good merchant said, "I will build an opera house and they shall share its benefits," and he did—the prettiest auditorium in town. Later on when they sought in vain to get license voted out, the W. C. T. U. greatly desired that a temperance hotel should be opened, but they had not the wherewithal. "I will put up such a house," said the good merchant, and he did—the finest in the county. Good Samaritans who have plethoric pocketbooks, for the sake of home protection, will you not go and do likewise?

THE Chicago Daily News, which is not only the swiftest and surest of news-gatherers, but a fearless leader of the best public opinion, again extends us the right hand of fellowship, in one of its brief, bright editorials. To be so well understood by a metropolitan daily is delightful, both for its kindness and its strangeness. After recounting our educational and evangelistic work it adds:

"What of the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in politics? If that organization were not the foe of the saloon it would be but a sham and its name would be full of deceit. It was born in the midst of a woman's war on dramshops. During the period of its existence it has petitioned many Legislatures for laws opposing the sale of liquor. It has met with countless rebuffs and at all times with scant courtesy. It has seen that saloon-keepers, and not women, are powerful in both political parties. Was it not natural, therefore, that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union should give its allegiance to the Third party, which, like itself, owes its existence to hatred of the dramshop? For doing this shall it be called that party's slave?

"The W. C. T. U. is greater and purer than any political party. The man who sneers at it or derides its work either does not know whereof he speaks, or else is inspired by motives which are not to his credit."

The Watch-Tower.

Colonel Bain who has just closed a lecture tour in which he gave thirty-three lectures in thirty-three days, and traveled four thousand five hundred miles through ten states, says: "I have never known so much real active work being done by the W. C. T. U. Many members who had grown careless have become earnest workers, and new members are being solicited at every meeting. There seems to be new life in the ranks of the great 'white ribbon army.' If each union will work for new members and help organize other unions, this will be the greatest year of the W. C. T. U."

Mrs. Dr. Daniel Steele, in writing to a friend recently, used the following gracious language, which ought to be true of every Christian woman: "I am much the same as in those other days, only older, and perhaps gayer of heart than then." If we cannot say it why can we not, and if we can why should we not?

Rev. Dr. Tupper recently lectured to four hundred Vassar College girls, and told them that five millions a year is spent for ostrich feathers and eight for kid gloves, but only five millions for missions; and, we might add, not half a million for that greatest of all missions—the Christian temperance reform of these last decades.

Says Max O'Rell in his rambles through American society: "One of the consequences of the position which woman takes in the United States is, that in good American drawing-rooms conversation is never dull. You are amiable without having to be gallant, and none of those stereotyped compliments which so often spoil the charm of a conversation between a man and a woman are expected of you."

Mrs. John A. Logan has invited "our own correspondent," Margaret Spencer, to take charge of the Mothers' Department in her Home Journal. The two ladies have been devoted friends for years, as were their husbands, whose deaths occurred within a year of each other.

Five years ago, one hot July day, two tired workers visited a little town in Southern Illinois and organized a Band of Hope. A faithful lady took charge of it, and through long years of discouragement carried on the work. Now the seed she sowed, often in tears, is bearing abundant harvest, as shown by this letter: "At Watson, where we organized that little Band of Hope," writes one of those ladies to the other, "there has been a great revival, and the Band of Hope has received public credit for the same. Three leading men—one thirty-seven, another forty-five and the third sixty—have followed their children first into the Band of Hope, and thence into the church. The elder one said in open meeting that it was the work of the Band that brought him to Christ." Herein is encouragement to sow beside all waters.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap is afield with her doubly-polished lancet of logic and oratory. The New England states are now gathering in the harvest of her eloquent strokes for the home and the nation, and on April 2, the National Reform Association Convention, at Washington, D. C., will listen to her stirring pleas for home protection. April 1 and 3 are vacant. Unions in the vicinity of Washington desiring those dates should apply at once to the Woman's Lecture Bureau, 161 La Salle St., Chicago.

One of the prominent leaders of the King's Daughters' work in New York, in ordering THE UNION SIGNAL, gives a prophetic hint of the "good time coming" when all Christian organizations shall come in under one name and one banner: "So often these days do I see the white and purple ribbon or the Maltese cross mingling, that I feel convinced that we shall aid each other in the future more and more. This sad world needs all the help it can get from every source."

One of our white-ribboner's children—a boy of five—when asked if he would not "like to be a preacher," made this original objection: "I would, mamma, only I should have to earn my living on Sunday."

"A feast of good things" is the verdict of the citizens of Baltimore, Md., who have heard Mrs. Chant during her recent lectures in that city. Aside from her public lectures, Mrs. Chant was present at two delightful afternoon teas, one at the home of Mrs. Summerfield Baldwin, president of the state W. C. T. U. and one at Mrs. E. A. Robinson's, state superintendent of Y work. Invitations were sent to ladies not interested in any phase of the temperance work, and the result is a wonderful awakening among all classes.

ON DUTY.

Queen's Gardens.

MRS. LAURA ORMISTON CHANT.

BY AN ENGLISHWOMAN.

Laura Ormiston Dibbin was born October 9, 1848, at Chepstow, Monmouthshire, England. Her mother was possessed of considerable beauty, and was a very accomplished woman of eminent Scotch descent. Her father was a civil engineer, and at the time of this, his second daughter's birth and earliest childhood, was engaged in the difficult task of building a tubular railway bridge over the river Wye. Very early the little girl was deeply impressed by beauty in Nature, and the sound of the wind soughing in the elms in the garden, the murmur of the river, and the slow pealing of the chimes from the old parish church, "brought hot tears to my eyes," she writes, "with inexpressible sense of their power to stir emotion within me, when I was very little."

When she was nearly five her parents removed to London, and the thought of how many hungry and ragged people there were in the great city, often weighed down the heart of the small philanthropist with unchildlike pain. "We were very strictly brought up, and delinquencies were punished in the stupid, brutal way that is now dying out among intelligent people. But in spite of the watchful eyes there were upon me, I managed to slip away into my pocket, while at table, a fair proportion of the bread and butter allotted to me, and to give unseen to some hungry beggar child. One Sunday, having grown more bold, and being deeply moved at the rags worn by the crossing-sweeper, I put some damson tarts into the pocket of a light summer frock, with consequences easier to imagine than describe!"

The children—Mrs. Chant was one of nine—were early imbued with a great curiosity as to the whereabouts of the devil, who was a prominent personage in the theological teaching they received, and Laura and one of her brothers conceived the desperate scheme of digging down to find him in the back garden. "We dug on in awed silence and with beating hearts at the thought of the reception he might give us if we came on him too suddenly, and by and by, the sun being hot, and only about three feet of a hole accomplished, we concluded to abandon the task. 'He might be angry at us,'" said the realistic children.

At seven years old the first written hymn appeared; the opening verse ran thus:

"Up a high, steep hill we go,
Leaving every sin below,
Climbing to the Happy Land,
Where we shall with the angel band
Sing glory."

The last verse was as follows:

"Dear Jesus, walk with us the way,
Lest we should ever go astray;
Oh, guide us onward by Thy hand,
That we may in the Happy Land
Sing glory."

There is not, after all, a great difference between the thought of the seven-year-old girl given above, set to music by herself, and sung in a sweet, childish voice to parents, brothers and sisters, and the thought of the forty-one-year-old woman written for the Sunday-school children of an Oxford church and set to music for them by her, the preacher of the anniversary sermons. Here are the first and last verses of the latter:

"Listen to Jesus, children all,
If you would from self be free;
Listen to Jesus, hear Him call—
'Little children, follow Me.'

"Listen to Jesus, in the day,
When Death's solemn hour shall be,
He will point up the shining way,
Saying, 'Children, follow Me.'"

When Laura was about twelve years old a momentous change was made by her parents as to their place of worship. Strict Episcopalians, and evangelical, they had to choose between the Scylla of an over-crowded and dreary parish church, and a bright neighboring church of "High" proclivities, and the Charybdis of going to a Nonconformist chapel. They decided on the latter, and faced the then formidable gauntlet of outraged respectability on the part of friends and relations, who were horror-stricken at the thought of the lowness of a dissenting chapel. It was an excellent choice; and the preaching of the renowned and scholarly pastor, the Rev. John Stoughton, proved of inestimable value to the young girl who has grown up to be a preacher herself.

At fifteen Laura became a Sunday-school teacher, and carried on that work in different parts of England with little intermission till she was twenty-two. "I think I have had almost every kind of Bible class you can think of," she has declared; "girls, boys, ragged or well-dressed, factory hands, male or female, soldiers, bargees, very old people, domestic servants, etc." For five or six years she taught in three ladies' schools, taking a higher position and larger salary at each change, and then entered a hospital as nurse. After a year as probationer, she became Sister in the largest hospital in Great Britain, the London Hospital in Whitechapel, where, during two and a half very busy, but happy years, she met her future husband, and decided to abandon nursing for the study of medicine. Her lover entered heart and soul into the project; and it was prophetic of his unstinted sympathy and loyal devotion to her public work in after years, that he did his utmost to help her obtain what she wanted. Lack of money for what was then an extremely costly and difficult undertaking, owing to the powerful opposition of the medical schools to women entering the profession, prevented her from qualifying before marriage; and afterward the need of her services as a public speaker and worker in philanthropy soon closed the door of ambition on medicine. "But the study and experience as a nurse, together with the memorable year that followed as assistant manager of a lunatic asylum, has been of such incalculable value," writes Mrs. Chant, "both to myself, my husband as a professional man, my household, and the world in which I work, that I am certain the serious study of the laws of health should form a prominent item in the education of every young man and woman."

All this while music had played no small part in so full a life, and the sweet singer and song-maker found a ready welcome everywhere, through this one beautiful gift. Then the singer was a born artist also, an excellent needle-woman, a good cook, and a veritable powder magazine of fun and innocent merriment, and perhaps it is these elements of character that have achieved these gifts quite as much as a broad and industrious culture, together with inherited powers of speech that have produced a speaker and preacher who is so spontaneous and so untiring.

"I owe a world of gratitude to the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, poet, preacher, apostle of art, philanthropist, and my most revered pastor for now ten years." She says: "He was curate of the dismal old parish church of Kensington when I was a child, and though I did not know his name, my whole heart went out to him in admiring love, because of his beautiful presence, rich, sympathetic voice, tenderness to the babies when he baptized them, and one act of kindness to me. I almost cried myself ill over him when our seeking another place of worship took me out of his orbit, and so enduring was the memory of him, that when, twenty years after, my husband and I walked into his chapel in Bloomsbury, simply to hear him as a popular preacher whom I did not know I had ever seen before, a new and heavenly joy came to me that will remain always. It is difficult to put in words what his teaching, with so tender a memory behind it, did for me. I had always been deeply and emotionally religious, and passionately fond of doing good, but I was held back by an overwhelming idea of the value of religious opinions, while the question of religious conduct and motives seemed more a matter of expediency and temperament. He changed all that. 'It is your humble, loving following in the footsteps of Jesus Christ, not your opinion about this or that view of His nature and origin, that will redeem you from the clutch of your selfishness, and lead you out of the sin which so easily besets you,' said one sermon that gave me a sleepless night. Then his sound common-sense on the questions of poverty, dirt, ignorance and crime, on the woman question, and His masterliness in the realms of poetry, art, and literature, his scientific knowledge, and above all his simple kindliness and goodness, made him a teacher at whose feet one could sit Sunday after Sunday, and become more and more fit for the world-wide work that has been given one by the Giver of all good things."

Mrs. Chant's first public address was on the position of "Women in the Nineteenth Century," advocating the franchise for them on the same terms as for men, as the only permanent means of redressing the wrongs that have been done them. Then the temperance platform claimed her; and then that of social purity.

"I had no idea of touching, the to me, most revolting work being done by Mrs. Josephine Butler and others on behalf of getting the repeal of the infamous Contagious Diseases Acts," says Mrs. Chant, "but again a stern warning sermon shook me out of my cowardice, and sent me forth to do my share of fighting in the terrible battle against state protected prostitution. Fortunately I had little idea that the preacher himself was at that time on the wrong side! He came right afterwards; but in this matter the woman disciple was wiser, and saw more clearly how her sex was insulted by such legislation, than the man teacher who had looked at the matter from its least important point of view."

Perhaps the best idea of Mrs. Chant's varied channels of interest and labor may be gained from the fact that she is on the executive committee of the Women's Liberal Federation of England, of which Mrs. Gladstone is president; on that of the National Society for Promoting Woman Suffrage; is vice president of one or two liberal associations; one of the four vice-presidents of the Peace Society; a member of the council of the National Vigilance Association of Great Britain and Ireland; a most ardent advocate of physical training and gymnasiums, on which subject she has written and lectured—Mélio's work on gymnastics having an introduction by her; also a Good Templar, a Rechabite, a British temperance woman, a Young Abstainer (to which order of teetotalers all her children belong), a member of the Band of Hope, and various local temperance societies. She has published one volume of poems entitled, "Verona," and is about to bring out another, and a book of "Action Songs" for children, composed and written for her own little ones, which will be on sale in April. But beyond all this is the personal work for individuals; "And our house," she writes, "is indeed a refuge for the destitute, and a place where broken lives and hearts get mended under the influence of love and care. The criminal and the outcast, the giddy and the stupid, the lonely, the poor, they are seldom out of our home-circle, and we have never been the worse, but the better for taking them in and helping them."

Mrs. Chant's children are four beautiful little people, good, happy and clever, and her home life is what it ought to be where husband and wife are so truly one, and where love is the law that governs, and God the center and the goal of aspiration. With his warm approval she is in the United States en route on a rapid tour around the world, by invitation of Miss Willard, who is opening the way before her in all civilized countries where the white ribbon is indeed an open sesame, and the watchword so consorts with Mrs. Chant's own animus in life, "For God, Home and Humanity."

RHODE ISLAND.

GLEANINGS.

These are indeed dark days for those who see only as man seeth. The white flag is trampled ruthlessly under foot, and rum rules in Rhode Island. As one of our leading papers says: "The surrender to the rumshop has been complete so far as political managers are concerned, the present law having been framed by the leading counsel of the liquor sellers." The natural results follow. New breweries are being erected, and many men tempted by the profits of the legalized traffic, are leaving other business, and entering the ranks of destroyers. Saloons are multiplying on every side, there being an average of one saloon for every two hundred and twenty-eight inhabitants throughout the state.

The following tabulated statement of licenses is taken from the report of the general treasurer of Rhode Island:

The total amount of money received by the state from the sixteen different towns and cities and the district of Narragansett was $69,251.10. The table shows the ratio of the number of licenses to the population of the different places:

Town or City.	Licenses.	Population.	Rates.
Bristol	14	5,737	1 to 409
Burrillville	21	5,126	244
Cranston	15	6,005	400
Cumberland	46	7,163	156
East Providence	19	6,816	359
Glocester	5	1,922	384
Johnston	29	7,274	251
Lincoln	71	17,229	243
Newport	78	19,566	251
North Providence	6	1,478	246
North Smithfield	6	3,077	513
Pawtucket	133	22,906	172
Providence	532	118,070	222
Scituate	4	3,606	902
Warwick	43	13,286	309
Woonsocket	97	16,199	167
Total	1,123	255,460	228

Warren has since reported twenty-three licenses granted, an average of one drinking saloon to every 174 inhabitants.

Their work of destruction goes on day and night, almost without a check. Drunkards go reeling through our streets, and our boys, lured by the gorgeous palaces of sin, are following in the downward road, while breaking hearts in desolate homes cry out, "How long, O Lord! How long?"

Thoughtful people everywhere are asking the question, "Is this the millennium promised us under license?" While those who believed that they were acting for the best good of the state by voting to repeal the amendment are learning bitter lessons. Let Nebraska and other states that are contemplating whether or not to have prohibition, meditate upon these facts. License as a restriction in Rhode Island has proved itself a delusion and a snare. The only restriction is extermination. Even the advocates of license are appalled at the results of their own work. A petition to the General Assembly is already prepared asking that body to raise the license fee and limit the number of saloons. They state that "the present license law promotes intemperance by allowing the indefinite multiplication of saloons, thereby creating a power which is the more difficult to control the larger it grows, and which exerts an injurious influence upon the morals of the people of Rhode Island." Yet instead of demanding that it be put under the ban of the law, they merely ask "that it be so placed that its necessary evils may be minimized, and that it may not, except to a degree that is unavoidable, neutralize or destroy the work of education, philanthropy and religion." The Journal itself acknowledges that there are "too many saloons by half," and says, "If the present state of things continues the entire law will be eventually overthrown."

So these very excesses may be the means of the ultimate overthrow of the business, for there must be patriotism enough left in our state to-day, if once thoroughly aroused, to purify politics, banish the saloon, and make Rhode Island an honor instead of a disgrace to her citizens. During all this darkness, though out of our sight, we believe the seeds of good are slowly germinating. God's care is over all, and with a steady faith in Him, our women are waiting for the springing blade which gives promise of the full corn in the ear. And while they wait they till the ground and sow new seed. Aye! and many of these are watered with tears.

Miss Lawson, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, is addressing meetings of the teachers in different parts of the state, and asks the unions to arrange for such gatherings in their localities.

The superintendent of work among foreigners, Mrs. I. C. Manchester, is doing good work. For three summers she has personally conducted open air meetings at Point Street Bridge, where Germans, Irish, Italians, and Portuguese are always represented. Quantities of literature have been distributed here and along the wharves, and in vessels lying at anchor. Successful meetings of a similar nature have also been held in other places. This is a department that should receive the earnest attention of all our unions. Thousands of French Canadians, with Germans, Irish, Swedes, and others are coming into our little state each year, bringing with them the customs of the old world, with little or no knowledge of our institutions. Yet they soon obtain the full rights of citizenship, with a power at the ballot box which, unless properly educated, menaces our free institutions. This is an open door, and we hope the coming year will see every union doing loving service among these brothers and sisters from other countries. The carefully prepared temperance leaflets in French and German, which may be obtained at our headquarters, are of inestimable value in this work of enlightenment and evangelization.

Lectures are being given, with an occasional convention. The Rev. Sam Small has been in the state under W. C. T. U. auspices. Chepachet, Graniteville, and Exeter unions have each observed a temperance Sabbath with good results. The Providence Y's had a stirring address at their tea rooms, from Mrs. Ida Buxton Cole. It was followed by refreshments and a social time. It is not for our Christian sisterhood to say, "Alas! How shall we do?" but to answer those who are disheartened by the power of the enemy, "Fear not," God's forces are round about us. "His arm is not shortened that it cannot save." "We know whom we have believed and are persuaded that He is able to keep that which we have committed unto him."

Prohibition is coming again, and next time it is coming to stay.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Some of our unions have been doing good work. Mrs. Helen L. Bullock lectured at Cheyenne in November, and held several parlor meetings and succeeded in awakening considerable interest in the cause. I do not know at what other points she spoke, as no report was made.

Miss Moore lectured at Green River, Rock Springs and Cheyenne in December, en route to New Mexico, and on her return westward lectured at Laramie, Rock Springs, and Evanston. She was expected to speak at Green River two evenings, but the snow was so deep and there was so much sickness in the place, and the audience was so small that we just had a little visit with her and she went on to Evanston. Miss Moore complains of smaller audiences in this territory than any other territory or state she has ever visited. The people missed a rare chance of improvement by not hearing her, as she is one of the best speakers that has ever lectured here. All who heard her, save a few saloon-keepers and their wives, were delighted.

Dr. Baldwin gave a very instructive and entertaining lecture in Laramie, where there is a very thriving union. They have a reading-room there which proves an attractive resort for young men, and which does much good. The Cheyenne union has some very efficient workers. Miss Moore gave two lectures in Evanston, besides occupying the pulpit of Rev. O. L. Fisher for Sunday's sermon. She intended lecturing at Alma, but the weather was so inclement, that it was impracticable.

We have good working unions at several points far from the railroad, at small places in the heart of the mountains—at Douglass, Manville, Big Horn and Sheridan. Our territorial president expects to organize more unions during the summer, but not much could be done this winter, which has been unusually severe.

WOMEN AT THE POLLS.

Some time ago, somebody through THE UNION SIGNAL asked if serving lunch at the polls was not a bribe. We have made it a rule to have refreshments at all the polling places where practical at all at our elections, and we have come to recognize it as obeying the Scripture injunction in regard to the strong bearing the infirmities of the weak. We have never had a saloon, in the common acceptation of the term, in our county, yet we have discovered that "pocket saloons" will stalk abroad during election times. We also found that by being on the ground in time with a cup of strong coffee and a sandwich, and inducing the voter, who was weak in the flesh, to strengthen the inner man with a lunch, we kept him sober, and the result naturally would be a sober vote. I have found in a long experience that many drinking men are anxious for prohibition, and when themselves will vote for the home every time. So I always feel it to be just as incumbent upon me to arrange for the prevention of the drink poison by a full stomach, as I would ward off malarial poison by a dose of quinine. You will feel fully rewarded when the "weak ones" come to you with a sparkle in the eye not caused by alcoholic stimulants, but the consciousness of a victory gained over self, and say with an exultant ring in the voice, "We have gained the day;" and you know you have sent them home sober.

In our South Dakota prohibition campaign last summer, I had the great pleasure of spending fourteen weeks of continuous labor in the lecture field, and because of its successful operation in my own county, urged everywhere that the women should take the children and go to the polls, and give refreshments where possible. One prominent man had said in my hearing, "The women can add five hundred per cent by working at the polls." I resolved then and there that as far as my influence extended, our women should be there. I had a curiosity to know the result; consequently wrote to the presidents and county presidents with whom I had labored, and the answers were all favorable, notwithstanding some had entered that field with fear and trembling. Instances were given where the men with pocket flasks were found busy plying their trade, and these soon left after the women opened up their lunch counters. Our plan has always been to have some modest little girls with their buttonhole bouquets tied with white ribbon and Scripture texts attached, giving each voter our ticket as well as pinning on the bouquet. Some very pathetic incidents came under my notice. I believe if undertaken with a prayerful spirit, and armed with all womanly modesty, this is one way of helping to purify politics; and it is probably helping to melt away the old-time prejudice against women standing beside their brothers in the battle for a pure government; for I notice that after one trial good men take to it kindly. In some instances the voters sent home for their wives to bring refreshments and help them; and the consequence was the liquor element was routed.

WORK IN ELMIRA.

Elmira boasts of three unions, with a membership of two hundred. In October last two of these unions were educating three hundred children in juvenile schools. They engage in department work in the regular order of the monthly readings. At the head of these unions are three live, earnest women, ever on the alert for opportunities to do good.

A little over a year ago the Central Union, with Mrs. O. C. Dounce as president, established a coffee house on the small savings from its treasury. It now serves two hundred meals per day, from which it nets a profit of fifty dollars per month. To the efforts of the Central Union also, we owe the appointment of a police matron. The seventh ward circulated one hundred copies of Frances E. Willard's annual address.

Mrs. J. K. Barney is expected soon to hold evangelistic meetings.

REC. SEC'Y.

CHEMUNG COUNTY CONVENTION.

The eleventh convention of the W. C. T. U. was held at Erin, on invitation of a flourishing union of twenty-five members which had not yet celebrated its first anniversary. Artistic fingers had placed over the altar the letters in evergreen, "Welcome, W. C. T. U." A consecration meeting was held under the direction of Mrs. Carrie Thompson, of Elmira. Mrs. O. N. Hinman spoke eloquent words of welcome, to which, in the absence of Mrs. Adelia Palmer, of Pine Valley, Mrs. H. D. Hodgson responded extempore in behalf of the guests.

Although this convention was held in a remote part of the county, familiar faces were to be seen in every part of the church, and before noon nine unions were represented. A paper by A. M. Wean, of Havana, which reflected the ability and culture of its author, was read by Mrs. Fannie Glines. Mrs. Alice Baker, Mrs. M. E. Hurlburt, Mrs. Olive Howell and Mrs. J. C. Roberts also presented papers. Reports of presidents and superintendents in three minutes talks formed an interesting feature of the program, and "The Injustice of the Disfranchisement of Woman" was freely discussed in a franchise symposium. By vote of the executive committee of the Chemung county W. C. T. U., the union which entertains the convention is limited in the exercise of hospitality to the serving of tea and coffee only.

Thursday evening by seven o'clock a large audience had gathered to hear the report of the National Convention given by our county president. Only those who have listened to Mrs. Colburn can fully realize her power over an audience. With the exception of frequent bursts of applause perfect quiet prevailed. As if by magic she seated us in Battery D, and one by one presented to us the great champions of prohibition. We were among the 10,000 present on the day of the election of officers. As the cornet struck the chords of "Home, Sweet Home," we saw our President again escorted to her chair, from which we trust she may wield her gentle influence until she hears the Master's voice saying, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many." The address occupied fifty minutes, after which the convention adjourned sine die.

PLEASANT ENTERTAINMENT IN STERLING.

Thinking perhaps a report of our entertainment would interest some of your readers I will give one to the best of my ability. Our entertainment was rather a novel one, being called a "bag social." First we had about seventy-five programs written on little candy sacks; the program was made up of recitations, duets, solos, etc., then we filled them with cotton and tied them around the top with white ribbon (our emblem); these were given to the people as a memento of the occasion. The lunch, which consisted of doughnuts, crackers, pickles, cheese, cookies, cake, etc., was tied up in large sacks, and they were sold two for twenty-five cents, one for fifteen (our Y prices). We ran short of refreshments, not thinking there would be so many in attendance, but did the best we could under the circumstances.

The white-ribboners furnished the eatables, and they were to have half of the proceeds, and we were to have the other half, but as the Y. M. C. A. was furnishing its library we thought we would give to it our half, which we did. After paying expenses there was $11.40 left, so we thought we did very nicely. We are going to give "Ye Deestrick Skule" before very long.

I hope some other Y will give a "bag social," as it is a very odd as well as an instructive entertainment. We give one social of some kind every month.

WORK OF THE WEST PHILADELPHIA UNION.

We have thirty-nine vice-presidents representing us in twenty-three churches of the various denominations. Our membership roll numbers about two hundred names. Fifteen of the departments of work, recommended by the National Union, have been taken up, and are being prosecuted with zeal and energy, yet we hope for more and better things.

Eleven monthly business meetings have been held during the year, being always preceded by a devotional meeting. There have also been a number of executive meetings. All of these have convened at the parlor of the Y. M. C. A., which is now our home.

At the house of the president, there have been held frequent conferences for workers, which have stimulated interest and activity. Efficient work has been done on the board for police matrons. Seven matrons are now in active service, and two more will be shortly appointed. Five public mass-meetings have been given by the union, and addresses made. One Loyal Temperance Legion has been formed and another is about to be started, in a room which has been provided for that purpose. Work has been done for the Chinese, and also for the Indians. Thirty-five meetings have been held with prisoners; and many visits have been paid to prisoners in their cells, sailors on their ships, and to the inmates of the almshouse.

Twenty-two thousand four hundred and six pages of literature have been distributed by the various departments, with several hundred religious papers and magazines. We have over fifty subscribers to our National organ, THE UNION SIGNAL. During the year, $565.98 have been received by the treasurer, and $503.21 expended.

A stated meeting of the union is held, on the last Tuesday of every month, at 3 p. m., in the parlor of the Y. M. C. A., 40th and Powelton Avenue. All intending members or casual visitors are cordially welcomed.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

PLEASANT words are spoken of Miss DeVelling's work in Washington, and it is believed that the W. C. T. U. will be wonderfully built up by her good help.

THE Cumberland, Md., union grieves over the loss of a valued and beloved member, Mrs. Cara U. Little. She was the president of the Y. W. C. T. U. for four years; beautiful resolutions were passed by the Y's in honor of her work and memory. She passed away with full confidence in Him who has been her guide and stay through life; the end was most peaceful, a fitting termination to a life of piety and unselfish labor for others.

MRS. C. M. WOODWARD, Nebraska state organizer of the W. C. T. U. spoke to the people of Arlington, Neb., on the Constitutional Amendment three evenings in February. She is an able and effective speaker, and exhibits great earnestness in the cause she has at heart. A crowded house each evening plainly indicated the appreciation of her lectures by those who heard her.

THE W. C. T. U. of Washington, Iowa, recently adopted appropriate resolutions concerning the death of a beloved member, their faithful treasurer, Mrs. F. H. Heck, who has passed from labor to reward. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

DEPARTMENT FOREIGN WORK.

One of the first acts in the prohibition campaign in the Dakotas, was that of the state central committee in sending to the National superintendent of foreign work, W. C. T. U., for 75,000 pages of tracts in foreign language. Besides these, there were circulated 65,000 pages in various districts of the two states, and quantities of the German paper. The result proved the wisdom of the friends of prohibition in the state. The Scandinavians were a helpful agency for the passage of the bill, and it is probable it would not have been passed without the educating influences of the literature sent out to them all through the summer.

Nebraska seems to have forgotten that she has any foreigners. If any provision has been made for educating sentiment among them, it has not come to the observation of the superintendent of foreign work.

It seems impossible to get the necessity of this work before the people, except through THE UNION SIGNAL, because the channels of information, the newspapers, are so busy arranging for an increase in their own subscription list that they cannot seem to advise an advance along any other line. But it is stupidity to think that one class of the people, already largely supplied with reading matter, should receive all the attention, and another, whose very limitations in this regard make them far more attentive to what is given them, should be left without any influence except those from the saloon side. The policy is suicidal, and unless Nebraska and the friends of prohibition throughout the country begin to think and provide for her large foreign population, the battle will be lost. Those reckon without their host who neglect so large an element as the foreign population of that state. I will send literature, tracts of every kind, at fifteen per cent discount, or 1,000 pages for one dollar, paying postage myself, to any one who chooses to help in this needed work.

The Bridge of Life.

Addison, in his "Vision of Mirza," represents life as a bridge of a hundred arches, and many of these, especially those at the farther end, in an almost impassable condition. The bridge was formerly much longer. Now no one reaches the other side by passing the bridge. Yet all must use it, and all must fall, sooner or later, into the swift current beneath. He represents the medical faculty as assisting travelers through, rather than over the bridge. But now, with the wonderful progress in medical science, no doubt the structure would be represented by a modern Addison as in better repair. Two advertise with us regularly: Miller's Hotel, New York City and the Fredonia, Washington, D. C. Both are uncommonly good houses, and we name them in order that our readers may, if they will, interest other temperance hotels to send us their cards for advertising their existence in THE UNION SIGNAL. We are sure such notices will attract the attention of the temperance advocates who have to travel. It is a kind of inn-temperance allowable to our people! Does it not go without saying that all such should patronize only the bar-less (also café-less, if the café is like that of the Shoreham) hotels?

A complete wreck of domestic happiness has often resulted from badly washed dishes, from an unclean kitchen, or from trifles which seemed light as air. But by these things a man often judges of his wife's devotion to her family, and charges her with general neglect when he finds her careless in these particulars. Many a home owes a large part of its thrifty neatness and its consequent happiness to SAPOLIO.

Grocers often substitute cheaper goods for SAPOLIO, to make a better profit. Send back such articles, and insist on having just what you ordered.

Advertisers want to know what paper pays best. Mention The Union Signal.

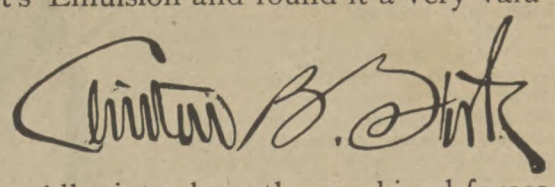
It is a wise General who knows when to call up the reserves. Health often needs reinforcement. The order for such reinforcement is endorsed by

GEN. CLINTON B. FISK.

My Dear Mr. Bowne:

I wish to say I received the Emulsion you sent me and am very grateful for the same. I note you claim in your advertisement that patients gain one pound a day. I am willing to grow half a pound a day, but must draw the line at anything above that in the way of increasing heft, but in sober honest statement it may truthfully be said that I have been greatly benefited by the Emulsion. There is no doubt about Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites being one of the best remedies sold by anybody on earth. I would as soon think of robbing the widow and orphan as to be guilty of puffing any quack remedies, but I thoroughly tested Scott's Emulsion and found it a very valuable remedy in cases of Colds, Coughs and General Debility.

Yours truly,



A HARD FIGHT.

IT has been a hard fight. All winter long the combined forces of the weather and "La Grippe" have been exerted to destroy Health. The Constitution, weakened by resistance, repels with less and less vigor each attack of the enemy. But the supreme struggle is yet to come. The enemy holds in reserve the March Winds with which to deal the final blow. The cry comes up for Reinforcements. Send for Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. Wonderful how such reinforcement does increase the resisting power, heal the lungs, cure the cough, and restore to health. Use now Scott's Emulsion.

CAUTION! Be sure you get the genuine SCOTT'S EMULSION. PALATABLE AS MILK. Put up always in salmon color wrapper, and prepared only by SCOTT & BOWNE, Mfg. Chemists, New York, and sold by all druggists.

Publisher's Notes.

General Fisk

writes: "THE UNION SIGNAL is doing magnificently. I wish it might be in a million homes in this country and read as attentively in each home as it is in our house." A word here and a word there and it can be done. Ten times one is ten, always!

About Miss Willard's Book.

An agent reporting eighteen "Glimpses" as a result of her first week's work says: "I am delighted with the work of canvassing for this book. Not only do the "union" women give me a hearty welcome, and their orders in most cases but the best people of our city tell me they are glad to have an opportunity of purchasing this work. I hope to place one hundred copies in this place."

Another agent writes, "I thought when I sent my fourth order, making 150 books for this city, that I would not be able to sell any more copies, but as you know I have ordered sixty-eight copies since then and I cannot see but the book sells as well as ever. I find many who did not take "Glimpses" last fall are ready now to give their orders."

A young lady agent who has never canvassed except for "Glimpses" says: "I took up this work with misgiving lest I should fail, but I have been happily disappointed. The forty-three orders I have taken in my leisure time during the last four weeks have convinced me that I can do better in the book work than in anything else now open to me."

Another: "My success is not due to any superior qualification on my part. The beautiful, full morocc volume you urged me to take does the talking, while your helpful instructions tell me ju what to do in case of any difficulty."

Good territory can be had; write at once for terms and full particulars.

Address Wanted.

A Miss May White writes a letter, pastes it (illegally) on THE UNION SIGNAL, returns all to us, saying to stop her paper. We cannot; she don't give her address, neither does the yellow slip. Why, oh, why is it that people are so studiously lacking in understanding? If anyone knows a Miss May White that gets THE UNION SIGNAL and don't want it, please have her tell us where she lives. We want that Miss May may miss getting THE UNION SIGNAL!

The Young Crusader (juvenile temperance) semi-monthly edition. Single copy 50 cents; in clubs of 10 or over, 40 cents.

Monthly (Sunday School edition) single copy 15 cents; five to twenty-five copies, in package, each 1 cent; twenty-five copies or over, in package, at the rate of $1.00 per 100 copies, per issue.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf (monthly) organ of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union; single copy, 25 cents; in clubs of 10 or over, 20 cents.

Der Deutsch Amerikaner (semi-monthly) German temperance; single copy 50 cents, in clubs of 10 or over, 40 cents.

Ten Cents Each.

Three bright, helpful stories, "Van and Vet," "Prove It" and "Helping," offered as antidotes for the poison of "Dick One-eye or the Scalper of License Ridge," and stories of that ilk. Your Sunday-school class could pass these three stories around and be benefited and interested as well. It's a cheap circulating library worth trying, too.

Busy Women.

Mrs. Scott says: "American women are the busiest women in the world," also, "The W. C. T. U. was God's thought for busy women," also "the W. C. T. U. is the one organization feared by the rum power; it is always inquiring 'what will those women do next?'" and "God knows we would be charitable, but we cannot help crying out for a manhood that recognizes the power of ballots and the responsibility of using them. Let our brothers redeem themselves by turning and overturning and turning out, until we see the saloon annihilated and we will take our knitting and go home!" Send for this little leaflet (National Leaflet No. 41, 10 cents; per 100 90 cents), and use it among the women who are not busy and who care nothing for the W. C. T. U. "Keep a movin'!"

Any Example Herein?

Little Gertrude Thompson writes: "We had the barrooms removed away from here for three years, and the ladies and the children liked it very much, but it seems that the men didn't like it. I am ten years old and have ten star offer names ready for you and hope to get a great many more."

Sunday, March 30,

is the day to use the Quarterly Temperance Sunday-school lesson. It is now ready and can be ordered at 50 cents per 100, or what would be much better at $1 per 100 including the March Sunday-school Crusader. It has "The Telephone" concert exercise concerning which we wrote an extended notice two weeks ago. When you lend a hand in such a case as this and cause your Sunday-school to read the paper you lend as the case may be! It only takes a few earnest words in time; ought to be attended to at once, don't you see?

50, 100, 150, 200 Hands

The Pledge?

That admirable article on "Why Sign the Pledge?" in THE UNION SIGNAL of February 27, has been reprinted as a "Timely Talk" (No. 40) and is now ready. One hundred sent postpaid for 30 cents. It furnishes an array of arguments that all temperance workers should take care to familiarize themselves with.

A Printing Press

would be a "dreffal handy" thing for all W. C. T. U. workers, but that is hardly practicable. The "Mineograph," Mr. Edison's invention is practically a printing press at a low cost and invaluable in sending out postal card notices, circulars, programs, etc. We use the process almost daily and would not be without it for many times its cost to us. No secretary or president of a union should do ten times as much writing as is needful. We give this notice entirely unsought. Labor saved means time that can be given to other work. See the advertisement of A. B. Dick Co., in another column, and write for particulars.

The Gold Thimble

proves a most attractive premium. Get us three new subscribers, send in their names with $3, and claim the thimble. Unless you state size wanted number eight will be sent. It gives great satisfaction, so does THE UNION SIGNAL, so there's every reason why thimbles and papers should meander everywhere!

Because

we do not mention it weekly please do not forget that we publish a German paper in the interests of temperance? It is issued twice a month and is full of valuable articles. It is not meeting with the support it deserves and would probably have been discontinued long ago except that the W. C. T. U. keep right in the face of all discouragements. Probably they have been educated to this by years of the kind of non-partisanship which has said to "pray all you want to for the drunkard but don't touch the man or the system that causes the drunkenness." Have you a German pastor in your place? Will you give him samples if we will send them to you? And ask him to speak a kind word ror the paper from his pulpit? It's the next best thing to doing the speaking yourself.

There Are

eleven "Home Leaflets," two by Rev. C. C. Harrah, two by Miss M. A. West, two by Mrs. McCartney, the others by Henry Ward Beecher, Mrs. Joel Swartz and others. Have never seen them? Well, it's your misfortune. The price of each is 2 cents, but if you will send 10 cents for the whole number, stating that you want to examine them with a view of telling others about them, we will mail all the numbers providing you accept this offer before May 1st. Please understand that we furnish the Leaflets only for the purpose above referred to. We do not get cost for them at the rate given but know we will get many orders after once the real merits of the series are known.

Pledge Cards.

The single pledges are against drinking only. The triple include drinking, profanity and use of tobacco, per 100, 50 cts.

German pledge cards, same as above.

Sunday-school class pledges, for a whole class to sign, per 100, 50 cts.

Loyal Temperance Legion pledge, adopted by the national departments of juvenile and Sunday-school work. This is to take the place of the Sunday-school scholar's pledge; has a place for witnessing by Sunday-school teacher, pastor or parent. Is a folder with a new and specially prepared design, and is very attractive throughout. Order blue when pledge without the words, "as a beverage," is wanted. Order the buff when words, "as a beverage," are wanted. Price per 100, $1; per 1,000, $7.

Wall pledge, designed for Sunday-school and Loyal Temperance Legions. In colors, as above. Price, 25 cts.

Honorary membership cards for Loyal Temperance Legion. Price per 100, 50 cts.

National W. C. T. U. pledge cards, per 100, 50 cts.; per 100 (perforated), 60 cts.; white ribbons for tying, per 100, 40 cts.

Social Purity pledges: White Cross (two colors), per 100, 50 cts.; Silver Cross and White Shield (two colors) each per 100, $1; Daughters of the Temple, per 100, $1; White Shield pledge on paper, per 100, 50c.

R. R. Temperance Association, per 100, $1

Praying League pledge, per 100, $1.

Y. W. C. T. U. Illinois pledge, per 100, $1; Y. W. C. T. U. membership card with pledge, per 100, $1.

Gospel Light No. 4.

"How Long Will He Hold Out," is the title, and it is an earnest plea to reformed drunkards to forsake lying, swearing, filthy jokes and gambling. It gives God's truth for the answer to the questions, "How meet temptation? how overcome the appetite?" etc. A moment's thought will tell you how to make this printed page useful. One hundred, 15 cents, postpaid. Order as above title.

The Treatment of Hemorrhoids.

Any one afflicted with Piles, or the Hemorrhoidal disease, should not be content with merely allaying the inflammation and pain, but should adopt such treatment and remedies as will most effectually eradicate the evil, and prevent its return. Salves, washes or injections may relieve pain, or reduce a swelling, but no one ever heard of either curing Hemorrhoids.

The Globe Medicine Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, has within the last year brought to public notice a positive cure for Hemorrhoids, which is unlike anything else heretofore used for this purpose. Full instructions for self-treatment at home is sent with each package of medicine, which does not interfere with house work or office work.

A treatise on Piles, explaining the origin, causes and dangers of the Hemorrhoidal disease, mailed free on application.

C. Shafer, Caldwell, Ohio, says: "I bought a box of Globe Pile Cure about a year ago and used it for protruding and bleeding piles, and from that time I never have been bothered with piles. Your Pile Medicine does exactly what you claim for it.

Mrs. G. W Basford, Bellevue, Ohio, says: "She had Bleeding Piles 30 years. One box of Globe Pile Cure cured her two years ago, and has been perfectly well ever since."

Full size packages $2; Trial or half-size $1: a Cure is Absolutely Guaranteed in every case where direction for self-treatment are correctly followed.

Baby Barendse,

Three months old when cured by the use of

Steketee's Worm Destroyer.

Read what its mother says:

"The undersigned has a child only three months old. It became sick with pains in its bowels and stomach when scarcely two months old. It cried and whined nearly all the time, and was completely run down in flesh. We gave it everything that we thought would relieve the child, but it grew worse all the time. We made twenty powders from a teaspoonful of Steketee's Worm Destroyer, gave it one powder three times daily. To our astonishment it was relieved of thousands of worms. We have given the child but twenty powders. It is entirely cured. I shall always recommend Steketee's Worm Destroyer. MRS. B. BARENDSE,

"This cross-bearing to which Christ invites us is to deny ourselves at breakfast the food that disagrees with us, to go to our daily task with a cheerful spirit, though the task be irksome; to bear others' burdens—the burdens of their carelessness, their ignorance—as Christ bears our burdens."—Dr. Lyman Abbott.

Women visitors have been appointed for twenty-six prisons in England and Wales.

Milwaukee, Wis., issues 1,317 licenses, and receives therefrom the sum of $252,050.

With the exception of 30,000 Roman Catholics, and a few hundred Protestant Christians, Bombay, a city of 800,000 souls and said to be evangelized, is still heathen.

A recent parliamentary return shows that in 1889 there were 168,385 liquor licenses issued in Great Britain.

A district convention of Christian young men will be held in Muscatine, Iowa, March 21-23. Important topics relating to Christian work by young men for young men, including social purity, work for boys, college work, etc., will be discussed by experienced workers of the Young Men's Christian Association. The United States has 361 colleges, with 4,442 instructors and 70,024 students; 159 institutions for the higher education of women, with 1,854 instructors; ninety schools of science, 145 schools of theology, and fifty of law.

At a recent meeting of the Prohibition State Alliance at Little Rock, Arkansas, about fifty counties were represented and satisfactory reports were given. The interest in temperance is growing in the state.

Sunday closing has now been in effect in Minneapolis, Minn., for nine months. The number of Sunday arrests during that time has been 408. During the same time previous to the enactment of this law there were 720 Sunday arrests.

Rosa Bonheur is sixty-seven. She says she has still work enough in her mind to fill two life-times. She sold her latest picture for more than ten thousand dollars.

There are thirteen distilleries in operation in Anderson county, Ky. They are using about 4,500 bushels of corn daily, which would make, counting three and three-quarter gallons to the bushel, a low estimate, 17,000 gallons, or 375 barrels of whisky per day, and 442,000 gallons, or 9,750 barrels per month.

Governor Ladd, of Rhode Island, in his annual message says of the license law which superseded the prohibitory law, taking effect last September: "There have been a greater number of licenses granted, especially in the cities, than the advocates of high license anticipated."

Ten women, including the Pundita Ramabai, were delegates to the fifth national congress of India. Their credentials were in due form, and they were given seats on the platform. It was an unprecedented innovation, and has made a great commotion; but during the convention every reference to the women delegates was received with cheers.

The Cherokee Indians, an organized nation with chief officials elected by the people, a legislative body in two branches, and a judiciary, maintain a hundred public schools in as many districts, and two seminaries or high schools, which cost $100,000 each; they also have an orphan and an insane asylum and a penitentiary.

Henry Newcomb gives utterance to the following sentiments regarding the movement of the seceders from the National W. C. T. U.: "And now what will be the result? A house divided against itself cannot stand. What success will attend the cause of temperance if this new organization supersedes the old? What power will it have against the forces that give protection to the saloon? A woman standing outside the saloon door, weeping and entreating, is all there is in it. Had not woman occupied that position for centuries, and mockery been her reward until the National organization took hold of the saloon door and shut it with a force that made the foundations tremble? This new organization takes woman's hand from the door and puts her back to where she was before the Crusade—seventeen years of labor and toil, tears and prayers, trampled under foot and cast aside as a thing to be hated, to keep in power a party whose only object is the spoils of office, even at the expense of every good principle!"

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

London has a hundred thousand men "on a strike."

The formal opening of the grand Auditorium hotel in Chicago took place March the 17th.

New Yorkers are endeavoring to re-open the question of the location of the World's Fair.

Sir John Thompson's amendment to the Criminal Law Bill presented to the Ontario House of Commons last week is calculated to effectually suppress Mormonism in Canada.

The condition of the Mississippi and Arkansas river banks is still very critical, owing to the immense flood of waters. The lowlands and lagoons are flooded and many small towns are literally under water.

Governor Mellette, of South Dakota, has visited Chicago in behalf of the destitute farmers of his state. He says that practical assistance is now an imperative necessity in securing seed-grain for the spring planting.

The International Labor Congress assembled in Berlin, Germany, on the 15th inst. The discussions will all be conducted in French. Prince Bismarck will not permit an official report until the minutes have been drafted.

The Louisiana Lottery company donated $100,000 to help the state strengthen the levees along the river and prevent the inundation of New Orleans. Governor Nichols promptly returned the gift, not wishing to place his people under obligations to a treacherous company.

AN entire session of the National Educational Association, held this year at St. Paul, is to be addressed by ladies—Miss Willard closing with "The White Cross." President James H. Canfield is a Kansas man, perhaps that helps to explain this gracious growth.

THE General Ticket Agents' excursion this season goes to Mexico. As indicating the advance in moral sentiment among these railroad officials, we are glad to record their refusal to start on Sunday, and also the fact that the sumptuous menu of their dining coach includes no wine list. On a previous occasion of this kind a carload of liquors was attached to the train.

AMONG the topics to be discussed at the coming Swiss Labor Conference are the following: The advisability of restricting Sunday work; the age limit at which children may be employed in factories; the length of the working day for children; the counting of compulsory attendance at school as a part of the child's working day; the gradation of children's work according to age; and the advisability of prohibiting the employment of women and children at night, or in dangerous or unhealthy occupations.

THE first committee of the Pan-American Conference to make majority and minority reports was that upon Customs union. The minority believe that a system of reciprocity in trade between the American nations, as free as that between the different states of this Union, would result in commercial prosperity to all. The majority of representatives think a Customs union upon this unrestricted plan would necessitate such changes in the Constitutions of their respective countries as would render it impracticable.

THE newspapers have given their own coloring to the Women's Crusade in Missouri. These brave women did nothing illegal. The counties in which they wrought their work had voted against legalizing the sale of liquor; each saloon was an open crime, an explicit violation of law, and a common nuisance. The women went out to abate the nuisance already declared illegal, and stripped of any right to protection. For this they were fined. The ruling will go down in history as a high-handed outrage, and it was nothing less.

MR. SPRINGER does not oppose the admission of Wyoming, but he does object to the peculiarities of franchise existing there, with the fullest sanction of the constitutional convention. That gallant body refused to throw its women overboard, even to get into the Union. When Wyoming comes in, one state will have an unfettered woman suffrage clause in its constitution, constituting—Mr. Springer notwithstanding—the spring of universal rights, whose autumn shall yield rich vintage of better laws more faithfully enforced.

THE whisky trust seems to have strong faith in the value of water—in its stock. According to the New York Bulletin, the aggregate plants of the trust could be replaced for $3,000,000; its capitalization is $35,000,000—nearly twelve times the cost of its plants. This exceeds anything known in the history of stock-watering. The most extravagant charges—which Mr. Jay Gould denies—against the Western Union Telegraph Co. never placed its capitalization at more than four times the value of its plant. Lead was capitalized at about five times its real value; sugar at between three and four times. A capitalization of $35,000,000, with actual property valued at only $3,000,000, indicates that the business which has been justly characterized as "the gigantic crime of all crimes," is also the most gigantic robbery of all time.

IN Samoa there is "prohibition with a party behind it," the party being the King. A late copy of the Samoa Times contains the royal proclamation: "No spirituous, vinous or fermented liquors or intoxicating drinks whatever shall be sold, given or offered to or bought or bartered by any native Samoan or Pacific Islander resident in Samoa, to be taken as a beverage. Anyone who will be found guilty of the violation of this provision shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both fine and imprisonment, and the liquor not yet consumed shall be confiscated." Unfortunately this protection is not extended to foreigners. There is no law against debauching aliens. The island ruler has not yet attained that sense of universal brotherhood which would make him shield the stranger within his gates, but he has advanced too far to enrich his treasury by the prostitution of his own subjects.

PERHAPS the most shocking feature of the fight "For God and Home and Native Land" against the intemperance, pauperism and crime caused by the legalized liquor traffic is the fact that many Christian ministers, solemnly consecrated to the service of God and humanity, are arrayed on the side of the saloon against the home, the church, and good morals. The Liquor Dealers' Association has flooded the states in which there have been amendment campaigns, with documents written by bishops and other eminent clergymen of different churches, which are used to bewilder voters and induce them to support the saloon. In a list of documents now being circulated for this purpose everywhere in Nebraska, the names of six prominent divines figure conspicuously. It is but just to say that Dr. Hovey's exegetical work on Bible wines, which gives great aid and comfort to the rum power, was, as he says, written without any thought of its possible use in so evil a cause. But by no stretch of charity can this apology be made for the other doctors of divinity whose articles were written against prohibition. Their influence in behalf of the saloon is entirely out of proportion to this force as arguments. They can be easily refuted by any clear-headed prohibition writer. The friends of prohibition ought to see that an antidote for each one of these clerical doses of moral poison shall be placed in the hands of every voter in Nebraska.

THE office of the New York City Police Commissioners was recently invaded by a delegation of women representing the following formidable array of women's societies: The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Women's Press Association, the Ladies' Health Protective Association, The Associated Working Girls' Societies, the Women's Prison Association, the Episcopal Church Organization of Women, the City Working Girls' Societies, the Working Women's Association, the State Charities Aid Association, the Bible and Fruit Mission, Sorosis, and the Society of Friends. The visitors presented an address urging the appointment of matrons for the city police station houses, and the setting apart of a few of these for female prisoners exclusively. The fourth precinct station house, for example, might be designated for all women prisoners and lodgers of the first, second, third, fourth and fifth precincts, and similarly throughout the city. "These changes," concludes the address, "could be made at once; would require the expenditure of no money; would make the work of all the police officers much simpler, and would prevent the scandal and indecency of shutting up the most degraded of men and women within ear-shot and frequently within plain sight of each other, besides removing the horribly contaminating influences of those unhappy women from the station houses where comparatively innocent men and boys are now frequently exposed to it. When this change is made, and the women are collected in six or eight station houses throughout the city, it is to be hoped that they will be placed under the charge of women exclusively; but the first reform does not depend upon the second, and we beg that this one may be adopted without delay."

ON SATURDAY morning an unpretentious-looking registered mail package arrived at Headquarters addressed to the National treasurer. Few can appreciate her emotions upon opening it, for never in the annals of her long and faithful stewardship has such an event occurred as we now have the happiness of recording. A paper was unfolded containing a one thousand dollar first mortgage bond, Union Pacific Railroad, then another and another, until there were five. An impromptu praise meeting was held by the General Officers rejoicing in the wondrous bounty of the Lord, whose are the silver and the gold. The following brief note accompanied the gift:

Dictated. NORTH GUILFORD, CONN., March 3, 1890.

To Miss Esther Pugh, Treasurer National W. C. T. U.:

Mr. A. E. Bartlett, of North Guilford, Conn., wishes me to send you the following request:

That you please accept the inclosed amount for the benefit of your society, to be especially devoted according to your best judgment and that of Miss Frances E. Willard, for the suppression of the liquor traffic and in opposition to license of the curse in any form.

Very truly yours, A. E. BARTLETT, by WHITNEY ELLIOTT.

This munificent gift is all the more acceptable in that it was totally unexpected and entirely unsolicited. It will give the National organization an income of $300 per year, and forms a splendid nest-egg for a permanent fund. And yet there is a shadow. Our generous friend never saw the note of acknowledgment which so promptly went to him. At the very time Headquarters was rejoicing over his liberality, he lay silent in death. The New Haven Journal thus notes the event:

Mr. Augustus E. Bartlett, whose death occurred on Saturday morning, had been for many years one of the most respected citizens of North Guilford. After spending the more active part of his life in business in New York City he retired to the home where he was born, and where he had been reared. Here, too, he passed his declining years peacefully and happily. An innate taste for literature, cultivated by early training and developed through subsequent years, impelled him to devote much time to reading. In consequence he was, to the very close of his life, thoroughly informed on all questions of political or social importance, and on all matters of scientific progress. Besides being possessed of unusual intelligence, he was also a man of decided convictions. In early life he was an earnest advocate of abolition. In later years he was an equally sincere and uncompromising believer in prohibition. He had witnessed the accomplishment of one moral revolution, and was confident of the ultimate triumph of the prohibition cause. Toward the accomplishment of this result he made liberal pecuniary contributions.

A NEW WORLD.

BY ALICE M. GUERNSEY.

A song, for the mists are breaking!
A song of the golden day!
The night has been long and dreary,
And the twilight cold and gray.
But far o'er the western waters
The beams of the dawning shine,
And inlets and shore awaken
And glow in the light divine.

A song for the Congress of Nations!
An anthem of woman's faith—
Braver than heroes of story,
Stronger than life, or death,
No more, O Queen-mother, thy jewels
Shall for sacrifice only be meet,
We bring thee thy guerdon of glory,
And a new world we lay at thy feet.

A WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONGRESS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

THE UNION SIGNAL, believing that in a "multitude of counsellors" there is wisdom, and appreciating the opportunity afforded by the World's Fair for a temperance Ecumenical Council in which the general principles of the great reform may be promulgated, and in which reformers of all shades of opinion may discuss the necessities and methods of the work from their varied standpoints, addressed the following letter to a number of prominent men and women especially qualified to give valuable views on the subject:

MY DEAR SIR:—Will you kindly express, briefly, for publication in THE UNION SIGNAL, what part, in your opinion, temperance should have in the World's Fair? Do you think it would be desirable to hold a World's Temperance Congress during the progress of the Fair, and if held, what special points of duty, of testimony, or of opportunity, should be chiefly considered and made most prominent in papers and addresses? Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience, I am very truly yours, EDITOR THE UNION SIGNAL.

The prompt, hearty, and general response to the above shows that it touched a live chord in hearts deeply concerned for the purity of the home, and the sobriety of the nations. The following are some of the replies:

FROM GEN. NEAL DOW.

Yes, I think a Temperance Congress may be made very useful and helpful to our agitation, if held at some time during the World's Fair in 1892. Papers carefully prepared upon many topics connected with the temperance cause, may be made interesting and valuable to all temperance workers, as well as to many persons who know little or nothing of the temperance cause.

Among the subjects treated in such papers, I suggest: Abstinence as a personal good and a Christian duty; the relation of the liquor traffic to poverty, pauperism and crime; to the degradation of great numbers of the people; to insanity, idiocy and premature death; prohibition—the right and duty of the state to protect the people from the waste of the wages of labor and of the profits of business, and the homes of the people from the misery coming to them through the saloon.

FROM REV. LYMAN ABBOTT, D.D.
Editor of The Christian Union.

I am heartily of the opinion that the World's Fair should be made the occasion for a moral and intellectual Congress or series of Congresses for the consideration of the great moral problems of our national life. The temperance question is one of the chief of these. Whether it would be better to have one Congress discuss many questions, or separate Congresses for separate questions, would require some consideration in the deciding.

I am clear, however, that if a Temperance Congress is held, it should not be for the purpose of advocating either prohibition, high license, local option, or any other form of temperance legislation, or even total abstinence as a private and personal virtue, but for a broad, comprehensive discussion of all questions connected with the temperance movement, upon a platform on which all men and women should be welcome as brothers and sisters in a spirit of mutual respect, provided only they desired to restrict and eventually destroy the power of the saloon in politics, and to put an end to the vice of drunkenness in all its forms.

FROM FRANCES E. WILLARD.
Pres. World's and American W. C. T. U.

The first convention of the World's W. C. T. U. will undoubtedly be held at the time of the World's Fair—indeed, I have already engaged the Auditorium conditionally for that purpose. There should also be an International Congress in which men and women will alike participate. The main subjects for consideration that suggest themselves to my mind are:

1. The attitude of modern science toward the drink and tobacco habits.
2. The attitude of civilized nations toward the sale of alcoholics among barbarous tribes.
3. The righteous attitude of the state toward the traffic in stimulants and narcotics.
4. The Christian attitude of the church and of each professed follower of Christ toward the habit and the sale of drink.
5. The correlations of the temperance, the labor and the woman questions.
6. The social purity reform.
7. The relation of politics to reform.
8. The relation of the temperance reform to peace and arbitration.

I believe that there should be no sale of intoxicants at the World's Fair. In 1876 the Brewers' exhibit was among the most prominent and these lines were there displayed:

"From golden grain and fragrant hops
We brew the best of magic drops."

Fifteen years later must we have another such deceitful declaration? If the womanhood of the land had courage to say no, this could not be. Every variety of harmless temperance drink—including the waters of famous springs, native and foreign—ought to be "on tap" in the W. C. T. U. café.

Evangelistic meetings should be held each afternoon and evening, and they certainly will be if the Temperance Temple has by that time reared its fair proportions in mid-air.

As to a woman's department thereof I would say, let us have it by all means, and illustrate every form of progress made; bring the women achievers together in an International Council and let them plan for "broader fields and pastures new." Over the woman's department let Harriet Hosmer's grand thought be wrought out by means of electrical machinery—i. e. an illustration of the solar system, showing the sun and planets with their relative sizes and distances indicated approximately, at least, the whole being high as Eiffel's tower, or thereabouts, and forming a celestial "merry-go-round," where anybody may "choose his star" and take a whirl for a dime. Only in the labeling of the heavenly bodies I would have our planet prophetically called "Concordia" not "Earth."

May we all be there to see, and may the holy cause of Christ and Human Brotherhood be hastened blessedly by the work of "the fair" at the Fair.

FROM JOSEPH COOK.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—By all means have an International Convention at Chicago in 1892, to represent the cosmopolitan outlook of the temperance cause. The National and the International W. C. T. U. will know well how to arrange woman's part in such a convention. Your international heroine, Mrs. Leavitt, has girdled the globe with woman's appeal for home protection. Every country she has visited should be fully represented by letter or delegate in the proposed gathering. All the aspects of the temperance reform that she has found strategic in her pioneer tour, would, naturally enough, receive attention in your discussions. Total abstinence, scientific temperance education, the delusion of the friends of high license, prohibition, state and national, would all be vital and timely topics.

FROM REV. WM. HAYES WARD, D. D.
Editor of The Independent.

I think it an admirable plan to hold a World's Temperance Congress during the progress of the World's Fair. What is needed for it is a most careful collection of statistics as bearing on the actual consumption of liquors in different countries, and of the results of various methods of restriction or suppression.

FROM SARAH K. BOLTON.

A World's Temperance Congress at the Fair would be wise and practicable. The women—and men as well—of other nations would be interested and stimulated to do more for total abstinence. A review of the past few years, with the wonderful growth in public sentiment both here and abroad; the needs and opportunities of the present; and an optimistic and eager outlook into our magnificent future as a country, would make us stronger and nobler men and women. Though able to do little myself in the last few years, I am grateful and thankful for the work of the temperance women of America. I hope Miss Willard will live and labor for another "fifty years."

FROM THE RT. REV. JOHN IRELAND.

I would favor very much, on the occasion of the World's Fair, a Temperance Congress, to which advocates of temperance from all countries would be invited. Of course, the program of the Congress should be of the broadest nature, showing no exclusive favor to prohibition, or to high license, or to mere moral suasion—giving an opportunity for all foes of intemperance to speak forth their convictions. Much good would follow. We would learn from one another. There is a sufficient bond of union between all in our hatred of the giant evil of the age.

If such a Congress is held, I will be glad to co-operate to the best of my ability with the promoters of it.

FROM HON. HENRY W. BLAIR.
Member of Congress from New Hampshire.

It seems to me that the World's Fair would be incomplete unless there be a temperance department and a building erected for its special uses. There should be an organized place for temperance entertainment of the body as well as of the mind, and all the drinks and preparations known and fit for use as substitutes for intoxicating drinks could be on exhibition and be furnished to those desiring them. I should think this idea of a temperance department could be dwelt upon and developed into a leading and entirely novel feature, which would at the same time bring woman specially to the front, and place American women before the whole world in that exalted and efficient action which is unknown elsewhere.

Temperance conferences, and meetings, lectures, etc., would constantly be in progress, and there would be a World's Temperance Congress in perpetual session from the opening to the close of the Exhibition. Out of this would grow a Congress even if it were improvised, with no preparation or notice whatever. But seems to me that such a notable occasion should be utilized for a great International Temperance Congress which shall unify the efforts of the human race for the extinction of the alcoholic crime.

I should think such an occasion would be the best possible for the collection of data from every nation and clime, and the views of all upon measures and remedies most practicable for the promotion of reform. Such a Congress could issue an address to the world which would carry the greatest weight everywhere, and for years, yes, for ages to come, I believe that such a Congress could exert great influence upon national legislation and upon international action by treaty and otherwise hostile to the liquor traffic.

Not the least good of such an effort to deal with the subject from the standpoint of citizens of the world would be the elevation of our own views, and the better comprehension of the vast work in which we are engaged. We should find it to be absolutely impossible to waste a thought upon personal affairs, and our disagreements upon details would disappear.

The temperance reform is "the conflict between man and alcohol," and any smaller or narrower view of it inclines us to makeshifts and half-way measures. We must get the world in motion, and the World's Fair will give the opportunity.

FROM HON. ALBERT GRIFFIN.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—In answer to your inquiry I will say that I think it very desirable that a World's Temperance Congress shall be held in Chicago during the progress of the World's Fair. I would suggest among other topics for discussion:

1. The effects of the different kinds of alcoholic liquors upon the human system, with the modifications, if any, caused by sex, temperament, climate or race.
2. The various ancestral causes that predispose to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors.
3. Is the use of intoxicating liquor more dangerous now than formerly, and if so, why?
4. The effect of dram drinking upon the church, and the moral nature of man.
5. How the drink habit affects communities and nations.
6. How can people be most easily and generally induced to adopt total abstinence principles?
7. What are the most effective legal remedies, and how and when can they be applied?

FROM BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT,
Of the M. E. Church.

I shall abide by Miss Willard's opinion on this. I have no doubt that the coming together of so many people would furnish an opportunity for the discussion of this great subject which should be improved.

FROM REV. J. M. BUCKLEY, D.D.,
Editor of The Christian Advocate.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—In answer to your inquiry I have to say that in my judgment it would be advisable to hold a Temperance Congress during the progress of the World's Fair; and that the two subjects of the suppression of the sale of liquor as a beverage and total abstinence, should be chiefly considered.

FROM REV. JOSEPH CUMMINGS, D. D.
Pres. Northwestern University.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—I thank you for writing to me and it will afford me pleasure to render the good cause of temperance and the work in which you are engaged, any service in my power.

I am hardly prepared now to give advice as to what shall be done in connection with the World's Fair. It would seem desirable to hold a World's Temperance Congress during the World's Fair.

As to the topics to be discussed I suppose they will be the usual topics with reference to the influence of intemperance on individuals, on society and on the state, and the importance of the legal prohibition of the traffic.

The great trouble, I fear, will be want of money. I doubt very much whether such a Congress can be arranged and ordered so as to influence the people who shall visit Chicago during the time of the Fair. I will give more attention to the subject.

FROM GEN. CLINTON B. FISK.

I do believe in a World's Temperance Congress to be convened during the progress of the World's Fair. The National Temperance Society took action thereon some time ago and appointed a large committee of arrangements, the chairmanship of which was conferred on myself. It was then thought that New York would be fortunate in securing the World's Fair, but now that Chicago has captured the prize, I suppose the committee will still consider it its duty to have the Congress, and there. It will be an admirable opportunity for the collection of facts, the promulgation of truth, the record of testimony, and generally to give our good cause an uplifting. I am sure that our committee will be glad to be supplemented by the best temperance element in and around Chicago, or to surrender the whole matter of preparation for the event to our Chicago friends. Anything to get the greatest good for the greatest number out of the occasion will satisfy us.

FROM REV. J. E. RANKIN, D. D.,
President Howard University, Washington, D. C.

It seems to me the World's Fair ought to note the progress of the nation and the race on the subject of temperance. Such a Congress as is suggested—a World's Temperance Congress—would be excellent. It ought, however, to steer clear of all questions on which temperance people, who are really such, would be divided. We want to show the world a united front, as, doubtless, the liquor traffic will. bo.

FROM GEO. W. BAIN.

There will not be within the lifetime of the present active workers in the temperance cause, so favorable an opportunity for a World's Temperance Congress as during the World's Fair. Certainly a conference of the world's workers in this great cause is very desirable. The most competent executive committee should be appointed, whose duty it should be to consult with the leaders of every country likely to be represented, and, after securing suggestions from all sources, prepare a program that would not only make the Congress of great interest and value to all who attend, but would secure the best productions from the best minds, so that a published report of the Congress would prove a great arsenal of arguments and facts for future warfare. Every phase should be discussed, from the blessed result of total abstinence upon the life of an individual, to that of prohibition upon the life of a nation, and I am sure the saving influence which must yet be injected into the politics of all nations, and can only be found in the women of the world, should, and will, have a place in the program.

FROM GRACE H. DODGE.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—I certainly feel that temperance should have a part in the World's Fair. While deeply interested in the temperance movement of the country I am not actively associated with it, and therefore feel that I would not be able to give an opinion upon the other questions proposed in your letter.

FROM PROF. HENRY A. SCOMP.
Prof. of Greek, Emory College, Oxford, Ga.

A "World's Temperance Congress" should by all means be held during the World's Fair in '92. No better opportunity will likely be offered during this generation. As to the "prominent points": It is hardly necessary to indulge in old platitudes about the apparent, on every hand admitted evils of intemperance. The world knows these, alas! by heart. The more subtle, and therefore the more dangerous evils of the traffic should be brought out.

1. Its heredity and racial effects as to spirit, mind and body.
2. Its relation to crime.
3. Wine and malt liquors compared with distilled in their effects.
4. Liquor and labor.
5. Liquor as a monopoly-maker.
6. Liquor's value in medicine and in science.
7. Liquor and the missionary cause.
8. Liquor and the Sabbath.
9. Liquor and the race problem—other nations as well as ours have deep interest here.
10. Liquor as a political factor.
11. Antidotes—The church and its work.—Can the church deal effectively and pathologically with a disease hereditable if not contagious? A paralysis in morals and intellectuality which may destroy the will power and the ability to resist evil even in the babe yet unborn? Can the church with its recognized enginery of suasion, argument and example, furnish any sufficient antidote? What is the church's duty in the case?
12. Temperance organizations, their work, aims and results. One might perhaps add, their lacks; but few of these orders would probably admit a lack in their methods.
13. Political—"Free" liquor vs. licensed.
14. High license as a remedy.
15. Local prohibition including local option as a remedy.
16. State, national and international prohibition as a remedy.
17. How to make prohibition prohibit.
18. Can science furnish an antidote to the liquor thirst? It is now claimed by high scientific authority that electricity can be applied effectively to change the appetite and taste.
19. Prohibition and other reforms. How these may work in unison.

BROWNING AS AN INSPIRER.

BY CHARLES F. BRADLEY, D. D.
Prof. New Testament Exegesis Garrett Biblical Institute.

One of Mr. Browning's intimate friends tells of a conversation, held years ago, in which the poet passed from a "languid and rather ineffectual discussion of some persons well known to both, into a vivid and passionate apology for an act of his own Colombe of Ravenstein." He adds: "It was easy to see how vividly the whole throng of his literary creations was moving in the hollow of his mind."

This pleasing reminiscence exhibits the essentially dramatic habit of Mr. Browning's mind, and indicates the two-fold method by which the poet has imparted to many and various minds that subtle and priceless influence which we call inspiration. Contact with life quickens life. He was a high-souled and myriad-gifted man, as well as a masterly interpreter and delineator of human life. By intelligent reading we are brought into vital contact with the characters which his creative force has produced, and through them directly into touch with his own great nature. Then inevitably there is a communication of quickening energy which tends to make us henceforth wiser, stronger and nobler.

These, if I mistake not, are the essential and fundamental facts about Browning as an inspirer. It is because the poet and his works are surcharged with vitalizing power that the study of Browning's poetry is so incomparably suggestive and awakening. He was like a mighty dynamo which draws the electric fluid from the vast treasuries of nature, and stores up the invisible power to furnish future light, heat and propelling energy. The comparison fails in this only, that the storage batteries of the poet's influence are not exhausted by use.

The very person of Robert Browning suggested rugged strength. His health was so perfect that a friend says he mentioned lately a headache from which he suffered in 1833!

With a vigorous frame, a sufficient fortune and the taste and opportunities which lure so many to lives of selfish and cultured leisure, he strenuously devoted himself to poetry. He wrote in Asolando:

"What had I on earth to do
With the slothful, with the mawkish, the unmanly?"

His life, his characters, his teachings sound a bugle-call to heroic activity.

"The sin I impute to each frustrate ghost,
Was the unlit lamp and the ungirt loin."

And again:

"Let a man contend to the uttermost
For his life's set prize, be it what it will."

His motto might be said to be, "Strive and thrive." If a man can do no more than aspire nobly, even that exalts him. No one can read Browning in earnest without feeling this strong impulse to manly effort.

The poet's exceptional bodily and mental forces, thus spurred to strenuous activity, were directed for long years to the study, interpretation and poetic representation of human life. He became learned; he mastered many languages; he ransacked history, philosophy and literature, not for learning's sake, nor primarily, as it seems to me, for his art's sake, but for truth's sake. For Browning was preëminently sincere. He was true to life as he saw it. Even his characteristic and much berated style was a mark of fidelity to his own nature. He ever resented the charges of affectation, carelessness and perversity, and through evil and good report he expressed his own thoughts in his own way. In the vast range of his studies and thought he grappled with the great problems of life and destiny. He wrestled with them like a giant. His thinking is modern and profound. The Gorgon of our day, materialistic unbelief, he faced full-front. If he did not smite off her snake-wreathed head, he at least did not quail nor turn to stone. His fearless and profound thinking often stirs our minds to their very depths.

But the inspiring energy does not stop here. This dear dead poet has merited more than our admiration and coolly calculated gratitude. I can only mention his quickening of our love of beauty in nature and art; though he has hung rare pictures in our memories and started there exquisite melodies which shall go singing on forever. But, precious as these minutes are, it would be ungrateful to forget how he has broadened the horizon of our sympathies and increased our love for our fellow-men. His characters make a long and wonderful procession. From all ages and nations, from all stations and environments, of all classes and conditions, of all natures and tempers. You know them well, high and low, good and bad, saint and sinner, ancient, mediæval, modern, and he has made us feel that they are all our kin. What if they do speak in Browning's style and analyze in his subtle fashion? He has penetrated their minds and hearts. He knows them better than they know themselves, and makes us understand their struggles, victories, virtues, vices and defeats. Human life has become to us richer, broader, deeper, dearer, since these souls' tragedies and comedies have been enacted before our eyes.

"O spirit of man, what mystery moves in thee?
That he might know not of in spirit and see
The heart within the heart that seems to strive,
The life within the life that seems to be,
And hear through all thy storms that whirl and drive
The living sound of all men's souls alive?"

And then best of all has been the inspiration of his courage, of his faith in the triumph of the right, and in the love of God. He believed that though all is law, all is also love, that God is love. Browning may never become, as Canon Farrar predicted, the religious poet of the future, but he has surely stood, in a too faithless age, stoutly and inspiringly for God, for Christ, for the soul and immortality. His robust and cheery confidence challenged death to do its worst, and anticipated reunion with the "soul of his soul."

"Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed though right were worsted, wrong would triumph.
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, sleep to wake."

His victorious faith has brought new vigor to many a fainting heart. As each of us toils at his little portion of the vast web of human history, this great, good poet is one of those who offer us threads rich and rare, of truth, sympathy, beauty, courage, love and faith, and bid us each weave sturdily and worthily, in cheerful confidence of ultimate and divine approval.

BUSINESS CAPACITY OF WOMEN.

BY D. P. LIVERMORE.

III.

Another proof of "woman's incapacity for business," Marion Harland presents substantially as follows:

They do not work as men do. Men work by the job, with concentrated energy; women work by the day, and watch the clock! The difference is to be accounted for that women look forward to marriage as a definite means of support. With an immense proportion of the sex, this explanation more than covers the ground.

This unsupported assertion of Marion Harland cannot be accepted as a true statement of the case. On every hand it is admitted that women are most faithful workers, and in all factories and stores and workshops, they show equal fidelity with men. They work as many hours, and often for less wages, and housewives work more hours than men do. Do married women generally work by the day and watch the clock, or, as a rule, do they not work all the day and part of the night?

If the immense proportion of women, as is here stated, look forward to marriage as a means of support, with fond anticipations of ease, the majority of them are woefully mistaken, for, as a rule, married women work quite as hard as the unmarried, and for less money! A wife earns more than a "support," which generally means her board and clothes. This is about all the "support" the average married woman receives. The number of married women who have money in savings banks is small compared with kitchen domestics in their families. "The unmarried women of Massachusetts alone have $29,000,000 on deposit in savings banks." Can the married women of the state make as good a showing? According to the "Census" of this state for 1885, Vol. 2, p. 209, we learn that the "number of married females employed" is 13,521, who, evidently, are not supported by their husbands. If Massachusetts may be taken as a fair average for other states, the prospect of married women for "support" is hardly as "immense" as Mrs. Harland would have us think. Most wives give their strength and time to the household, and then it is claimed that they are "supported" by their husbands. Supported, indeed! The majority of married women are obliged to join with their husbands in gaining a "support" for themselves and their children; and there is a multitude of lazy, shiftless, drunken husbands who do nothing for their own support, and who live upon the hard earnings of their wives! And, yet, Marion Harland says that the "immense proportion of women" marry for "support"!

What "support" do the 800,000 drunkards in our country, most of whom are husbands and fathers, furnish to their broken-hearted wives? Almost every married woman earns more than her "support." Does not the wife of a farmer, or mechanic, or laborer, or minister, even, earn her "support"? It is unfair and unjust to women to say that "they look forward to marriage as a definite means of support," and for this reason are unfaithful to service, and shirk responsible positions. Admit that some women marry with this object in view, as Marion Harland claims, is it any worse for a woman to do it than for a man? Did she never know men to marry for "support"? Did she never hear of any poor, titled man in Europe, marrying a rich American lady! Why does she refer only to a woman and never to a man who seeks wealth in marriage?

We have not space to refer to all the instances Marion Harland cites; they are all as inconsequential and frivolous as those already examined.

But we are happy to say that no case is made out against business women. They stand on an equality with men and are capable of understanding business methods and principles. All over the country there are women who are successfully engaged in business pursuits, and many a girl has earned money to educate her brother, who had less business capacity than herself! The late General Spinner introduced women into the United States Treasury Department as clerks and accountants. At one time he had a thousand women under his direction, and he "left on record a striking testimonial to the efficiency and integrity of the sex." He testified that they were, without exception, honest, and were invariably more "careful and painstaking" in their work than men. Do not such women show capacity for business?

A few years ago the governmental officials at the mint were directed to make a new five cent nickel coin, and when it was first sent out to the public, no one could tell what value it represented, as the word "cents" was omitted from the coin, which had to be called in and a new "die" made. Suppose women had been at the head of that department and had made such a mistake, would not Marion Harland have cited it as evidence of the incompetency of women and of their incapacity to do business? But as men made the blunder, it was passed over as a mistake of male officials, as it is "taken for granted," Mrs. Harland says, "that men conduct all branches of business better than women!" Does she not remember the stock gamblers' "Black Friday," which proved such a financial earthquake to the business interests of the country, and so shook the confidence of the world in the honesty and integrity of our great business men at the center of trade in our land, that the government had to come to the rescue and administer a monetary sedative to calm the business nerves of the nation?

Marion Harland, we think, is mistaken when she "takes for granted that men conduct all branches of business more systematically and successfully" than women. Does she think well of that New York firm of world-wide fame, "G——t and W——d" who failed for $16,000,000, and who had such capacity for business that they kept all their accounts on scraps of paper—the firm having no cash-book, nor journal, no member of the company knowing exactly its financial condition, or knowing, kept the secret to himself? If women had done business in the same way, it might justly have been regarded as evidence of their "incapacity" for business pursuits!

SLOJD; AN EDUCATIONAL HANDCRAFT.

Dear Union Signal:—Of the many things I saw during my brief visit to Europe, nothing interested me more than slöjd. This is a system of educational handcraft which has been largely introduced into the public schools of the Scandinavian countries. It consists of work entirely in wood, and is so arranged and graded as to be educational. For many years these countries have adopted different methods of manual training, having combined work in woods and metals, and also introduced trades, but after various experiments they are fully decided in the opinion that wood work only is essential for this development.

Slöjd is an old Scandinavian word, meaning cunning or dexterity, and is from the same root as our word sleight, used as sleight of hand. It has become universally adopted, as representing this handcraft in wood.

At Naas, in Sweden, a small village about twenty miles from Gottenburg, is a training school under the superintendence of Abram Salomon and the patronage of Herr Abrahamson, a man who is devoting his great wealth to the promulgation of this department of education.

In Finland, the training school is under the management of Vera Hjelt, a young woman of great ability, who is thoroughly competent to instruct all grades of pupils in this work; indeed, I was told by those who were conversant with this system, that Miss Hjelt had greatly improved upon other methods of slöjd adopted in these countries. At all events she has constructed a bench for the work, upon which she has a patent, devised new models that are used, and published several treatises upon slöjd. She has demonstrated that this is a field of labor especially adapted to women.

It has been and is still thought, that no matter what else a woman does she must keep out of the sphere of mechanics, but in Finland we find many women thoroughly trained and proficient in the use of tools, and very successful in their ability to impart this knowledge to children.

In the schools in Helsingfors, I saw boys and girls working side by side with bright and cheerful faces. I asked Miss Hjelt if there was any difference in their ability to learn; she said, "Not if they had had the same experience in that line previously, and that the difference was often in favor of the girl, for she had not, so often as the boy, acquired bad habits in the use of tools, which are difficult to unlearn." I imagined it was something on the same principle of a child having faulty instruction on the piano. I believe the time has come when some system of handcraft must be introduced into the public schools of the United States, and it seems to me that there is nothing better adapted than a modified system of slöjd. It is already being tested in this country in different ways.

Mrs. Shaw is having it introduced into some schools in Boston. Col. F. W. Parker, of the Cook County Normal Training School, having had a young man educated at Naas, has secured an appropriation to fit up rooms and to start the work of training teachers in this institution. We believe this is the first training school for slöjd in America. The ladies of the Art Industrial Union, of the Woman's Club, Chicago, after very thorough investigation, have set the ball in motion to have this system introduced in several institutions. They have raised money to employ a teacher in the Norwood Park (Ill.) Boys' Training School, which they have already so generously helped. Miss Toppelius, a teacher who has worked with Miss Hjelt five years, is expected to take charge of the class as well as train teachers for extending the work. It is hoped that this is only the beginning of an extensive introduction of slöjd into all kinds of schools. The experiment is more easily made in charitable schools, because the consent of so many people does not have to be obtained as in public schools.

The claims of slöjd for educational purposes may be summed up as follows:

Its object is not to turn out young carpenters, but to develop the faculties, and especially to give general dexterity, which is of inestimable value in every line of work. It is intended to teach all classes, from the highest to the lowest—how to use their hands as well as their heads, so that men and women may be placed in a position of independence and be capable of earning an honest livelihood. In acquiring this general skill, the pupil obtains a special dexterity of hand in the use of tools; his eye is trained to a sense of form and proportion, and his powers of observation are cultivated and strengthened.

If a child is trained to habits of observation,—habits of seeing a thing exactly as it is, and of knowing afterwards how he has seen it, you have laid for him a foundation upon which to build all education. The child, furthermore, acquires a taste for and love of work. He is trained in habits of order, exactness, attention and neatness. He becomes accustomed to habits of industry and perseverance. Slöjd encourages self-reliance and forethought, and causes pupils to be constantly putting two and two together. It makes children think for themselves.

Physically considered, this system brings into action almost every muscle of the body. One of the strongest arguments in favor of slöjd training is that it inspires respect for physical labor. The sentiment that there is something ignoble in work is entirely done away with. It fosters a sense of satisfaction in honest work, begun, carried on and completed by fair means. The child's natural proclivity for ceaseless activity is in a measure satisfied. The restless, mischievous, naughty, ungovernable child becomes most lovable and useful. His pent up powers are turned into beneficial channels.

Slöjd strengthens the bond between school and home. The child takes home his completed work, thus awakening in the parents an interest in a school where the child is "learning something practical." Truancy has become almost unknown in Scandinavian schools since the introduction of this system. Greater and more intelligent progress has also been made in the ordinary school work.

Rector Palmgren, in Stockholm, places great stress upon the moral value of slöjd. He says: "Physical labor brings great blessing to the child in making it happy and satisfied. Herein lies the greatest and deepest importance of handcraft. Do we not find in our own experience that true joy and satisfaction render us more open to good influences, make us more forbearing with and helpful to those around us? How much more, then, must this true sense of happiness and satisfaction exert a strongly ennobling effect on the moral education of the comparatively uncorrupted child. Gladdened and occupied by noble, useful work, he will not and cannot (I will venture to say) do wrong. Granting this to be true, we begin to realize what a great role joy and satisfaction may play in the education of children. Of course I mean only the pure, artless joy which, with them, arises from the consciousness of being useful by exerting their powers as best they can. Have we hitherto, as we ought to have done, observed joy's great and deep significance for the child? I do not think so."

OUR SECOND ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARY IN CHINA.

Dear Union Signal:—One may visit the ports of China and go away believing he knows all about Chinese life, but it is quite impossible to have a perfect idea of the people until you have gone into the interior. Through the courtesy of friends at Swatow I was taken on a special trip inland, and I feel that language is insufficient to convey to other minds the scenes that met me on every hand.

We started from Swatow in a house boat, in which we were to eat, sleep and live during the journey; the boat contained four apartments, all very small. We stowed away provisions enough for the voyage, manned the boat with seven natives, took a cook and a native Bible woman and one young lady beside myself. We sailed through the bay and entered the mouth of the Kit—i. e. river. Along the water's edge the fertile valley is dotted here and there with fields of waving rice, tall sugar-cane sways gently in the breeze, and now and then may be seen orange groves, the trees laden with golden fruit, while the whole has a background of lofty mountains with sharp and rugged points. We are lost in admiration over the grandeur of nature, when suddenly our eyes rest upon an object that mars the whole landscape. We near a village, and within the walls of this ancient city can be seen heathen temples, great and small, where the natives prostrate themselves before gods of wood and stone.

Our first stop was made at Kit, a walled city said to be over four thousand years old, and looking twice that age. We anchored our boats at night, and after breakfast started for the north gate. Even at that early hour the whole city was alive, and the buzz of the noisy place could be heard down to the river. As we entered the city, the people were attracted in great numbers. They followed us through the narrow streets, many of which are not more than four feet wide and none more than six. Through these narrow passages the crowds pressed, and after some time we reached the Presbyterian Chapel, where the native preacher joined us. He seemed very glad of this opportunity of reaching so large a number, and from time to time as we journeyed through the city, he mounted a stump or stone and preached Christ to the multitudes, while the Bible woman and the missionary went to the homes of the native Christian women, many of whom have been persecuted for their faith.

The sights we saw in those homes was shocking. The houses are all small, one room serving the purpose of kitchen, dining-room, bed-room and all, and as they have a superstition about white, nothing is ever painted, but the dust, smoke and cobwebs of three or four generations cling fondly to the wooden rafters overhead, and form a heavy fringe that ornaments everything to which it could cling. A brick fire-place, a bed, table and "saw horse" (substitute for chairs), make up the furniture, and in this small room whole families exist for years. In addition to the family, generous hospitality is extended to the fowls, which jump upon the stove, bed or any other place, and make themselves quite at home, while the family pig, with a chain or rope around its body, is fastened securely to the bedstead, and no one must dispute its rights.

After speaking a number of times the native preacher showed us about the place, taking us first to the Confucian Temple. This is a very large hall with a great court in the center; the gateway is guarded by two huge lions with open jaws and ugly teeth. Inscriptions and figures are carved upon the front of the building, while an immense dragon, many feet long, encircles the pillars; the whole interior is decorated in a most fantastic and curious manner. Wood carvings of gods, animals and flowers painted and gilded in highest colors can be seen on every hand. On entering may be seen the image of their great leader, Confucius, a most disagreeable face, narrow almond-shaped eyes and thick flabby lips. Above and about this image hang the most lavish adornments, while before him are the many offerings brought by his admirers. On either side from the canopy to the door stand a row of his disciples, seventy in number, all supposed to be learned men. These are taken out for an airing at set times and followed through the streets by the multitudes. In connection with this temple is an examination hall, where students gather from all the surrounding villages to pass the examination for literary degrees. Education among the Chinese cannot be said to be common,—only one boy in a hundred is taught to read and only one girl in a thousand; so the men and women of letters are very few.

Next we went to an Ancestral Hall; here we found tablets of all sizes and description, varying according to the means of those who place them there. Upon these tablets may be read the names and virtues of the departed. They are brought to the hall and placed in a cabinet which extends along three sides of the place, and at stated times the surviving members of the family come to worship. The origin of this form of worship is interesting. An unfilial son dealt his aged mother a blow with a stick and in anger went into the woods. While seated on a stump he saw a young bird feed the mother bird; again he saw a ewe lamb bend its knees as it stooped to take nourishment given by the mother. Seeing these sights his conscience smote him and with all possible speed he retraced his steps, still carrying the stick in his hand. His mother seeing his stick feared he had come to continue his abuse. She rushed to the back of the house threw herself in the water and was drowned. The boy broke the stick to pieces, set it up and worshiped it, and from this began ancestral worship, and in every city, village and hamlet is found a hall dedicated to the worship of departed relatives.

My next visit was to a place farther inland, never yet visited by a missionary. Our arrival in town created the greatest consternation. Most, of the inhabitants had never seen a white person, and as but few can read, they have no idea of the world, in fact China is the world, and the Chinese the human race, and where we came from, and who we were, they were eager to know. The crowds pressed upon us, and while they were neither disorderly nor violent, their curiosity was so great we were carried along by the multitudes. Finally we reached a large vacant spot on which rice is dried. Here the preacher stepped upon a "saw-horse" to tell them who we were. Meantime the women began to inspect us and our clothing; one would exclaim, "Oh, how deadly white!" "What is the matter with her nose?" Then they were curious about our age, and without any hesitation asked, "How old are you?"

The native preacher talked to them for some time, and as we journeyed through the city others joined the throng till it seemed the whole city was following us. This scene is forever stamped upon my mind. I shall never be able to forget it. The needs of China were brought before me as no other experience could have brought them, and as I stood in the very midst of a heathen multitude which knew nothing of the true and living God, who had never heard the wondrous "story of love," my heart offered two prayers, one of praise and thanksgiving that I was not born as thousands are where God is never known, and another, saying, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send still other laborers into the harvest." If the Christian world could only realize that countless millions in this vast Empire have never heard of a true God, if they only knew what it means to carry the gospel to four hundred millions and less than two thousand to do it, I am sure they would try to help a little more. As so few natives read, the "story of the cross" must be taken by a living voice to their homes, and this means more workers! more workers! Here is a great nation in a spiritual darkness most appalling. No one can imagine the situation until he has been here, and one of the most deplorable features is the condition of the women. If any one doubts what the gospel has done for our own sex, let him come to China. If any one doubts that Jesus Christ was the emancipator of woman, let him witness the condition of our sisters of Asia, despised from birth, and bartered as any article of merchandise, and having no legal rights. Being wholly unable to own anything, she seems to be regarded only as a necessary evil, tolerated because she is a necessary factor in serving men. If there is anything in this world that should lead woman to appreciate, understand and know what religion has done for us, it would be to study the condition of the Chinese women in their own homes. Oh, my dear sisters, your hearts would forever hold a thanksgiving, and your lips would scarcely cease from singing praises unto "Him who hath bought us with a price." And since this gospel has done so much to elevate us to a place of usefulness where our influence is felt far and near, can we not do more to send the same blessings to our sisters here, held in such awful slavery, that they too may rejoice in the "liberty wherein Christ hath made us free"?

TEMPERANCE WORK "OVER THE BORDER."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—At a recent meeting of the Toronto Medical Students' Temperance League, Dr. Geikil, Dean of the Faculty of Trinity Medical College, remarked that the fact that sixty per cent of the medical students of Toronto were total abstainers, was an encouraging sign of the times.

Our Canadian doctors are beginning to realize the danger in prescribing alcoholics so freely, and are seeing the necessity of placing them on the shelf beside arsenic and other poisons. The medicals now prohibit wine at their annual dinners, and not only the medicals, but many other societies and bodies, especially the Masons, who simply laughed at the idea a few years ago, but now there are only one or two lodges in the city that have not fallen into line.

Although the Scott Act has been repealed in Ontario, it still retains its hold on the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba. We do not feel that it has been a failure in Ontario, for, since the repeal, people who opposed it before openly acknowledge now that there was very much less drinking under prohibition, as recent statistics show, although the law was only feebly enforced. A large number are only now learning that the Scott Act did a good work, for like a human friend, we did not appreciate it until gone. An English Church clergyman who strongly favored its repeal in the county of Halton, has declared that if the vote were to be taken again, he would take an extreme position in favor of the Act, and also, in a town in Ontario, a number of prominent citizens who have always supplied wine in abundance for their guests, have, since the repeal of the Scott Act, entirely banished it from their homes. Yes, even Parliament admits the measure was helpful, for no one has dared to move that it be struck from the statute books, but, on the contrary, there are two notices of motion on the order paper to favorably amend the Act, one introduced by Mr. Lavergne from Quebec, and the other by Mr. Dickey, of Nova Scotia.

The Ontario Legislature will be called upon to vote upon a restrictive license bill introduced as a government measure on the eve of an election. This will give to Ontario a local option law as, to quote from the bill, "The council of every township, city, town, and incorporated village may pass by-laws for prohibiting the sale by retail of spirituous, fermented, or other manufactured liquors, in any tavern, inn or other house, or place of entertainment, and for prohibiting altogether the sale thereof in shops and places other than houses of public entertainment; provided that the by-law, before the final passing thereof, has been duly approved of by the municipality in the manner provided by the sections in that behalf of the municipal act."

It would be difficult to lay too much stress upon the importance of the amendments of the law relating to the sale of liquor to minors. The years of minority under the old law were sixteen; under the new law no liquor can be sold to a person under eighteen, while any parent, guardian or master, can raise the age of minority to twenty-one by giving notice to the hotel keeper.

Under the old law if the inhabitants were threatened with the establishment of a new hotel, it was necessary for them to petition against it. Now the burden of collecting signatures to a petition is thrown upon the applicant for the license, and he must obtain the signatures of a majority of the electors before the license can be issued. The same proceeding must be taken where it is proposed to transfer to a new man premises already licensed.

Bars on steamboats will be abolished; the sale of liquor in benevolent clubs will be forbidden; provision will be made against the evasion of the law by sub-letting barrooms and by other means, and a blow will be dealt at the unlicensed traffic by compelling the frequenters of unlicensed dives to disclose their names.

And this same government early in the present session closed the bar of the Legislature.

We do feel that we are advancing, slowly, it is true, but nevertheless advancing, to that sunny day when the young men of our fair Dominion will walk our streets with heads erect, brains clear, going forth to do their work in the world, to leave it better than when they came. As Tennyson puts it:

"Live pure, speak true, right wrong, follow the King—Else, wherefore born?"

GERTRUDE CARMAN.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

MATILDA B. CARSE.

Dear white-ribbon sister, brother, boy or girl: Have you a Temple mite-box on your table? If not, write to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, inclosing a two-cent stamp, and it will be promptly sent you on condition that you will drop into it a cent a day, or its equivalent, during the next twelve months. Mite-boxes in quantities will also be sent to unions for the cost of transportation.

It is very gratifying to find a growing interest among our unions in the building of the Temple. Mrs. M. B. Monroe sends $30.50 from the Akron, Ohio, W. C. T. U. the contents of mite-boxes. She says: "We had a prayer service for the success of the Temple; opened our boxes and sent them out again. This we propose to continue until our $100 is paid; as this method does not in the least interfere with our local work, and is purely voluntary, we prefer it." We wish other unions would follow this excellent plan. Mrs. A. I. Hills sends $25 for the W. C. T. U. of Union, Maine, to be applied on their gift of $100. Here is a plucky union, the Wesley Chapel W. C. T. U., of Wall street, Kansas. In sending a check for $10 to the Temple, Mrs. S. L. Mundell writes: "We wish to add our little mite along with others in this noble work. We are a country union with only seventeen members. Will try and do more in the near future.' There is not a doubt but this union will have its name inscribed in Memorial Hall. Fisher, Minn., W. C. T. U., is another small union, the members of which are nobly trying to do their part for the Temple. They have just sent $15, and propose to continue giving, so writes their superintendent of Temple work, Mrs. H. B. Herrick. Another little union at Kenton, Delaware, sends $11.61, the contents of five mite-boxes. Mrs. Ella Brayman writes that they intend sending out more mite-boxes. No doubt this union will succeed also in raising $100.

The Tarrytown, N. Y., W. C. T. U. has just sent $50 on their pledge of $100, through Mrs. Powles. The Dickersonville W. C. T. U., of New York, has also entered the list and sends $10, the contents of mite-boxes. The Brookfield W. C. T. U., of Ohio, sends $10. Mrs. C. M. Peck says it has been earned by quilting during the past year. This is another small union. They have now sent $17 to the Temple fund. We hope they will try the mite-box system and secure the balance of their $100 in that way. One of God's hidden ones sends $50. She doesn't want her name to appear; she wants it credited to the Minnesota W. C. T. U. Mrs. A. H. Calley, treasurer of the McHenry, Ill., W. C. T. U. sends $10. She says: "I wish it were more, but our union is very poor." The Rock county W. C. T. U., of Wisconsin, sends through Mrs. E. E. Pratt, $10 towards the building fund. The Kinmundy, Ill., W. C. T. U. have commenced on their $100, and have sent the first installment, $9.30.

Mrs. P. F. Bryan, Ellsworth, Minn., is another addition to our Hundred Dollar Band; she has just sent $25 and expects to complete her gift of $100 by New Years. Mrs. Mary T. Scriver, Cannon Falls, Minn., sends $11. She writes that she is greatly interested in the Temple. We trust she will also join the Hundred Dollar Band.

Della Clark, Reutchler, Ill., sends $2.25. She says: "This is one-tenth of my chicken money for last year." Mrs. V. W. Moore, Van Wert, Ohio, sends $1, a gift from her mother, Mrs. Sarah I. Webster, who is in her eighty-sixth year. She was the leader of the Crusade in Van Wert.

Mrs. Lizzie B. Noyes sends $4 for the Pittsfield W. C. T. U., it is to be credited on the $100 this union is raising for the Temple. A few months ago some mite-boxes were given out to the children. The $4 just sent was the contents of the boxes. Mrs. Noyes writes: "Grace English had $1 in hers. She saved the money herself by going without things that children always like to have, candy, etc." Little Grace's example is worthy of imitation; this is the kind of giving the Master loves.

Miss Mattie E. Waddell (aunt to our little Celeste, a picture of whose head adorns our Baby Band lists) sends the contents of her mite-box for a year, $4.43. Her method of filling it is not only novel but full of a beautiful sentiment. She says: "Fifty-three pennies for each week in the year; a nickel for the birthdays of our family, and the $3 represent the offering I dropped in on the birthdays of my mother and niece, Celeste Waddell Henry, both of whom are dwelling in the 'house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.' The third dollar was for the baby niece who came this past year to brighten our family circle. The birthday offerings were a great pleasure to me to give. In that way our family of nineteen, representing those gone before, and those still here, though widely scattered, are all having a share in the Temperance Temple. The good that we gain in giving for this grand project proves in itself a blessing."

Mrs. S. M. Perkins, of Cleveland, Ohio, in sending the contents of her mite-box expresses a truth when she says: "I wish all our women would do this much (drop a penny a day in the Temple mite-box); the sum would soon be raised, and no burden be felt. Mrs. Evelyn B. Street, Dixon, Ill., emphasizes the same fact, when in sending $3.65, the contents of her mite-box for the year she says: "If only half the members of the W. C. T. U. would make it a duty to contribute this little mite each day, how the money would come pouring in."

All money orders and checks for the Temple should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, National treasurer, and treasurer of the Temple fund. All information in regard to the Temperance Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres. Woman's Temperance Building Association.

Our Children.

WHAT ONE BOY THINKS.

BY HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.

A stitch is always dropping in the everlasting knitting,
And the needles that I've threaded, no, you couldn't count to-day;
And I've hunted for the glasses till I thought my head was splitting,
When there upon her forehead as calm as clocks they lay.

I've read to her till I was hoarse, the Psalms and the Epistles,
When the other boys were burning tar-barrels down the street;
And I've stayed and learned my verses when I heard their willow whistles,
And I've stayed and said my chapter with fire in both my feet.

And I've had to walk beside her when she went to evening meeting,
When I wanted to be racing, to be kicking, to be off;
And I've waited while she gave the folks a word or two of greeting,
First on one foot and the other and 'most strangled with a cough.

"You can talk of Young America," I say, "till you are scarlet,
It's Old America that has the inside of the track!"
Then she raps me with her thimble and calls me a young varlet,
And then she looks so wo-begone I have to take it back.

But! There always is a peppermint or a penny in her pocket—
There never was a pocket that was half so big and deep—
And she lets the candle in my room burn 'way down to the socket,
While she stews and putters round about till I am sound asleep.

There's always somebody at home when every one is scattering;
She spreads the jam upon your bread in a way to make you grow;
She always takes a fellow's side when everyone is battering;
And when I tear my jacket I know just where to go!

And when I've been in swimming after father's said I shouldn't,
And mother has her slipper off according to the rule;
It sounds as sweet as silver, the voice that says, "I wouldn't;
The boy that won't go swimming such a day would be a fool!"

Sometimes there's something in her voice as if she gave a blessing,
And I look at her a moment and I keep still as a mouse—
And who she is by this time there is no need of guessing;
For there's nothing like a grandmother to have about the house! —The Independent.

A FAITH-GARDEN.

BY LAURA J. RITTENHOUSE.

Ruth put upon the table the book she had been reading, and sighed:

"It makes me unhappy when I read such stories, Aunt Helen. Why don't some of these chances to do great deeds come into my life, too? I'm so tired of the same humdrum things over and over again! My life is like that little patch of bare, hard back-yard. Nothing lovely grows in it, no blossoms, no fragrance—nothing to make it worth having;" and tears came into the blue eyes.

"I think it possible the fault is your own, dear," said Aunt Helen, gently. "Sometimes the heart is not prepared to receive the seed that is scattered for it, and so there can be no vigorous, healthy growth. It is with one's self as it is with the patch of ground you despise so much; there must be an up-turning and softening of the soil first; then God will do the planting in His own good time."

'Oh, Aunt Helen, you are always sermonizing! I wonder you did not turn preacher long ago. But, all the same, I do not believe all your pretty doctrines. You may try your best and you can't cultivate anything in that old yard, and you may look ever so scrutinizingly with your sharp, searching eyes, and you will not be able to find anything fair or sweet in my life—just the same monotonous routine of housework and sewing day after day. Who can be anything, who can do anything worth mentioning, in such a dreary, dead little village? If I were only in some large city where there were hospitals to visit, paupers to relieve, big temperance societies to join, I might do some effective work."

"Suppose we experiment for a while, Ruthie. I'm going to hire a man to thoroughly dig up that hated back-yard, and then we will see what else can be done. You shall watch results with me, my dear," and Aunt Helen put on her hat and went out.

Ruth smiled half disdainfully, but said nothing.

Presently Aunt Helen came back with a stout colored man, who was soon busily digging up the hard yellow clay in the yard. Then he brought large quantities of leaf-mold from the orchard, and some sand from the brink of the brook in the meadow. These were thoroughly mixed with the clay, the whole being pulverized until it was a soft, smooth mass.

Ruth looked on curiously: "That is hardly fair, Aunt Helen. It isn't the same soil at all now, and of course things will grow in it."

"It is perfectly right to make the very best use of the material lying around us, and that is all I have done, Ruth. When you feel inclined to consider your life a barren and unbeautiful one, just begin looking around, and you will be surprised to see the material ready to enrich the impoverished soil, and to nurture into existence the fairest plants."

"Of course you will sow seed now?" suggested Ruth.

"No; I think we will leave it just as it is. I want you to see how many beautiful things will spring up in it."

Ruth was skeptical, but as the summer went by and showers followed the warm sunshine, green blades began to appear here and there. The variety was quite astonishing to Ruth—beautiful orchard-grass with dainty blossoms, a stately canna, a wild grape vine, pink and white clovers, a wild yellow primrose.

Sometimes ugly, disagreeable weeds made their appearance in this "faith-garden," as Ruth called it, but no sooner were they detected than they were uprooted and thrown away.

"Where do all those plants come from, Aunt Helen? It seems as if God has really planted them with His own hands," Ruth said, one day.

"So He has, my dear, in His own way. Winds at His command have wafted the winged seed, birds have carried some, and some were in the leaf-mold or the sand brought from the brook-side; but none of the seed could have grown had we not had the ground ready for them. Do you begin to understand, Ruth?"

"I think I do, Aunt Helen. Instead of bewailing my isolated and cramped existence, I must look around for material to make a rich and fertile soil in which to let grow all the God-sent seed the winds of heaven may waft to or the birds of love may drop into my heart. Is that it, Aunt Helen?"

"Yes, my dear; that is one thing. Another is that you do not need to go into some large city or far-away country to find kind and charitable work to do; heart-blossoms grow as beautiful in obscure places as in those more noted. The result of some little kindness, some word spoken at the right time, may change the whole course of a life for the better."

"It is a beautiful lesson, auntie; only it makes one almost afraid to live at all, lest one plant thistles instead of sweet flowers," Ruth said, soberly.

"If we do the very best we can and plant in all faith and purity of purpose, we can well afford to leave the rest in the hands of the great Gardener, trusting Him to uproot the evil and to nourish only the good," said Aunt Helen, reverently.

"I'll try it, anyhow, auntie. No one will know, perhaps, and it will be harder to work alone, uninspired by the praise or the approbation of others, but in the hereafter shall be gathered the real golden harvest. Thank you, Aunt Helen, for your blessed lesson."

In the beautiful, self-sacrificing, happy years that followed, Ruth always remembered with tender gratitude Aunt Helen's wonderful "faith-garden."—Exchange.

PROBABLY the youngest editor in this country is Tello J. d'Apery, a twelve-year-old boy, who edits a monthly periodical called the Sunny Hour. He lives in New York City, and his object is to raise money to buy shoes and stockings for poor children of whatever nation, race, religion or color. As he naively remarks: "Cold is just as hard for one little child to suffer as another." He has some very distinguished contributors. In the November number is a poem by Sir Edwin Arnold, and the Queen of Roumania recently sent two poems, accompanied by two portraits of herself and a letter which Tello did not print, as he feels "very delicate about publishing private letters." Among Americans who contribute regularly to its columns are Edward Everett Hale and Olive Thorne Miller. He charges fifty cents for his paper, and has a fine class of advertisements which ought to bring in quite a little revenue. He shows excellent judgment in managing his modest journal, and we heartily wish him success.—Exchange.

The Still Hour.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 30, 1890.

BY REV. C. C. HARRAH.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

Sunday, 30; Gal. 6. Verse 1, No profit comes by administering rebuke in bitterness. Those who have occasion to pronounce censure should remember their own weakness, which will lead them to have sympathy for others. Verse 3, Those who are filled with pride and self-conceit know little of themselves, and know still less of Christianity. Verse 7, One may debauch himself by intemperance and mock at the threatenings and judgments of God revealed in the Bible; but he thus treasures up wrath against himself and the day of retribution will come. Verse 9, Many become weary through habits of slothfulness. When there is true weariness, we should not faint; if we work on, we shall reap.

Monday, 31; Acts 1. Verse 8, This book gives us the history of the progress of the church, under the influence and leading of the Holy Spirit. We have read in the books of Joshua and Judges of apostasy and decline; now we are to read of progress, by the presence of a risen Christ working through the Apostles. The profit by reading these books should appear in our hatred of sin and love of holiness. Verse 14, This prayer-meeting was a comfort and blessing to these disciples. We should plan always to be present at our weekly meetings for prayer.

Tuesday, 1; Acts 2. Verse 1, The Holy Spirit is given not to the contentious and ungodly, but to those who dwell together in unity, and continue in supplications and prayers. Verse 4, Remember that the Holy Spirit was given, not to gratify personal vanity, or to secure carnal enjoyments; but to proclaim the praises of God, and to convey the tidings of salvation to the world. Verse 42, It is not sufficient to begin well, we must persevere unto the end.

Wednesday, 2; Acts 3. Verse 6, The devout, faithful disciple of Christ is willing to do what he can, that all about him may rise up from the dust and walk in newness of life. Verse 19, Repentance is God's simple and easy condition in order that our sins may be blotted out.

Thursday, 3; Acts 4. Verse 4, If in those times of persecution men had faith in Christ, how will the trivial excuses which impenitent worldlings now urge for not becoming Christians, appear in the day of judgment? Verse 13, Some are flattered by the tribute of the world, that they are bright, or educated, or skilled in the usages of society; but far better is it, when the world is led to confess that our whole deportment demonstrates that we have been, and continue to be, with Jesus.

Friday, 4; Acts 5. Verse 3, A man who intentionally lies and deceives his neighbor has already surrendered his heart to Satan. Verse 4, There was a traitor among the apostles of Jesus, and a hypocrite in the bosom of the primitive church. The record of these evil examples is intended to be a warning to all false professors of religion in all time. Verse 30, The risen Christ, present with His people, is the great truth running through all these chapters.

Saturday, 5; Acts 6. Verse 1, The regeneration and renewal of the individual and the human race is arrested and checked by internal disturbances in the church. Verse 8, A single servant who is full of grace and the Spirit accomplishes more in the church than a hundred servants who are without the Spirit. Verse 15, Like an angel, Stephen arose above the earthly, and acted for the honor of God and truth, and for the salvation of men.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(Our Debt to Foreign Missionaries. II Cor. 5: 19, 20.)

There are 20,000 laborers engaged in foreign missionary work; and the number of workers and the success of the work are growing at such a rate that immense results will be manifest within the next fifty years.

1. These missionaries have done more than all others to open up friendly relations between the nations of the earth. Commerce and every interest of civilization owes them a debt which ought to be paid freely by giving to the missionaries the most hearty support.

2. Every one who has a fellow-feeling for humanity, and wishes good for the world, is indebted to the missionaries. They have called attention to inhuman practices and cruelties, in the lands of darkness; and have done more to dispel ignorance and superstition, and to spread the light and correct evils, than all others. Humanity owes a great debt to the missionaries.

3. We owe to the missionaries a debt, because they are the instruments to help us to carry out the commission which our Lord has given to us all, to go and preach the gospel to every creature. By supporting these missionaries, they are made our agents to bring the people who are in darkness to the knowledge of Christ.

The Household.

SEED-SOWING.

BY MARY A. CUSHMAN.

I walked one day on the prairie,
And saw how the autumn sod
Was sprinkled, white as ashes,
With the seeds of the golden-rod;
And I thought what a countless number
Of seeds Dame Nature sows,
That never fulfill their purpose,
For every one that grows.

In the springtime I stood in the orchard
And looked at the apple trees,
Crowned with their wealth of blossoms,
And noisy with humming bees;
And I thought of all this promise
How much must fall to the ground,
And of ripened fruit, at the harvest,
How small a proportion is found.

I stood beside an oak tree,
The acorns lay on the moss,
I looked at the scattered thousands
And reckoned the waste and loss;
And I thought, with a growing wonder,
Of the lavish bounty that gives
So many acorns to perish
For every one that lives.

I sat in a church one evening
While an eloquent preacher told,
With tenderest power and pathos,
The story that never grows old;
That story of infinite interest
To the souls for whom Christ died;
And I looked at the empty benches
And thought of the crowds outside.

I thought of the throngs of people
Who listened while Jesus taught,
Who knew His gracious presence
And the cures His mercy wrought;
Who witnessed His cross and passion,
And saw the risen Lord;
Yet only one hundred and twenty
Received and kept His word.

Dear friends, whom love of humanity,
True, unselfish, and warm,
Has called from your happy firesides
To sow the seeds of reform;
When the task seems all too heavy,
And faith is drifting away,
When night after night brings the record:
Nothing accomplished to-day;

Take to yourselves the lesson
Of infinite labor and pain,
Giving your lives and your fortunes,
Hoping for nothing again;
Count not the fruitless efforts
That only our Father knows,
Nor think of the loss with grudging,
If only one seed grows.

AUNT MARGARET'S STORY.

BY ALICE HUDSON.

I have been having a delightful visit with Aunt Margaret. She is an old maid, fifty years old. Not the meddlesome, fastidious and fussy old maid of the newspaper variety (occasionally, also, of real life), neither the jolly, bustling sort who often steps in to help a little, and is so welcome. My old maid is a gentle, low-voiced lady of intelligence, and an unusual degree of tact. I think you see how welcome she is to all her nieces and nephews. We never feel afraid to make her our confidant and always find her a comforting friend. As usual, after bidding Aunt Margaret good-bye, I feel rather lonely, yet she leaves me with such an inspiration that I feel renewed zeal and energy in Christian work. One of Aunt Margaret's pleasant traits is, she never rebukes me, but she sees my faults, and in her quiet way helps me to see them and resolve to overcome them.

I know that I am very backward in work for the Master. If some one goes ahead, and asks me to follow, I can, but it seems almost impossible for me to say or do anything about religion independently of anyone else. I realize how little I do and deplore it, but allow myself to shrink back and avoid all crosses, again and again, after I have resolved so often to do differently.

Last evening as we were quietly sewing, Auntie told me of the good work being done by cousin Grace with whom she had been visiting. She is the wife of a station agent who was sent last summer to a new town in the northern part of Michigan. They found the village rather below the standard of the typical lumbering town. The dominant spirit seemed to be that of money-getting, and men and women joined in the mad race for the uncertain prizes of Dame Fortune. No time for preaching or Sunday-school, or prayer-meeting, but time for dancing and card-playing and idle gossip, and among some of the men, drinking, racing and smoking were their dearest comforts.

Among so many such thoroughly worldly minds, the few timid, conscience-stricken souls had a poor chance to make their lives more upright. But Bently Burns and his wife Grace are not the ones to fold their hands and say, "We are not able to do anything; there is too much evil here; we can do nothing but live right ourselves." They believe religion is to be both practiced and preached, and they do not excuse themselves from improving every opportunity for advancing the good cause.

First, they contrived to become acquainted as soon as they could, with the people, and, to their joy, found five professors of religion. They bemoaned the state of the morals of the community, but it had not occurred to them that they could do anything to help lift up. One was a feeble old lady nearly always confined to her home; another a mother with small children; another a hard-working man, the remaining two being a young merchant of the place and his sister, these two being the only ones who were very much at liberty to attend meetings, even. But a few earnest words from Grace led to the agreement with them all, that they would each pray for their neighbors a certain hour of each day; this was soon followed by prayer-meetings at their homes, to which others were invited. To shorten the story, which I hate to do because the details are so pleasant to me, the present results of these efforts are a Sunday-school of nearly all the Protestant children of the place, and many of the young folks also. Evenings the school-house is opened for a full congregation who come together, sometimes to hear a sermon read, or a Sunday-school or temperance concert, and sometimes they have a well-planned and delightful praise-meeting, which seems to be enjoyed best of all. This is just a beginning; God helps those who help themselves. Earnest enthusiasm with a purpose will kindle many bright lights.

TWO SIMPLE RULES.

There are two simple rules for conducting committee meetings, that, if observed carefully, would expedite business immeasurably. Committee meetings would be shortened and accomplish much more business if parliamentary rules were recognized by both chairman and individual members, and enforced. One rule, so simple in its application that ignorance of parliamentary law is no excuse for its violation, is that all remarks and questions should be addressed to the chair. Nine-tenths of the confusion that arises in committee meetings is the result of addressing questions to individual members, ignoring the chair; this destroys all order, opens discussion, and throws the chairman in the disagreeable position of calling members to order who may be deeply hurt and cherish resentment, or work with less good feeling, forgetting that the implied rebuke was brought upon them by their disobedience of a fundamental law of good government. No matter how small the committee, how trivial its business, it deserves respect from its own members. Good manners will prevent two neighbors holding a conversation on a subject that is of interest to all, and for the treatment of which they are called together, and the introduction of a foreign subject is not possible among women of social training.

The making of a motion should precede, not follow, a discussion, as is too commonly the case. Until a motion is made it is not supposed that there is a subject to be discussed. All discussion should precede the vote, and precede the calling of the vote. When a vote is called, discussion must end; if a member feels that more argument might be advanced in favor of or against it, the time to present the argument is before the vote is cast.

The responsibility rests equally on every member of a committee for its good conduct, and if the committee make a failure of the work undertaken, each member is responsible for that failure; it is worse than cowardly to say, "I had nothing to do with it." There is no such thing as a silent partner in committee work. Silence is not a declaration of irresponsibility; even absence does not relieve a member from responsibility; the resignation of a member is the only action that leaves him free.

Promptness in attendance is a moral responsibility as well as an evidence of good manners. Nowhere does an individual show ability and mental quickness more surely than by his manners in a committee meeting; the method of conducting a committee meeting is sure evidence of the method in which the business will be conducted. Slovenliness, procrastination, desultory methods, irregular attendance, mean money wasted, opportunities lost, confusion, dissolution.—The Christian Union.

EDUCATE THE CONSCIENCE.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The popular idea has been that the school-master's field of operations was bounded above by the dome of the cerebrum, and below by the level of the eyebrows. Modern research is rapidly extending the territory of this dignified personage. The discovery is being made that an educated man ought to be something more than a Drummond light, which, brilliant though it may be, is quite as well adapted to purposes of warning as well as illumination. The light must still be kept aloft, but strong cables must be woven to brace it up and hold it steady. Education must take hold of the ready hand and train it to some form of labor or of skill, and it must invade the citadel of a child's nature, his heart, out of which are the issues of life. A child in Timbuctoo has a conscience, but it does not take such cognizance of moral distinctions as it would under more enlightened guidance. Education is what it lacks; line upon line, precept upon precept; enforced by a life that constantly declares: "Do as I do, and you will be acting out the things that I say." This Christian land has no higher heritage than its grand army of public school teachers. As a rule, their moral culture equals, if it does not excel, their intellectual attainments. Very rarely does the press bring to light irregularities of deportment among those who are set to enforce the principles of good behavior among their pupils. There is also a deep interest manifested among teachers in the subject of moral education in the public schools. The growing sentiment against corporal punishment renders it essential that, as an offset, additional emphasis be given to ethical instruction, under the authority of government. Differ as people may in matters of theology, there is a marvelous unanimity of sentiment concerning matters of conduct. Nobody will quarrel with the teacher whose lessons help to make a child more truthful in word, more gentle in deed, more pure in the habits of life.

THE HOLY SPIRIT'S POWER TO-DAY.

MRS. SARAH B. COOPER'S BIBLE EXPOSITION.

A late lesson of Mrs. Cooper's renowned Bible class in San Francisco took up the subject of the Holy Spirit's power. It is said by one who was present to have been a wonderful lesson. It was argued, very strongly, that this distinctive, working power of Christians is not developed as it should be. Mrs. Cooper said: "If we would rise, like good old Simeon in the temple, into these higher experiences and revelations, we must rise into the communion of the Holy Spirit; into the communion of the unseen world; into the realization of the power of the world to come. This Holy Spirit's power is given to the holy, humble and consecrated souls of all ages. He gives revelations to all who are ready to receive them. To as many as receive Him to them gives He the power to become the sons of God. And a true Christian is never so much himself as when under the domination and guidance of the Holy Spirit. The noblest part of our nature—the spiritual—is not developed, or is very feebly developed. Occasionally we see some great, heaven-inspired leader go forth on a mission of good to mankind, and we wonder at the marvelous things that are wrought by some one woman, or man, who suddenly flashes forth and shakes the community or the country with a strange and wonderful power. It is not by ordinary knowledge, tact, social or personal influence; it is not by the machinery of organization; not by money-power or outward appliances—it is by none of these as a motive power, but it is by the agency of the Divine Spirit, working in the soul, 'to will and to do of His good pleasure.' The soul must be receptive. It must be sensitive to this blessed touch of God."

The question was very eagerly asked, "How can we receive this Divine help?" Mrs. Cooper replied: "By living more as Christ and His disciples lived. By keeping open all those divine channels through which divine love and purity flow. By living lives of self-sacrifice and obedience to the Father's will. God's spirit is universal, but it becomes special when we personally accept and appropriate it. Just as the sunlight is universal; but the sunlight falling on the sand, leaves only sand; but falling on rich loam, full of germinating seed, it develops and brings forth a rich harvest. Our real education is from within not from without." * * * In speaking of the Magi bowing to the Child Jesus, the teacher said: "Learning is never to be decried as an enemy to religion. It is true, there are some who bow to Science, who never bow to God, but it is not the fault of Science. And when Science knelt in homage before the Savior, the Magi saw 'this great light.' The wisest of the world knelt before the Child, and the time is fast coming when at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow. And any soul that will follow with loving fidelity his own star—that is to say, his own best light—will surely be brought to the Savior of the world."

EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

Quite a prominent divine has lately expressed great gratification because, as he says, "the W. C. T. U. has decided to take up the work of educating the children in temperance." He then proseeds to expatiate upon the importance of this work in a way that leaves the impression that he, as original inventor, has a patent on temperance teaching. His name is not Rip Van Winkle, but it ought to be; if he has not slept twenty years, he must have slept fifteen, not to know that all that time, educating the children has been one of the cardinal aims of the W. C. T. U.

The third specification in the second recommendation of its first plan of work reads: "Teaching the children . . . in the public schools, the ethics, chemistry, physiology and hygiene of total abstinence." In 1877 a committee on schools and colleges was appointed, and continued to work until 1888, when committees having been exchanged for departments and superintendents, this work became a department, and Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Massachusetts, chairman of the committee the preceding year, was elected superintendent, and has held that position ever since. The committee had labored to introduce temperance teaching into public schools, urging the use of Dr. Richardson's Temperance Lesson Book, and after its preparation in 1880 of Miss Coleman's "Alcohol and Hygiene," as text books.

In 1883 began the legislative phase of this work, the objective point being the passage of state and national laws requiring the teaching of scientific temperance in all schools supported by public money or under state control. This inaugurated a series of campaigns, led by Mrs. Hunt and her aid-de-camps, the state superintendents, which for versatility of plans, persistency and success, compare favorably with any military campaigns in history. Briefly stated the result of these campaigns is: Laws in twenty-six states, the District of Columbia and all the territories, requiring the teaching of the effects of alcohol, tobacco and other narcotics on the human system, in all public, normal, military and naval schools, under government control; in these schools are about eight million children, and the future teachers, military and naval officers of the nation, thus being taught temperance.

Next came the battle of the books, in which Mrs. Hunt and her forces were also successful, so that now six leading publishing houses issue books whose teachings on this subject come up to the high standard set by the National W. C. T. U. Other houses publish books with more or less accurate teaching on this subject, so that to-day it is hard to obtain a physiology, unless it be one printed years ago, which does not give more or less attention to temperance.

These campaigns have been great educators of the people and of legislators, while thousands of addresses at Teachers' Institutes, and millions of pages of literature especially prepared for this purpose, have been continually enlightening the teachers. We are now in the third stage of this conflict, whose objective point is the enforcement of temperance instruction laws, and work along this line is being carried on as systematically and as energetically as it was along the other two lines.

The Loyal Temperance Legions are doing a wonderful work in educating the children, not only in scientific temperance, but also in phases of the subject that cannot so well be taught in public schools: Biblical temperance, the relation of intemperance to the state, to the pocketbook and to morals. Nearly two hundred thousand children are enrolled in these Legions, and not only taught but intelligently and solemnly pledged against alcohol, tobacco and swearing. These are marching bravely on to a pure manhood and womanhood under the banner displaying the legend: "Tremble, King Alcohol! we shall grow up;" and he does tremble more at the tramping of these little feet than he would before the nation's artillery.

The third division of this grand army of education is that of the Sunday-school forces, led from its organization by Miss Lucia Kimball. Its emblem is the Bible on whose open page is written: "Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost! Whoso defileth the temple of God, him will God destroy." "Keep thy body pure because it is the temple of God," is the great lesson taught, enforced by God's own commands and teachings. Here, also, has been patient, persistent, steady work, through years of discouragement and of victory. Its results are seen in utterances of the International Sabbath School Association, in quarterly temperance lessons, and in an army of two hundred thousand pledged children thoroughly instructed in God's law of temperance.

Not alone do children need education; in the underlying principles of the great reform, adults equally need it; and for this the W. C. T. U. makes abundant provision. Its literature department, at whose head, since its organization, has stood Miss Julia Coleman, while providing instruction for the children, does not neglect their elders. Total abstinence teaching is the specialty of this department, and grandly does it do its work. Are people perishing for lack of knowledge of what beer does? Its Beer series furnishes them the facts, backed by indisputable proofs and arguments. Is it cider that is leading them astray? Equally full is its quiver of arrows to slay this foe, as also to fight tobacco and impure literature, and to carry on evangelistic work. Last year this department distributed over two million pages of tracts, all of which have an educating influence.

In the same line is the work the W. C. T. U. is doing through its publishing house, the W. T. P. A., which last year sent out 25,000,000 pages of literature, to educate the people along all the lines of temperance work. Each week it sends out 80,000 copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, teaching temperance to at least 300,000 men and women; the Oak and Ivy Leaf does the same work for the young men and maidens; and The Young Crusader for the boys and girls, while our German brothers are reached through Der Deutsch Amerikaner.

No organization more thoroughly appreciates the value of the press as an educator than does the W. C. T. U. It shows this not only by energetic work through its own agencies, but by enlisting all others possible; its press department is a striking illustration of the wisdom of this policy. Its aim is to reach the immense audience that hears with its eyes, and will not thus listen to the truth as it comes through temperance sources. It is evident that the great bulk of secular papers do not favor temperance; they are not as ready to state facts in its favor as those which seem to militate against it. For example, Governor Larrabee, for years the executive of Iowa, and thoroughly posted in regard to the working of its prohibitory law, devoted half his message when he lately retired from office, to showing the beneficent effects of prohibition there. He gave no theories, but solid facts, backed by statistical and official evidence. The Chicago Tribune published the other portion of his message, but omitted this, its most important part, saying it was taken up with things of interest only to Iowans. Governor Boies devotes an equal space to the subject in his inaugural, but is against prohibition, a series of bald assertions without any proof, yet the Tribune prints it in full.

Ten years ago such things were more common even than they are to-day, and hundreds of thousands of people pin their faith to what these papers print. "We must get temperance facts into these papers," said our wise Queen Esther Housh, and with rare tact and skill she wrought to this end. Four years ago Miss Ames came to her assistance, and when both these busy women became too busy to do the work longer, it was transferred to Miss Henry, who now devotes her entire time to it. Her late report shows that during last year, temperance items sent out in her Bulletin were published with more or less regularity in 1,350 papers, while the Special Bulletin sent to the large religious weeklies was very largely copied from by them; local superintendents sustain seven hundred W. C. T. U. columns in as many secular papers. On a low estimate, temperance truth is brought to a million readers who else would not hear it, by this department alone. We have not time to tell of the educational work carried on in higher institutions of learning, in the Schools of Methods, through the Chautauquas and other great gatherings, into which persistent tact has gained an entrance for our work, and by our courses of reading on economic and scientific temperance; yet we think this imperfect showing of the work will convince even our reverend Rip Van Winkle that teaching temperance is no afterthought in our organization, but one of its foundation stones.

THE AMERICAN BASTILE.

A Bastile in free America! A place under the stars and stripes for confinement of innocent men, like the ancient dungeon, which symbolized the oppression of France! Such in reality, if not in name, is the old Ludlow Street jail, among the crowded East side tenements of New York City. It is difficult to think of imprisonment for debt as actually existing in this land at the close of the nineteenth century; yet Ludlow Street jail is little better than the London debtors' prisons, the Marshalsea and the Fleet Street, made famous by Dickens and Thackeray.

The law in New York provides for imprisonment of debtors who contract obligations with intent to deceive, and is so construed that a spiteful and conscienceless creditor can imprison almost any debtor on a charge of fraudulent intentions. Innocent men thus incriminated are packed away in Ludlow Street jail, and if without friends to pay their debts or act as bondsmen, are likely to grow old in prison. A prisoner without money is confined in his cell like an ordinary criminal. A man of means is soon given to understand that money will secure all sorts of special privileges from the jail officials. He may not at first choose to take advantage of this knowledge, but pressure is brought to bear which soon convinces him of the wisdom of conciliating the powers that be.

The New York Herald has created a sensation by its recent exposure of the corruption of these jail officers. The Herald contrived the imprisonment of one of its reporters on a trumped-up charge of borrowing money and passing a worthless check in payment. The reporter succeeded in having his arrival at jail illegally delayed, and not only enjoyed a "good time" and the utmost freedom during imprisonment, but was actually permitted to leave the jail in company with the warden with whom he took a drink in a saloon and dinner at a restaurant. These indulgences required the payment of forty dollars to the sheriff, fifteen dollars to the keeper, and twenty dollars to the warden, beside a "nearly equal amount spent in 'tips' to gain courteous treatment from the sheriff's subordinates."

The abundant corroborative evidence, brought to the surface by the Herald's exposé, indicates a long course of abuses and gross neglect of duty. Officers are charged with leaving prisoners at liberty after sentence without proper bonds for the payment of a large sum per day, with taking prisoners out to the theater and of permitting abandoned women to enter their cells, and of shamefully neglecting penniless prisoners. All the evidence is to be brought before the grand jury.

The rotten institution, which, together with the precious brood of jail officials, is a Tammany Hall pet, gives the committee appointed by the Republican Legislature to investigate alleged abuses in New York City, a promising field for operations. The object of the investigating committee undoubtedly is quite as much to probe for political capital as to reform abuses, yet it cannot fail to render public service by bringing the full light to bear upon an unjust system of imprisonment and the flagrant abuses which center in that relic of the dark ages on Ludlow street, our American Bastile.

THE North American Review for March contains Speaker Reed's views upon counting a quorum, which formed the basis of his much criticised ruling on January 30. It seemed an undue exercise of authority on the part of the chair, but the outcome has been a new set of rules, which supply a need long felt and equally felt by whichever party has been in the majority. These rules require members to vote unless they have a pecuniary interest in the question at issue; the dignity of the House and the rights of members are given precedence over every question but a motion to adjourn; one hundred shall constitute a quorum in the Committee of the whole; members present but not voting may be counted as a part of a quorum; no dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Speaker.

Mr. Reed denies that his method of determining by count instead of by vote is contrary to the precedents of a hundred years. The constitution provides for the "attendance" of a quorum. The remarkable process of reasoning by which a man, present in the body becomes absent in the spirit was unknown to our fathers. Filibustering is a modern pastime which had its origin in the House of Representatives. It spread to the state legislatures, municipal councils, even to school boards and church assemblies, proving itself such an evil that the General Assembly of Pennsylvania suppressed it by declaring that "silent members must be considered as acquiescing with the majority." At first it took a whole political party to obstruct legislation; at last one man held Congress at bay, and the "rights of the minority" culminated. "But," says Mr. Reed, "the trying time for all ill-doing is the summit of prosperity. When Mr. Tweed wanted to know 'What are you going to do about it?' he challenged both the ingenuity and courage of mankind. It was one man against the world, and the result not doubtful."

Had this conceded right of the minority been used without abuse, it might never have been interfered with. It was calculated to provoke debate and call public attention to violent political measures, but when it began to be used to prevent decisions in election cases, and "finally in 1889 reëstablished the Liberum veto of the old Polish Diet whereby a single member becomes the arbiter of destiny, every man of sense sees that the practice must be doomed."

The closing paragraph defines the true foundations of government to be "Confidence in the wisdom of the plain people." We differ from the brilliant speaker to the extent of believing that the pillars of state, to stand firm, must rest, not in faith but in fact upon the wisdom of a sober people; and any structure of government which will win and permanently retain the confidence of the American commonwealth, must in deed as well as word make the "purity of the home and the sobriety of the people," its "first concern."

OUR symposium on "A World's Temperance Congress at the World's Fair," shows how living issues stir a live people's thought. Broadness of view goes with high altitudes, and from the Catholic Bishop Ireland of Minnesota, to the Quaker Neal Dow, of Maine, is a wide distance, yet they are men whose Christian courtesy equals their temperance zeal, and we expect to hear them at the great Congress discuss their differences with entire equanimity. We want to see all sides with a judicial fairness and condense the best expert opinion into a true consensus, which will be, as we believe, (1) personal prohibition by pledge, (2) legal prohibition by politics, (3) enforced prohibition by woman's ballot, and (4) license for any sin, be it gambling, liquor selling, or promiscuous impurity, denounced as the devil's device whereby to hold humanity in changeless chains. "May these things be."

THE banners offered to the different states, namely, one for New England, one for the Middle, and one for the Southern, one for the Western states, one for the New West, and one for the territories, will be the gift of Miss Willard. She earnestly hopes that each state will offer a banner to the county having the largest per capita increase in membership. Miss Willard's suggestion is that each white-ribboner should feel herself in duty bound to see that at least one other woman becomes a white-ribboner during this year, also that one man not now an honorary member joins our society in that capacity before the Atlanta convention in October next. By this simple rule of addition our numbers can be greatly strengthened, and that with no great amount of labor on the part of individuals. Shall we not take this up as the "Slogan" of 1890, "a membership crusade one by one, one for one, each one for all."

DR. ANNA SHAW has resigned her position as superintendent of the department of franchise, wishing to devote herself to the work as national lecturer of the newly reunited Suffrage Association of the United States. Dr. Shaw has made a brilliant record as a lecturer, and this outcome is a natural consequence of her early affiliations with the suffrage leaders. Mrs. Susan Fessenden, of Malden, Mass., whose delightful speech on behalf of New England (in response to the addresses of welcome at our Chicago National Convention) attracted so much interest, has been appointed superintendent of the franchise department, with Mrs. Zerelda Wallace, as associate. Mrs. Fessenden is one of the ablest and most womanly women in the white-ribbon ranks.

EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT.

QUERIES: 1. Is the evangelistic department of less importance than other departments?

2. What relation does it sustain to the other departments of the W. C. T. U.?

3. What are its duties?

4. How can we best promote its work?

ANSWERS: These questions have been fully answered by the superintendent in the April Monthly Reading Leaflet," also in her recent circulars. Hence, but a brief reply need be given here.

The evangelistic department is not of less but is of more importance than the other departments. It is the foundation stone of our whole superstructure—the backbone of all departments—"the spirit within the wheels." This great movement was born in a wondrous outpouring of the Spirit of God; its foundation stones were laid low at the foot of the cross. Only as we continue this spirit in all branches of our work can we prosper, and to accomplish this is the work of the evangelistic department. Hence its relation to the other departments is that of the oil to the machinery—the motor to the engine. It should secure the baptism of power, without which all methods and machinery will be in vain. Its duties, which are clearly defined in the coming April Reading, are summed up in the circular for 1890 as follows:

Aims of the evangelistic superintendent:

1. To secure in each local union such meetings for prayer, consecration and Bible teaching as shall educate unions and individuals in the Word of God.

2. To increase the number of students in our Evangelistic Course of Study.

3. To present plans for carrying the gospel, whenever circumstances will permit, to jails, penitentiaries, forts, ships, factories, saloons and house to house by regular visitation. To plan special series of gospel temperance meetings in churches, halls, depots, camp grounds and out-door services, through all of which the local unions must reach the masses.

4. To wisely distribute both gospel and temperance leaflets, that the people may be educated, and public sentiment be made.

5. By visits, appeals, letters, circulars, the state superintendent should, as far as possible, superintend and help county and local unions. Twice a year she should send a printed circular to each local union. One at the first of the year, immediately upon the receipt of the National circular, conveying its aims and suggestions, with added helps of her own, adapted to her own field. A second about two months before the National Convention, containing questions by which a full report of the work of each local union in this department can be secured and sent to the National superintendent for her annual report.

6. We again ask the coöperation of all superintendents in our effort to complete the list of women preachers in the country. Send name, address, denomination, whether ordained, settled, or evangelists. Many names sent were useless, because lacking this information.

This circular, recently issued by the National superintendent, contains a careful list of the best literature to distribute in gospel and temperance meetings.

Any state superintendent wishing to send this circular to her local union and thus save the time and expense of a special circular, can secure copies at reasonable rates by applying to the National superintendent.

The April Monthly Reading referred to gives fully the reply to all these queries, and also explains the scope and advantages of our courses of Bible study and reading.

Let each local superintendent secure a copy at 161 La Salle St., as soon as published, and read in her union.

ELIZABETH W. GREENWOOD,
Nat. Supt. Evangelistic Work.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. TREASURY.

QUERY: I wish to know how much money, if any, the N. W. C. T. U. has paid out of its funds to help support the Prohibition party. J. A.

ANSWER: Not a dollar has ever been paid from the National treasury to help the Prohibition or any other party. The treasurer will gladly send a copy of her report to any person who desires to see how the money is expended. It is claimed that if the salaried officers give anything for Prohibition party purposes, the National W. C. T. U. treasury is thus supporting that party. But when money is paid to any creditor, all claim upon and control of that money by the debtor ceases, and in this case the money is entirely at the disposal of the individual as an individual. ESTHER PUGH,
Treasurer N. W. C. T. U.

THE ST. JOHN BANQUET.

QUERY:—I saw the statement recently in the Iowa Messenger that the W. C. T. U. gave a banquet at the Sherman House, Chicago, to Governor St. John, at the time of the last National Convention. Is this the case?
WHITE RIBBONER.

ANSWER:—The St. John Banquet was given under the auspices of the Illinois Prohibition state central committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, and Mr. Stevens a member of the executive committee. The idea originated in the Lever office, and the W. C. T. U. as an organization, city, state, or national, had nothing whatever to do with it. Very sincerely yours,
ALONZO E. WILSON,
Managing Editor of The Lever.

Miss Lawrence tells of a wonderfully zealous young missionary of the church of England, who went out there with the glad tidings of Christ, and the Indians followed him up so closely from place to place, and gathered in such numbers to hear (an interpreter giving them the words of life) that the young man had literally no small trouble to find time for food or sleep, such was their eagerness. His health failed under these experiences, and though of fine physique he died in two years. News from the Field.

KANSAS.

A MESSAGE FROM THE STATE OFFICERS AND DISTRICT PRESIDENTS.

We stand face to face to-day with a great danger. For nine years the laws of Kansas have declared the traffic in intoxicating liquors to be criminal, and each succeeding year has witnessed a growing sentiment favoring such laws and a better enforcement of them, until now Kansas has the proud distinction of being the most law-abiding and moral state in the Union. The boys of the state are no longer decoyed into attractive lounging places to be robbed of their manhood, and a generation is being reared that will prove a blessing to the nation. To accomplish this, much prayer, labor and money have been expended, but the results amply compensate.

The success of prohibition is irritating to the liquor kings who have raised a cry demanding the repeal of those laws. Their cry is for the "re-submission" of the prohibitory amendment. They declare that many of the people now in Kansas were not here when the former vote was taken, and dare to assume that the sentiment of the state has been revolutionized. The cry comes altogether from those who originally opposed prohibition. The only hope of success they can have is by corrupting the ballot box or suppressing actual results. Their character leads us to fear this, and this only.

To re-open the question would be expensive,—and the state is too poor to stand extra taxation; demoralizing,—as the re-opening of this question would seem to imply retrogression, and the suppressed lawless element would again assert itself, and dangerous,—as it would open the door for the tactics usually adopted by the enemy which succeeds in elections, honestly if it can, but succeeds.

The women of the state must be a unit in opposition to re-submission, and watch and pray and work for its defeat.

As aids in this work we would urge:

1. That an organization of the W. C. T. U. is needed in every town and rural district. Our Republican Attorney-General appeals for our help, saying that "a favorable public sentiment, active, courageous and aggressive, is needed in every city, town, village and country neighborhood. The people must not relax their efforts. Law and Order Leagues, W. C. T. U. societies and other temperance organizations, public meetings and individual effort are all necessary in upholding, sustaining and enforcing the law." If our work is necessary, and is recognized by state officers, we should be encouraged to aggressive effort.

2. That a general expression against re-submission be secured from all classes of citizens, particularly officials and influential gatherings, in every community, and made known to the people, to show that public sentiment is true to our cause.

3. That as our only hope in this crisis is in the dominant party in the state, Republican conventions everywhere be influenced to declare plainly against re-submission, and against a constitutional convention, which at this time means re-submission, and to nominate as candidates for members of the House of Representatives uncompromising foes of re-submission.

4. That where such influence is successful, such nominee should have our heartiest support. Only in this way can we be true to the attitude of the National W. C. T. U., which pledges to give its "influence to that party, by whatever name called, which would give us the best embodiment of prohibition principles and most surely protect our homes."

5. That we reserve the right to criticise and condemn any convention which fails to speak plainly for us, or names men weak in our faith for official position. Our independence of party ties makes this our greatest power and our highest privilege.

6. To preserve unity in our organization, let it be understood that the W. C. T. U. is pan-partisan, or will support any man of any party who is true to the principle for which we contend; while the handful of seceders from the National W. C. T U. is in the narrowest sense partisan, and can secure no following save from one party; consequently, if the party from which they draw their strength fails to measure up to our required standard, their cause will be weakened for lack of support, or waver to fit the attitude the politician assumes. In the only state where a so-called non-partisan amendment has been made to the constitution, local unions are debarred from the privilege of supporting political friends of their cause.

A CIRCULAR LETTER TO THE UNIONS OF INDIANA COUNTY.

There are probably many women in the unions of Indiana county who are undecided as to the stand they should take in reference to the so-called "non-partisan" movement. This word is a misnomer, and is unduly influencing some who are sincerely opposed to identification with any political party. The true state of the case is that the W. C. T. U. does not indorse and never has indorsed any political party as such. Its position is one of approbation of whatever political party will adopt sincere and thorough measures for the suppression of the liquor traffic; be that party called Republican, Democratic or "Third Party." Its language is, "We will lend our influence to that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes."

The W. C. T. U. wields a mighty influence, not by direct agency, but morally. It has but one aim. It cares not which of the three parties works toward the same result; indeed, it would rejoice if with one accord they would all unite in working for temperance. The past shows there is no probability of any such community of sentiment. It is proper and reasonable to recognize temperance principles and action wherever they are found, and to express gratification at every manifestation of the growth of public sentiment in this direction. The time may be nearer now than we think, when temperance will be the dominant issue, and there will be but two parties, Temperance and Anti-Temperance. Shall we have any such word then as "non-partisan"? Shall we then want to be so bound that we cannot say God-speed to the temperance party?

The effect of division in Indiana county will be to weaken our influence, to cripple our work which hitherto has been so harmoniously and successfully carried on, and to stir up discussions "rather than godly edifying." We cannot afford to divide our forces. We cannot afford to have our meetings marred by unprofitable and unseemly agitation. We need more and more to present an unbroken front to the enemy. We need to draw closer together, aiming to be more fully consecrated to the Lord's work, and unitedly to seek His blessing and guidance. He is the "God of all peace." Let us not be easily provoked or moved from our own steadfastness; but let us be patient and trust Him whose work we are doing, to so control the hearts of all good Christian workers that harmony of views and action may soon be brought about. Division is greatly to be deplored, and a very grave responsibility rests upon any who by this means would bring conflict into existing unions, and hinder work already inaugurated.

TEXAS.

AN ORGANIZER'S GLEANINGS.

Leaving Manor, a short ride brought me to Elgin. Dr. and Mrs. Morris welcomed me to their home; the latter is a sister of Harry Haines, the well-known temperance orator of Brenham, Texas. My meetings resulted in the organization of a W. C. T. U., with Mrs. Keeble, president; Mrs. G. W. Kain, vice-president; Mrs. Nora Jones, corresponding secretary: Mrs. L. S. Jones, recording secretary; Mrs. Dr. McCullough, treasurer, Mrs. Robert Jones, superintendent UNION SIGNAL work; Mrs. Standifer, leader of economic class; Mrs. Dr. Morris, superintendent of health department: Mrs. Keeble, superintendent Band of Hope.

Mrs. Rev. Lyle of the Presbyterian church, and Dr. and Mrs. Williams sheltered the temperance organizer at Taylor. The public school with seven departments under Professor Hill, is the pride of the city. Here I met with my young friend, Miss Addie Hoyt of the Salvation Army, who so narrowly escaped from the falling walls of my home in San Antonio, a year since. The citizens spoke well of the work of the Salvation Army at Taylor. There was no prospect for woman's work for temperance.

Dr. Grace Danforth, with six other ladies, met me at Granger. I had large audiences at the Baptist church. The Literary Club was kind enough to resolve itself into a W. C. T. U. with a juvenile temperance department.

Rev. H. A. Boaz met me at the Bartlett depot and took me to Mrs. Arthur McKnight's, where there was a blessed grandfather, pleasant children and agreeable boarders. Notwithstanding the mud and wet and cold, I had a good audience at the Baptist church. I also visited and addressed their school, which occupies a beautiful new building.

The home of Mrs. Frances Armstrong sheltered me at Holland. I addressed the school under Professor Campbell, and had a large audience at the Presbyterian church. I held two women's meetings, but they were not yet ready to organize. Mrs. E. Kimbrough and Mrs. E. B. Weisinger may be relied upon, hereafter, as leaders in our work.

It was dusk on January 26, when Mrs. Denison and Mrs. Walker greeted me at the Belton station and took me to the home of Mrs. W. A. Davis, near Baylor College. This institution, with three hundred young lady pupils, is under charge of President Luther and a gifted band of teachers. I had the privilege of addressing these representative daughters of Texas; gave a Sunday afternoon address on juvenile work, and two night meetings at the Christian church, Rev. S. R. Hallam, pastor. Miss Pearl Embry was organist, and the singing was effective. The new W. C. T. U. elected Mrs. Emma Harvey, president; Mrs. Irene Hair, vice-president, and Mrs. V. C. Montgomery, corresponding secretary. Our faithful friends, Mrs. Dr. Adams and family, from Hearne, are living at Belton. Mrs. N. M. Wheat, of this place, entertained Miss Emma L. Meador, of Boston, while she drilled the contestants for the Demorest medal. It was won by Miss Nannie Townsend. The exercises were held in the Methodist church.

I reached Lampasas at nine o'clock at night, and went to Judge Abney's. The family had just returned from the burial of a grandchild that had been sick for weeks. Mrs. Abney was sick. I walked about two miles the next day, and was too sick for further exertion, and went to the Globe Hotel, where I rested for twelve days. I brought up my correspondence and made four public addresses. When I spoke in the court-house, the Sunday-school of the Baptist church furnished the music. I addressed the school under Professor McIlheny. Dr. Adkins gave me the use of the Christian church, and boasted that his wife is a constant reader of THE UNION SIGNAL.

On the dark, windy night of February 11, I reached Goldthwaite. There were two days of snow and rain. I had a fine audience on Sunday afternoon at the Baptist church, and spoke two nights at the Methodist church. A vigorous W. C. T. U. was organized, with Mrs. Clements as president, and Mrs. Ragland as secretary. Professor Vincent, formerly of Missouri, has charge of the public school. Rev. M. B. Johnson assisted me in holding services at the jail, which was a model of neatness.

It was midnight when I reached Brownwood. The bright face of the young Methodist preacher, J. R. Nelson, shone behind the conductor's lantern, and I was soon sheltered at the parsonage. The new M. E. Church when completed will nearly equal in beauty the Presbyterian church. I spent half of my time with the family of the pastor of this church, Rev. B. T. McClellan, for fifteen years a pioneer preacher. A juvenile temperance union was formed here, with Mrs. Daniel, as president, and assistants furnished from each denomination.

Mrs. Lizzie D. Johnson writes me to urge upon the sisterhood to visit the prisoners, and to send literature where they cannot visit.

The W. C. T. U. of San Antonio, with Mrs. E. A. Fry as president, held a very successful Woman's Council on February 4-6. Among the subjects discussed were, "Evangelistic Work Among Railroad Employés," "Sabbath Observance," "Young Women's Influence for Temperance" and "Woman Suffrage." One of the mottoes displayed was, "Taxation without representation is tyranny." Mrs. Wells, of Tennessee, National organizer for the W. C. T. U., was present; also Miss Ida C. Clothier, of Boston, National organizer of Y. W. C. T. U.; Miss Nettie De Salle, of New Jersey; Miss Emma L. Meador, of Boston, superintendent of juvenile work; Miss Bella French Swisher, of Austin; Mrs. Julia A. Little, of Sequin, and Mrs. Linthicum, delegate from the Knights of Labor. The local W. C. T. U. has received many new members as the result of this Woman's Council.

Mrs. Acheson has been most diligent in forwarding organization throughout the state. Mrs. Wells has been well received, and her addresses have won many new friends for prohibition.

Mrs. A. P. Boyd, of Paris, gives hearty labor to our little monthly, The Texas White Ribbon. Mrs. Lillie B. Hathaway, of Denison, is now acting as state treasurer; three ladies who have been successively chosen for this office were compelled to resign because of ill health.

Mrs. Lou. M. Young, of Denison, the state corresponding secretary, is at her post. During the first week in April she confidently expects a complete report from each of our Texas unions.

Another branch of service is now forced upon me. This pleasant task of reporting Texas news will fall to other hands. Good bye, dear readers.

MICHIGAN.

Our president is home from the East, and the meeting of the general officers of the state was held March 11.

The second district president, Mrs. J. D. Stannard, is doing a month's work in Monroe county, the county convention being held at Petersburg the 19 and 20. In writing she says, "Since the Crusade I have given myself body, soul and spirit to this work."

The fifth district president, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, has been holding a most successful parliamentary tour of a month. The "drill" at Adrian had a class of three hundred and twenty-one; this fact alone proving not only the interest in the work but her great success as a teacher; Plainwell, Grand Rapids, Morenci, Blissfield, being some of the points. These drills are usually followed by a lecture on other subjects. The collections were very satisfactory and the unions were strengthened and encouraged by this always helpful worker.

In the sixth district we are holding our own, just at present laboring more on the Demorest contest line, preparing for our district convention, which is to be in April. At Flint we are holding a series of temperance meetings at which our clergymen are most helpful; the Episcopal clergyman is to speak at our next meeting, for scientific temperance instruction. I am sure Mrs. Hunt would agree with me that in this department our county and district superintendents are "none-such."

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON, Union Signal Reporter.

PARLIAMENTARY WORK.

The people of Grand Rapids have been enjoying a treat in the form of a Parliamentary Institute, conducted by Mrs. A. S. Benjamin of Portland. Four parliamentary drills were given the evenings of February 17, 18, 19, 20. Much interest was manifested by the members of the class, which was composed not only of members of the W. C. T. U., but of men and women of all professions, physicians, lawyers, business men and tradesmen, representing many organizations such as I. O. G. T., I. O. O. T., Royal Templars, E. S. A.

All were enthusiastic in praise of the ability and thorough knowledge of parliamentary rules of the leader, Mrs. Benjamin, whose bright and forcible manner of dealing with the subject in hand could not but give to all a clear impression of the importance of a knowledge of parliamentary law in these days when all, if they do not shirk their duty, may be called upon to help crystallize the sentiment of their fellow men. The local papers gave many words of commendation. This plan of holding a series of drills on consecutive evenings is the most satisfactory method we have yet found whereby one can in a short time gain quite a thorough knowledge of rules of order for deliberative bodies.

At the close of the Institute steps were taken to organize a Parliamentary Club, about twenty names being received. Mrs. Benjamin will hold similar institutes at Plainwell and Adrian.

AN APPEAL TO THE WOMEN OF THE TWENTIETH DISTRICT.

The Crusade of 1873-74 was founded on prayer and faith, and the one great object of the movement was to save souls; and, from that time to the present, whatever line of work has been taken up or added, this has been the one underlying thought, the salvation of the perishing and the uplifting of the fallen. We think there is no branch of so much importance as the evangelistic work. We are told by inspiration, "Do the work of an evangelist;" of carrying the Word of Life to the hungry, starving poor, not only poor in this world's goods, but those whose souls are perishing for the Bread of Life.

The equipments for this work are consecration to God, a baptism of the Holy Ghost. Christ brake and gave to the disciples, and they gave to the hungry multitude. Christ is saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Who will answer, "Here am I: send me?" Hold gospel meetings where you can, but do not fail to carry the good tidings to those in the home. "He first findeth his own brother." Let us seek out the aged, the infirm, the poor, the sick. Do not keep your flowers for the dead, but carry them to the living. Go to the home of poverty with tenderness and love; tell them Jesus will bless and save. There are those to whom we must carry the gospel. They cannot, or will not, go where it is preached. In your house-to-house visiting, hold prayer-meetings. God's "shut-ins" would gladly welcome an hour of prayer; the aged and helpless; you can do this. Will you? Go to the poor inebriate; offer him the total abstinence pledge; I am afraid we neglect this too much; ask him to sign it, then tell him there is One that will help him to keep it. He cannot do it in his own strength.

Now will every union that has not already appointed a local superintendent, please elect some godly woman to take hold of this work, and push it for the Master's sake?

MRS. G. W. SCAWTHON,
Dist. Supt. Evangelistic Dept.

ORGANIZATION WORK IN THE FIFTEENTH DISTRICT.

Readers of THE UNION SIGNAL all over Illinois will be glad to learn of the progress made in Champaign county during the past three weeks. Prior to February 15 there were only two organizations in this county, one at Champaign City, and the other at Tolona. On the fifteenth, Mrs. Dr. Replogle, the untiring district president, and I started out, intent on having at least ten societies in Champaign county, and our efforts have been rewarded, for we now have organizations at Rantoul, Mahomet, St. Joseph, Fisher, Urbana, Sidney, Philo, and Champaign, the last four being composed largely of the "Wise" girls. The total membership of these new societies is three hundred; a grand victory; and now we are going to ask for fifteen societies, and with the promise, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that shall be given unto you," we know that victory is ours. The women of the fifteenth district are loyal to "God and Home and Native Land."

CLARA PARRISH,
District Organizer.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

Since the state convention of Decatur, forty-one new organizations, with a membership of seven hundred, have been added to the list of unions. During the winter, active work has been carried on in almost every district, many of the district presidents being in the field constantly.

Over twenty counties have already held their conventions, which have been well attended. Mrs. L. S. Rounds, the ever-tireless state president, has been in the field almost without a day's interruption. For a short time she was absent from the state doing grand service in Wisconsin, and, still later, in New York, filling appointments made for her last year. The most flattering reports come from these states of the lectures given by her.

The work in the state has also been greatly assisted by Mrs. Lathrap, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. Buell, Mrs. Barney, Mrs. Emmons, with Governor St. John, George Bain, George Woodford, Mr. J. G. Woolley, Wolfenbarger and Huckins. An immense amount of literature has been sent out from headquarters, including four thousand state reports and five thousand annual addresses of the state president and state secretary. The "old guard" state, the home of the leader of the National W. C. T. U., Frances E. Willard, stands loyal and true to the principles of prohibition, to its National and state officers, and presses forward under the banner, "All Illinois for God and Temperance."

The Tennessee, Illinois, W. C. T. U., which was misrepresented as having seceded from the National Union, "is doing more work than ever before, and great interest is being taken by the members. Additions are made to the membership at every meeting." Mrs. Kate Waddell is president, and Miss Nettie Walker is corresponding secretary.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

If any one imagines that the W. C. T. U. is losing its influence in Washington he should have been at the Congregational church Sunday afternoon, February 23, where the union held the largest temperance meeting that Washington has seen this winter. People unable to obtain seats stood during the service. Mrs. Sarah D. LaFetra, the president, made brief remarks. Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, of Brooklyn, spoke on "Perfect Christian Service"; Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, of England, made an eloquent plea for total abstinence on the part of parents for the sake of their children, and denounced the liquor traffic.

Miss Greenwood has been giving an interesting series of Bible readings during the week. Such great interest was manifested in these meetings that Mrs. La Fetra invited Miss Greenwood to give another series of Bible readings the following week.

The largest reception of the week at the National capital was that given by the ladies of the W. C. T. U. at the Hotel Fredonia, Monday evening, February 24. Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, Miss Greenwood, Mrs. Senator Pettigrew, Mrs. Pickler, of South Dakota, and Mrs. LaFetra received the guests. The parlors were beautifully decorated for the occasion with palms, ferns and flowers. An orchestra discoursed sweet music, and refreshments were served during the evening. Mrs. Chant favored the guests with two songs of her own composition. Among those present were Representative Taylor and wife, seven Ohio representatives and Mr. Cutcheon, of Michigan, Congressmen Morse, Rev. Dr. Corey, Rev. Mr. Richardson, Rev. Dr. Baldwin, Rev. Dr. Powell, Congressman Pickler and Senator Pettigrew.

The W. C. T. U. held a large meeting Sunday afternoon, March 2, at the Congregational church. Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, the National superintendent of evangelistic work, gave a beautiful and effective exposition on "Character Building." Miss Greenwood's series of Bible readings at the Metropolitan Church have been attended with interest and have made a deep impression for good.

Col. George W. Bain, Kentucky's silver-tongued orator, gave an eloquent temperance lecture at the Foundry Methodist Church, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Monday evening, March 3. The auditorium and gallery of the church were crowded. His theme was "Labor and License." His Washington hearers seemed surprised by his statement that there were more saloons in New York state alone than in all of our country south of Mason's and Dixon's line. Colonel Bain was engaged to speak again under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. the following Sunday.

IDA HINMAN,
Union Signal Reporter.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

We have just closed our second series of Bible expositions given by Miss Greenwood, two of which were given Sunday, March 9, to vast audiences in the First Congregational Church, three in the Church of the Covenant, and the remainder in the Metropolitan M. E. Church, so well known nationally.

The audiences were large and composed of leading workers of all denominations. The readings were of the highest order, and were a continuous uplift to our souls, and the whole series seemed to have been guided by divine wisdom to aid us in an hour of need. Such meetings we commend to every local and state union, for nothing could be more helpful and blessed.

RESOLUTIONS REGARDING "ADMINISTRATIVE JUSTICE" IN SIBERIA.

The seventh annual convention of the Florida W. C. T. U. has just closed successfully. A copy of the resolutions will be sent you wherein you will note the sympathy for and co-operation with the National Union expressed in no equivocal language.

The body unanimously passed the following resolutions after discussion, and reading of the account of Russian atrocities,—the paper was presented by Mrs. Dieffenderfer of Winter Park:

Resolved, That the women of the W. C. T. U. of Florida enter their protest against the cruel treatment of political prisoners as instanced by the flogging to death of Madame Sigida, a political prisoner of the Russian government at Kara, Siberia, in August, 1889, and the consequent suicide of her three companions.

Resolved, That we request the women of all nations and Christian organizations in churches and Sunday-schools to unite with us in calling attention to the matter, and endeavoring to ameliorate the condition of these poor prisoners condemned to the loss of liberty, to the endurance of hunger and abuse; most frequently on a mere suspicion.

Resolved, That we memorialize the government of the United States, pleading for a protest against such treatment as brutal and barbarous, and not to be tolerated in this nineteenth century.

Mrs. Chapin was the only National officer present with us at our convention.

MRS. E. A. NEILL,
State Supt. Press.

NEW YORK.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY CONVENTION.

This was held at Olean, February 11 and 12, at Blighton's Hall; was called to order at 1:15 p. m. by the president, Mrs. Luna E. Adams, and opened with a praise service conducted by Mrs. Swartz, followed by a consecration service, led by Mrs. Bissell. The president gave a brief address which was full of thoughtful suggestions for our work, and heartily appreciated by the audience.

The address of welcome given by Miss Dora Coss, president of the Olean W. C. T. U., was loyal in sentiment, exhorting us to patient work against the adversary, and tendered in the name of the heart-broken women of Olean, and in the name of Christ. This was followed by remarks from the Revs. Bissell, McKee and Grames of Olean, each extending a loving, helping hand, and a hearty God-speed. The convention returned its appreciation by a rising Chautauqua salute. The response to address of welcome was given by Mrs. Peckham, of Leon, in a pathetic manner, full of sympathy and loyalty. At this juncture, the committee on courtesies escorted Mrs. Jump and Mrs. Baxter to the platform, and remarks were given by each of these ladies, whose brave and tender utterances gave us courage and determination to overcome every obstacle in this fight against the enemy of our homes. Reports from local unions followed, all of which gave evidence of more work and greater interest than ever before. The children's hour, in charge of Mrs. I. S. Hopkins, was full of interest. The question box was ably presided over by Mrs. Baxter, and was suggestive of good ideas.

The evening session opened with remarks from the president, followed by a praise service conducted by Mrs. N. H. W. Archibald. Devotional exercise by Mrs. Peckham, after which Mrs. McKee rendered a fine solo, entitled "The world is moving on." Then came the address by Mrs. Baxter, of Michigan. She is a very pleasant speaker, clear and forcible. A quartette of male voices sang "Speed away," in a charming manner. Benediction.

The Wednesday morning session came to order at call of the chair. Miss Dora Coss led the devotional exercises. A very impressive Scripture lesson was given by Miss Vandelia Varnum, county organizer, from thirteenth chapter of Numbers. Then followed reports of departments, and papers by Mrs. Terry and Mrs. Abbey, treating on the best methods of advancing scientific temperance instruction in our common schools; these were full of good ideas. The "Y. W. C. T. U. Round Table" was conducted by Mrs. Jump, and held the undivided attention of the convention to its close. This opened a discussion of the Demorest Gold Medal Contests. The noontide hour of prayer was observed, after which we adjourned for dinner, and enjoyed a social hour.

Opened in the afternoon with Loyal Temperance Legion work by Mrs. I. S. Hopkins, which was interesting, and shows Mrs. Hopkins to be a thorough worker in her department. Devotional exercises led by Mrs. Hubbard, which was like a refreshing shower; most noticeable has been the earnestness of all who have conducted these exercises.

The committee on credentials reported fifty-one delegates and twenty visiting delegates. The report of the delegate to National Convention, Miss V. Varnum, was most interesting. A vote of thanks was given Miss Varnum. A blackboard exercise by Mrs. Bissell, of much excellence, was given, also a temperance cartoon explained by Rev. Mr. Grames, which was amusing and instructive, and showed clearly the dangers which may enter our homes through the open door of the law.

Resolutions were passed in which the wide outlook and helpfulness in W. C. T. U. work of THE UNION SIGNAL were fully recognized, and recommending all the workers to increase its circulation; indorsing the resolutions adopted by the state convention in regard to text-books, and pledging diligent work for the introduction of the books recommended by the National W. C. T. U. into the common schools, also urging an amendment to the scientific temperance instruction laws, providing for a penalty in case of non-conformity to the provisions of said laws; recognizing with gratitude the work of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt; favoring the Blair educational bill; condemning all license of the liquor traffic, high or low; protesting "with sorrow and amazement" against the connection of Vice-President Morton with the Shoreham bar; deprecating the use of fermented wine in any of the churches, and urging members of the W. C. T. U. to refuse alcoholic wine at communion, and to do all that they can for its removal from the Lord's Table; pleading for the furtherance of the evangelistic department in all its blessed lines; urging most earnestly the education of the children in scientific temperance, and to become aggressive workers; commending the work of the press department, also that of the franchise and fair departments; and closing with cordial thanks for all courtesies received.

The evening of the 12th was given to the Y. W. C. T. U. of the county under the direction of Mrs. Archibald, county superintendent of Y work.

The Y's and honorary members, the latter also members of the Y. M. C. A., contributed largely to the program in solos, quartettes, duets, etc. Miss Bertha Foster, of Yorkshire Center, recited "At the W. C. T. U. Convention," in a pleasing manner. Mrs. C. J. A. Jump, state superintendent of Y work, gave her influence and voice in favor of truth and righteousness exalting a nation.

I do not know how it may end, but for one, am willing to work to the end, believing that our Divine Father in His infinite wisdom and goodness will guide our ship of state into a safe harbor. We have cast our bread upon the waters, and are ready for the next work that comes to our hands.

E. S. T. DARTE,
County Cor. Sec.

NIAGARA COUNTY CONVENTION.

This was held in Ransomville, February 27 and 28. It was one of the best meetings we ever held. The work of the convention was well up to any in the history of the county W. C. T. U. The reports from local unions showed that good work was being done.

Mrs. L. S. Rounds, president of Illinois W. C. T. U., was with us; her Bible readings and lectures have never been excelled in this county, and we would urge all unions that wish strong, fearless and advanced thought and argument upon the topics of the times to secure her if possible. She is an incentive to all to "lend a hand," for "a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together" for truth and right.

The addresses of welcome were equal to the time and place, and well responded to. Several addresses upon the needs of the organization and work of the Y's were full of good thoughts. A paper entitled "Nettles," showed that the author was well up in the lore of the botany of human nature. Those we called our "boys in blue" in the long ago gave the use of their hall for dining-room, and helped throughout the Convention.

The first day of the convention was the birthday of our much-loved president, Mrs. Wm. P. Williams. Mrs. Coates, of Olcott, had prepared a poem, giving a retrospective view of Mrs. Williams' life; it was very beautiful. After it was read, Mrs. Frost, first vice-president, presented a gift of fifty gold dollars and two silver dollars. This was a loving tribute from the sisters of the several unions in the county. It was a complete surprise, but Mrs. Williams, who is equal to every occasion, responded with fitting words.

MRS. M. D. WILLIAMS,
Rec. Sec.

WORK IN DEPARTMENT OF NARCOTICS.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of Elmira, began her work with us January 26. In four weeks she held twenty-two parlor meetings and addressed twenty-one public meetings in as many different places; all in the interest of the department of narcotics. Five thousand pages of literature were distributed. The result of this work was the addition of one hundred and thirty-seven active and sixty-two honorary members to our number. The largest addition in any one place was at the city of Lockport, where forty-two names were secured.

Mrs. Bullock not only gave general satisfaction, but she succeeded in reaching and interesting a class of people that have never before seen anything attractive in our W. C. T. U. work. Lockport City union passed resolutions of thanks to Mrs. Bullock of hearty appreciation of her work, and recommending to other counties to secure her for systematic work among their unions. One young man after hearing the lecture, emptied his pockets of tobacco, and pledged himself not to use it again.

Last week we held a county convention, and the different unions reported very successful results from Mrs. Bullock's work. We need constant efforts along this line of personal work in special departments. Niagara county means to have Mrs. Bullock again.

MRS. EMMA G. DIETRICK.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

WILL Mrs. Maria B. Butler, author of "A Memory," published in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 30, please send her address to this office?

MRS. L. M. CHACE writes that Mrs. J. M. Johnston, 210 Broadway, Little Rock, Ark., is appointed as state treasurer.

THROUGH an inadvertence in THE UNION SIGNAL of February 27, the impression is given that the "History of Bible Wines" is by R. H. McDonald, but Mrs. Esmond meant to say that the book is to be obtained of Dr. McDonald, San Francisco, Cal.

A DEMOREST silver medal contest was held at the Presbyterian Church of Marshall, Mich., Friday evening, February 14. Besides the recitations, fine instrumental and vocal music was interspersed through the program, making a first-class entertainment. The medal was awarded to Miss Ella Flood, by Prof. O. C. Seelye, superintendent of public schools, with a fitting address. Master Ray Ludwick, the youthful orator, and pride of Michigan, also made a short but rousing speech. Anna Pennel stood No. 2, and Mabel Raymond No. 3; both give promise of a brilliant future on the platform. The Temperance Temple of Marshall has a large membership, and has retained the same superintendent for three and a half years.

KIND words regarding Miss Varnum's work: "The temperance lectures given by Miss Vandelia Varnum, which closed Monday evening, February 24, were the most successful of any given in Cochranton, Pa., for a number of years; the audience increased each evening until the close. Miss Varnum has a pleasing manner, and while earnest and eloquent, is so fair and honest in her arguments that even those who are not pronounced prohibitionists were pleased with her lectures. Public sentiment is changing rapidly in this town in favor of prohibition. May the Lord hasten the day!"

THE W. C. T. U. of Benkelman, Nebraska, has lost a beloved member in the death of Mrs. T. J. Reed, who passed away in great peace February 20. She was an earnest worker, and at her death left vacant offices in the local, county and district unions. Much sympathy is expressed by her W. C. T. U. sisters for the bereaved husband and four motherless children.

A FRIEND writes: "The evangelistic services held at Concordia, Kansas, by the Revs. C. H. and Eugenia St. John, resulted in seventy-two conversions; at Haddam, thirty conversions; packed houses in both places. In spite of la grippe, storms, snow, bitter winds, bigotry and prejudice, the world moves on toward the final triumph of good. Seventeen recruits were added to the White Cross army at Concordia, twelve at Haddam.

MISS JULIA BOSWORTH, of Missouri, lectured in Mendon, Ill., February 9 and 10, on "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" and "The Modern Babylon." On March 2, S. M. Kennedy, of Chicago, lectured on "Save the Boys." Both speakers were received with marked favor, and good was accomplished.

THE W. C. T. U., of Bellona, New York, held a series of no-license meetings recently, with a different speaker every evening. The speeches were of the best, being forceful, practical and convincing. As a result of the awakened sentiment, a no-license commissioner was elected.

A CORRESPONDENT sends the following: "Notwithstanding the almost impassable roads, the Benjaminville, Ill., W. C. T. U., assembled February 1, seventeen ladies being present. An interesting and animated meeting was held. Devotional exercises, Bible reading, select reading and extemporaneous remarks occupied the time, and a unanimous vote was passed sustaining the National W. C. T. U. Let us take the motto of Lucretia Mott: 'Truth for authority, not authority for truth.' Let us go on courageously in the faith that if this work be of God, it cannot be overthrown."

THE W. C. T. U. of New London, O., lost one of its valued workers in the person of Mrs. R. Hazard, February 6. Resolutions on her death were published in our local paper. This society held its third Demorest silver medal contest, February 26. It was a decided success. They give a White Ribbon Birthday Book as second prize at all these contests.

A SUCCESSFUL Demorest medal contest was held at Arkansas City, Kansas, March 4. A large audience was present, and the proceeds amounted to twenty-five dollars. The W. C. T. U. recently held a grand parlor meeting in the Hotel Gladstone, which won both friends and money for the union.

THE committee on Anchorage Mission work, Chicago, Mrs. Dr. Winter, chairman, desire to call attention to the fact that Miss Nettie Houghton, their accredited representative, is about to visit Indiana and Michigan in behalf of this interest, and bespeak for her a warm welcome from the unions. She is a good speaker.

MRS. M. A. STANLEY, president of the W. C. T. U., assisted by Mrs. M. J. Kellerman, superintendent of the work among colored people, organized a colored W. C. T. U., at Parsons, Kansas, February 23, with about twenty members. A good deal of interest was manifested and a large and effective union is assured. Mrs. Harts was elected president; Miss Mary Johnson, recording secretary; Miss Bettie Woods, corresponding secretary; Miss Della Mason, vice-president from the M. E. church; and a vice-president from each of the other churches will be elected at the next meeting at the New Hope Baptist church. Quite a number of white ladies were present at the meeting on the Sunday of organization, and attended the colored Sunday-school of which S. O. Clayton is superintendent, and were loud in praise of the excellent order that prevailed, and the neat and cleanly appearance of the scholars and the intelligence they displayed.

NOTICES.

To the W. C. T. Unions of Missouri:

Contributions of literature for distribution will be gratefully received by Mrs. Eliza C. Ewing, 317 Monroe Street, Jefferson City. The union there has been organized but a few months, yet they have placed wall pockets in the jail, and in the hospital at the penitentiary. Dear sisters, think of the "souls in prison," and help these co-laborers to provide for them. Send packages prepaid.

ELLEN D. MORRIS, Cor. Sec.

The Kalamazoo county convention will be held in Cooper, Mich., April 1-3. The first evening will be devoted to the address of welcome and response, also exercises conducted by the Y's and Loyal Temperance Legion; the second evening a lecture; third evening, a Demorest medal contest. A general invitation is extended to all in the county to be present. MRS. F. L. BROWN, Pres.

The third quarterly county convention of the W. C. T. U. of Williams county, Ohio, will be held on Friday and Saturday, March 21 and 22, with the union at West Unity. An interesting program has been arranged for the occasion. Mrs. E. E. Mason, district president, and Mrs. Henrietta Monroe, state president, have promised to be present and to give addresses. It is desired that each local union report at the convention. We hope the Loyal Temperance Legions will be represented by many members. MRS. ELLEN A. BARTLETT, Co. Pres.,

MISS KATIE HASICK, Co. Sec.

Official Communications.

MRS. BARNEY AND THE SOUTH.

The whole country knows what "Mrs. J. K. Barney of Rhode Island" is to the prisoners and friendless, and has been for many years past. Her loving ministries are "wide as the curse is found" in jails, police stations and almshouses. Her influence is felt in every legislature, and her name blessed by the forgotten and forlorn among men and women everywhere. It has been the earnest desire of the National officers that Mrs. Barney should visit the leading cities of the South, and assist the local superintendents in the work of this important department, for they are confident that a conference with Mrs. Barney on the subject of police matrons, separation of the sexes, and juveniles from older offenders, would lead to important reforms. The reports and appeals received by the National superintendent seem like an imperative call, and she would gladly make such a tour if the way could be opened by state president and state superintendents, together with the local unions.

Of course it must receive immediate attention in order to have the trip arranged advantageously this spring. I wish that Southern presidents of states and local W. C. T. Unions would write me at Evanston on this subject. There will be no expense beyond that which is actually involved in the necessary traveling. Let me hear promptly, for this work should be taken up at once. Mrs. Barney is, perhaps, unexcelled among our speakers in acceptability. She has strength, sweetness and the Spirit's power, and is above everything else womanly, sisterly, motherly, never fails to gain access to public institutions and secure an opportunity for her ministry. Always discreet, she may be relied on for help in any of our lines of work. And I would suggest that a public meeting be arranged in each city visited, with invitations to leading officials and citizens, thereby making the movement popular. FRANCES E. WILLARD.

HEALTH AND HEREDITY.

A PLEA FOR THE STUDY OF HEREDITY.

By this law of heredity human ills are multiplied, and by it they may be diminished. It lies in our power to make it one of the greatest of blessings or turn it into the deepest and most lasting of sorrows. Therefore the study has a two-fold object. First, to awaken parents to their responsibilities, that they may be more careful to repress and overcome certain habits and traits of character they do not wish to see transmitted, and to cultivate and cherish those they wish to see reproduced in their offspring.

A mother will be impressed with the desire of forming higher ideals for her children, and with the determination to be purer, better, nobler. She will realize that to be a mother is the highest vocation a woman can fill, but not to be a mother to inmates of jails and brothels or insane asylums and hospitals.

She must observe all the laws of health, and her mind must be enlarged by study and strengthened by use, and she must have scrupulous integrity, unflagging industry, and sincere religion.

When the father realizes that the voluntarily adopted and cherished habit becomes the overpowering impulse of the child, whether virtuous or vicious; when he can see reflected from the glass of liquor his descendants, even to the third and fourth generations—the idiots, the insane and the criminals—the social glass which he has looked upon as a harmless pleasure will be shunned as a lasting curse.

The second object of this study is to overcome inherited tendencies, such as diseases or vices, or injurious habits. By knowing the disease with which we or our ancestors have been afflicted, we can make this particular disease a study, and by finding the causes that tend to produce the same, can, by proper precautions and environments, remove those causes, and thus this pathological tendency may remain latent in the system, and in the course of several generations become extinct.

Dr. Maudsley says on the subject of insanity: "An injudicious education may aggravate an inherent mischief, the parent not only transmitting a taint or vice of nature to the child, but fostering its increase by the influence of a bad example, and by a foolish training at that period when the young mind is very susceptible, and direction given to development, decisive for life. Where there is no innate taint, mischief may still be wrought by enforcing an unnatural precocity, wherein is often planted the germ of future disease. Parental harshness and neglect, repressing the child's feelings, stifling its need of love, and driving it to a morbid self-brooding, or to take refuge in a world of vague fancies, is sometimes not less injurious than foolish indulgence, through which it never learns the necessary lessons of renunciation and self-control. There can be no doubt that by the influence of good education and a sound training a predisposition to insanity might often be much neutralized and rendered almost harmless."

If a parent knows that a child has inherited a strong craving for alcoholic stimulants from parent or grandparent, there will be consolation in knowing that by his constant care and watchfulness, that tendency may be ameliorated or overcome entirely, by making the environments of the child such as to suppress rather than to encourage the same. The food should be looked after that it contain nothing that excites a craving for stimulants, and that it is of the most wholesome and nutritious kind. It must be remembered that bad hygienic conditions, by their depressing influences on the nervous system, predispose to inebriety. Sleeping rooms must be perfect in all their details so as to secure rest and refreshment, and total abstinence must be the law.

Let us work and pray that fermented wine may be removed from the Lord's table, that such as have inherited tendencies for drink may not find their ruin where they expected to be helped to salvation.

We should teach our sons and daughters the responsibilities of parentage and the laws of transmission, as it is more important to domestic happiness than wealth or position.

The care of the body is imperative. The building up of a perfect body, crowned by a perfect brain, an abode fit for the dwelling place of the soul, is at once the greatest problem and the grandest hope of humanity. "Self-reverence, self-knowledge and self-control," with Divine aid, give the possessor sovereign power.

Asso. Supt. Dept. Health and Heredity.

From Gen. Clinton B. Fisk:

Your favor the 21st. ult. was duly received, as also a copy of Miss Willard's "Glimpses of Fifty Years," for which receive my hearty thanks. I have made a check for my volume subscribed for, and remitted direct to the association. I have read the work and reviewed it with uncommon interest. It is the best book of its character extant. What an educational force it would be on the library table of every family in this country. Miss Willard's marvelous power with pen; her ripe experience in the things about which she writes, and her faith and enthusiasm would give noble inspiration to the young and old in every household. I rejoice to hear of the immense demand for it.

HOPKINTON, IA.

As the results of trial subscription, already I hear from more than one on this list: "Don't fail to notify me when my year is up, so that I shall be sure to renew." "I think much of THE UNION SIGNAL." "It is just splendid," etc.

Pyle's Pearline

will wash clothes, will clean house—will do it well—will save you time; labor; wear and tear; will reduce drudgery; will not hurt your hands; your clothes or paint, and besides will cost you no more than common bar soap. One honest trial will prove all that.

Why not accept the testimony of the millions who use it as proof of its virtue. Among your friends you'll find those who have used Pearline for years—ask them—they will tell you "can't do without it."

Beware Pearline is the original Washing Compound—used by millions, but imitated by thousands who peddle their stuff or give worthless prizes. Pearline is never peddled, but sold by all grocers. 151 Manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

SOUTH AMERICA.

THE UNION SIGNAL, just how much I enjoy it, you who are more actively engaged in the battle in our own country can hardly imagine. I read nearly every word, and it is the paper that I read first. I am most anxious to have it sent me regularly. When I have finished a number, it is passed around here, then goes to Valparaiso, to a Mrs. Jenkins, who has a flourishing Band of Hope. She is delighted with it. The Young Crusader might be a help to me and to her. You may send me a copy of that with THE UNION SIGNAL.

I received the W. C. T. U. pin "on trial," and at once pronounced it very pretty, but was n't sure we had any place for it, so thought I would wait and see before acknowledging it. And now am ready to say, it is not only very pretty, but just the thing for an outside garment—sack or wrap—and, while I prefer the real white ribbon for my dress, I think this better for the cloak or wrap, for variety, for convenience, etc., etc. Hope you will sell a million. Publisher's Notes.

New Zealand! Sweden! India!

One day this week came an order for 100 copies of "Glimpses of Fifty Years" to go to New Zealand. The next day came an order from London, England, for four sample copies to go to Australia. A short time ago we sent a lady in the northern part of Ireland ten copies for distribution among schools—filled an order for India, another for Sweden, and so it goes. A good Loyal Temperance Legion organizer in this state lectures evenings and sells "Glimpses" daytimes—averages eight to ten copies a day. Example of home and foreign missionary work that the book is doing! Any suggestiveness for any one that wants to earn some money and did not (before this) know how? Write for terms and territory. As our paper goes the world over we will add the name and address of the New Zealand agent, viz., D. C. Cameron, agent for South Island, Choral Hall, Moray Place, Dunedin, N. Z.

We would be grateful to our subscriber friends in foreign countries if they would interest themselves somewhat in obtaining agents for us. The book sells readily around the whole earth and wherever it goes there goes a strong protest against liquor selling whether legalized or not. Its very presence on a library table is a speaking protest.

LAWRENCE, KAN.

Please accept my thanks for package of leaflets, Timely Talks, Loyal Legion Leaflets, Gospel Lights, Bible Readings, etc. I have taken time from these busy days to look them over carefully, and most of them I have laid aside to read on Sunday, for I have found by experience that there is not one of them that is not rich in jewels of thought for the worker. They are all so helpful to me that I am always glad to get them, and, after careful reading, to pass them on, and I recommend them to all who wish to grow. S. F. GRUBB.

Worth Noting.

A number have written in effect, that they find it an excellent plan for children to read aloud from THE UNION SIGNAL to their mother while she is at work—it is good for both mother and child. By the way, we have a plan whereby you can put your children in the way of making from ten cents to a dollar or more each week. Don't you want to try it? The result will be increased circulation of THE UNION SIGNAL if you do, and it won't cost you anything but the postal asking for the information. All you need to say is, "Children earn money, how?" and sign your name with address. It can be worked right along with star worker's plans to good advantage.

I like the new W. C. T. U. pin. It is both convenient and pretty, and I think will be especially appreciated by our sisters who "do their own work," and who find it difficult to always have on a clean white ribbon. MRS. IDA BURR.

BOSTON, MASS.

I am very much pleased with the new celluloid pin, and consider it as decidedly the prettiest thing yet, aside from the white ribbon, and for many purposes much more practical. I send with this an order for five of these pins, which goes to prove that others are of the same mind.

M. E. CHENEY.

RED WING, MINN.

The new celluloid pin looks so much like ribbon, and will be so easily kept clean, I think our many busy and hard working W. C. T. U. workers will all enjoy wearing it. MRS. E. S. WRIGHT.

FARGO, DAK.

The new W. C. T. U. pin is a gem. So much prettier than a soiled white ribbon.

H. M. BARKER.

Something New!

On the editorial page of this issue will be found notice of a forthcoming Manual entitled "Illustrated Bible Temperance Lessons," prepared by Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, and to be published in our Superintendents' Series. This number, to be ready March 15, is for the first quarter of 1890. Cost, five cents.

Nor is this all. With each Manual we will issue a series of Chalk Talk Outlines.

Large outline pictures, in faint color, which can be hung up before the scholars and rapidly sketched out in crayon or charcoal by any one, without any previous knowledge of drawing. These pictures will be sent for fifty cents for the set of four. Instructions to the teacher giving ideas for the talk about each picture will also be furnished, together with the charcoal crayons needed. Miss Kimball's long and successful service in Sunday-school temperance work is a sufficient guarantee of the worth of these new ventures in the line of teaching temperance to the young. The Manuals and Outline drawings can be used in Sabbath-schools as well as in Loyal Temperance Legions. Indeed, the widest scope will thus come. Send for your supplies at once, and thus have the temperance Sunday become a standing feature of delight to the children in the Sabbath schools. We repeat prices:

Manuals alone, each	$ .05
" per 100	4.00
Large outline pictures with charcoal crayons, per set	.50

results from cleanliness and SAPOLIO:
It is a solid cake of scouring soap.
Try it in your next house-cleaning and be happy.

Looking out over the many homes of this country, we see thousands of women wearing away their lives in household drudgery that might be materially lessened by the use of a few cakes of SAPOLIO. If an hour is saved each time a cake is used, if one less wrinkle gathers upon the face because the toil is lightened, she must be a foolish woman who would hesitate to make the experiment, and he a churlish husband who would grudge the few cents which it costs.

THE following paragraph on "The Journalist's Function," from the Universal Review, is so noble and inspiring that it is gladly given space here in the hope that it may meet thousands of eyes and thrill thousands of hearts to higher impulses and action: "An old friend of my father's was wont to say, as he unfolded his newspaper, after reading his Bible: 'Now let us see how my Father is governing this world of His.' That is what newspapers ought to tell, and that is what, in more or less fragmentary fashion, they do tell—the best imperfectly, but even the worst contain some tracings, however blurred and faint, of the chronicles of the inspired present. For they mirror life, and all life is from God, and returns to Him, often by a very devious road, but it is in progress as in essence divine. We are all traveling the infinite ascending road that leads to God. Sometimes the road seems to lead downward, when God seems diabolic and all things seem to work together for evil. This is what is called the age of pessimism. Sometimes the road seems neither to lead up nor down; everything is as it was and ever will be, and man stands with his appetites, not knowing whence he came or whither he is going, whether he came from any place or is going any whither. This is the age of materialism. But sometimes men stand at such a point as to catch a glimpse above them of the great whirling sweep of the ascending spiral clearly outlined against infinity, and to see beneath that all the labors and blunders and tears and groans—all the sins and sorrows and joys of the past—have contributed to further the progress of the race in its eternal pilgrimage toward the ideal. And when man stands at that point it is called the age of faith. The evidence of things not seen, the confidence of things hoped for, by which we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, then reveals to us that the World-Framer is still the World-Ruler, and that the divine plan is being slowly evolved by Him who is the Lord Governor among the nations. Hence the journalist should be the seer of his day, discerning the signs of the times and interpreting the ways of God to man."

A SEEDLING ROSE Raised by George Washington over a hundred years ago, and named after his mother. It can yet be seen growing at his old home, Mt. Vernon, and the Mt. Vernon Guide-book tells all about it. It is now first offered to the public, and, aside from the fact that it was raised and named by our first President, it is the most valuable rose in cultivation to-day, and the only HARDY PERPETUAL BLOOMING CLIMBER. It is a rapid grower, and commences to bloom early in Spring and continues in the greatest profusion until frost. The flowers are pure snow-white, perfectly double to the center, and of unsurpassed fragrance, being tinged with the musky fragrance so much admired in olden times. Its buds are as beautiful as the finest tea roses, long and pointed, on long stems, and often in large clusters. One plant will produce more bloom than a score of tea roses, and they can be cut in abundance every day during Summer and Fall. It is perfectly hardy, and will, in a short time, form a complete arch over a door, window, gate or arbor, and always full of bloom. It is unlike any other rose, and the greatest novelty of the age. Strong plants by mail, post-paid, guaranteed to arrive in good order, 50 cents each; 5 for $2. "MEMORIALS AND PROTESTS."

In October, 1884, the N. W. C. T. U. Convention at St. Louis, adopted the following resolution (after it had been exhaustively discussed) by a vote of one hundred and eighty-eight to forty-eight:

"We refer to the history of ten years of persistent moral suasion work as fully establishing our claim to be called a non-political society, but one which steadily follows the white banner of prohibition wherever it may be displayed. We have, however, as individuals, always allied ourselves in local and state political contests with those voters whose efforts and ballots have been given to the removal of the dram-shop, and its attendant evils, and at this time, while recognizing that our action as a National society is not binding upon states or individuals, we re-affirm the position taken by the society at Louisville in 1882, and at Detroit in 1883, pledging our influence to 'that party, by whatever name called, which shall furnish us the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.' And as we now know which national party gives us the desired embodiment of the principles for which our ten years' labors have been expended, we will continue to lend our influence to the political organization which declares in its platform for national prohibition and home protection. In this, as in all our progressive efforts we will endeavor to meet argument with argument, misjudgment with patience, denunciation with kindness, and all our difficulties and dangers with prayer."

After the passage of this resolution Mrs. Foster resigned as superintendent of the department of legislation, and on page 58, "Truth in the Case," Mrs. Foster says: "The first official act of protest on the part of the minority was the resignation of Mrs. Foster from official relation to the National Union. She had been for years the superintendent of the department of legislation, and received full measure of respect and confidence. When the party policy was adopted, she could not conscientiously conduct the legislative work of the National society along that line, and she felt it would be dishonorable to retain official relation to a policy which she could not approve."

The departments of work in the National W. C. T. U. are carried on without regard to parties, and the department of legislation is no exception in this respect, as it works along no political line, but is thoroughly non-partisan. Our present National superintendent, Mrs. Bittenbender, says: "In every case, and in every way, my work for the W. C. T. U., state and National, has been strictly non-partisan. As superintendent, the special lines of my work with Congress have been for submission of the Prohibitory Amendment and repeal of internal revenue taxes on alcoholic beverages. Have worked for prohibition in the District of Columbia and territories at hands of Congress. As legal adviser of the social purity department my efforts secured the passage of the bill raising the 'age of consent' to sixteen years in last Congress. I drafted and had introduced various other bills, notably two to confer suffrage on women through United States statute law. Have drafted bills for woman suffrage, prohibition, social purity, etc., to be introduced in various state legislatures, in response to requests of state superintendents of departments, and have advised as to best means of enforcing existing laws, law enforcement being specially urged. My new Manual is non-partisan, and is so stated in circular letter sent with it to local unions." To the candid, unbiased mind, there will seem no reason why Mrs. Foster could not continue her work as superintendent of the department of legislation in the National W. C. T. U.

In October, 1885, the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Philadelphia adopted the same resolution, after nearly as prolonged a discussion, by a vote of two hundred and forty-five to thirty. At this time Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, with twenty-five others, presented the now famous protest "against the action of this convention in committing this Christian organization to the aid and support of a political party."

The protest made the following charges:

1. "This action is wrong in principle."

2. "It is a specific abandonment of that spirit of toleration, and of Christian courtesy which has permitted harmony of action, with a wide diversity of opinion."

3. "It is a contravention of this equality of rights, while professing to leave individuals and states free, it uses the collective influence of the Union in the upbuilding and advancement of a political party."

4. "It circumscribes the grand moral power of this great body of Christian women."

5. "It transforms the broad political work of our organization, hinders the speedy accomplishment of our purpose."

6. "It makes the official organ of our Union a partisan political sheet."

7. "It is unjust."

8. "It has brought confusion of thought concerning Prohibition as a principle, and party prohibition as a policy."

The "Truth in the Case" is that the policy which governs the National W. C. T. U. is fully set forth in the by-laws, Article VIII, Sec. 1. "No state union shall be bound by any principle espoused, or plan devised by the National W. C. T. U., except that all states auxiliary must subscribe to the total abstinence pledge and to the constitution of the National union." This policy has prevailed not only in the National but in state unions, and local unions are governed by it also.

The policy governs in the adoption of departments of work established by the National and state unions. No state is obliged to take up any department of work inaugurated by the National W. C. T. U., and in the same way local unions are not required to adopt departments of work unless they deem it best to do so. The National W. C. T. U. has never taken any action by which aid or support could be furnished to any political party. True, the National W. C. T. U. in convention assembled has not hesitated to express its sympathy with and approval of the Prohibition party, as it is the only party which holds the same principles and has the same aim and purpose of the union: Total prohibition of the liquor traffic—the uplifting of humanity and the protection of the home.

We lend our influence to that party—it is only a loan, and can be withdrawn should it prove unworthy of our trust, and this same influence is used in behalf of any party holding the same principles with the same purposes and object of accomplishment in view. The National W. C. T. U. has not adopted the Third party, has not been received into it, has made no treaty nor compact with it, has not entered into any combination with it, and the action taken—which was simply one of approval and not a new "test of allegiance," has not disturbed nor compromised the total abstinence pledge.

At Minneapolis, 1886, the resolution was,

Resolved, That each year finds our convictions strengthened, that to secure the enforcement of laws prohibiting the liquor traffic, we need a party pledged to that end, that the enforcement stand back of the law, and as there is a party which is committed to such principles, we again pledge our prayers and influence to the support of the Prohibition party.

This was opposed, and nearly two days of the convention was consumed in discussion, and when the vote was taken it stood two hundred and forty-four in favor of the resolution, with thirty-nine against, showing an increasing majority every year.

Personal statement of Mrs. Lathrap concerning the Minneapolis protest:

"On pages 22 and 23 of 'Truth in the Case,' Mrs. Foster makes certain statements about the protest filed at the Minneapolis Convention, and charges Miss Willard and myself with doing her injustice in face of facts well known to us. This impels me to a personal explanation concerning my part in asking that the protest of that year be withheld.

"Mrs. Foster says: 'The executive committee through Mrs. Lathrap made a most urgent request, 'that she should not present the memorial.'

"This is not true. The executive committee had nothing whatever to do with the request which I made until it was brought before them. The questions involved in the 'Iowa position' were never more aggressively pressed than at Minneapolis. Some of the 'political vultures' which our non-partisan friends say 'are never to hover over their conventions,' were there, and what could have been settled by the majority in five minutes on a test vote, was sprung by skillful manipulation upon almost every session.

"I was grieved at the hindrance to legitimate business, and the wrong impression constantly being made, and decided to 'file' a plea for peace. I went to the committee, saying in my heart, Mrs. Foster has defined her position again and again; silence here will not misrepresent her, and she will surely listen if we ask her to bring no protest to the convention. All present will remember the spirit of that request. I moved that this executive committee ask Mrs. Foster to withhold entirely the paper she had given notice she intended to bring.

"I was urgent, but back of all was a faith in Mrs. Foster's regard for her comrades in a great work, and a desire to save the W. C. T. U. from further misrepresentation. When the question I raised was about to be voted upon, Mrs. Foster arose and said: 'I shall file the protest, ladies, no matter how you vote,' and the motion was then withdrawn. Mrs. Foster gave no assurance to the committee that she would refrain from reading the protest, but when she brought it before the convention she did not read it, but asked to have it spread on the minutes, which was done.

"Nothing in the sad controversy hurt me more than this incident at the time, for it revealed the fact that she who had so long been one with us was now against us. The executive committee were in no way responsible for the request made, and most of the members did not have the feeling which prompted my action."

At the National Convention at Nashville, in 1887, the resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That we rejoice in the great successes which have been gained by the Prohibition party during the past year, and we again pledge it our hearty co-operation, assuring it of our prayers and sympathy.

Resolved, That we ask the Prohibition party at its coming National Convention to re-affirm its former position in regard to woman's ballot.

This was passed almost unanimously, and again was followed by a protest, read by Mrs. Aldrich, of Iowa, signed by sixteen delegates, two of whom requested to have their names stricken off the report before it was published in THE UNION SIGNAL. These fourteen delegates remaining were from Iowa and Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Foster says, page 58, "The convention denied debate on this protest." Mrs. Hoffman moved that it be received without debate, and spread upon the minutes, which motion received a second and was carried. There was good reason why Mrs. Hoffman should make such a motion, that it should be seconded and that it should be carried. For three successive years the National Conventions had given nearly half of the time allotted to business to this matter, and, convinced that nothing was gained by the use of our time in this way, Mrs. Rastall, of Kansas, offered a by-law which was adopted at Minneapolis:

Having for three years thoroughly discussed and established, by a large majority vote, our position in regard to the Prohibition party,

Resolved, That hereafter any resolution referring to our attitude toward political parties be decided by vote without discussion.

On page 60, Mrs. Foster states, "It was fully known to the General Officers, and to many in the convention held in New York, 1888, that the Iowa women would present their protest in the form of a memorial from their state convention to the National Convention, because the Iowa convention had been held some time previous, and its doings were of course published in the Iowa Messenger, the official organ of the society." But she makes no mention of the fact that it was also published in Republican newspapers throughout the land before the National Convention met, which was on Friday, October 19, and that on Wednesday, October 17, an article appeared in the New York Mail and Express predicting certain things as if they were already accomplished facts. From whence and from what quarter was the information received on which these predictions were based? And for what purpose was the information given to those who had nothing in common with the National Society, but on the contrary had for years misrepresented, ridiculed, vilified and abused it? Where was the boasted admiration, love and chivalrous devotion professed so often for this society? Does history record an attempt of baser betrayal of an organization from enemies within to foes without?

On page 63, Mrs. Foster calls attention to "the short, crisp answer to Iowa, and the warm greeting to Illinois," in reply of sub-committee of the executive committee to the memorials presented from these states. The Iowa memorial comes with no declaration of love to, and confidence in the National Society, but bristles with the charges that "facts have been misrepresented, motives impugned, character assailed," while the Illinois memorial is couched in the most courteous language, coupled with unswerving loyalty to the National organization. And yet the reply to Iowa is just as courteous as the one to Illinois. Mark the difference in which the reply is received by Illinois. The sub-committee says it would not be wise at this time to carry out the suggestions of the memorial, and Illinois accepts the decision in the same true Christian spirit that characterized their memorial.

The resolution adopted in the N. W. C. T. U. Convention at New York was as follows:

Resolved, That we re-affirm our allegiance to that party which makes its dominant issue the suppression of the liquor traffic, declares its belief in Almighty God as the source of all power in government, defends the sanctity of the Christian Sabbath, recognizes equal suffrage and equal wages for women, demands the abolition of polygamy and uniform laws governing marriage and divorce, and aims to remove sectional differences, promote national unity, and insure the best welfare of our land.

The vote of the minoity was only thirty-one out of four hundred delegates. There was no violation of principle, nor a "prostitution of its original purpose" in the expression of approval of the Third party, for the foundation of the work of the W. C. T. U. is prohibition of the liquor traffic, and this action was true to the spirit of the organization. By such action the standard of the W. C. T. U. was not lowered or reduced, for by the grace of God in answer to prayer this party had been brought up to the National W. C. T. U. standard.

If women wish to pledge their moral influence to any party, and do it, it is their individual action; they are not coerced or forced to do it; they have freely given their influence, they have not been robbed of it. We cannot rob a person of that which he freely gives.

When a convention has for years given much of its time to the discussion of one subject to the exclusion of other things equally important, it has the right to decide by vote when this discussion should cease. Our National superintendents are the exponents of the principles, the methods and the policy of the National Union, and a sense of personal honor should be sufficient to prevent them from antagonizing it.

Mrs. F. J. Ovington, recording secretary Iowa W. C. T. U., on page 71, says: "The National Executive Committee not only received the memorials thus irregularly sent, but replied to the same without hearing what might be offered by the Iowa delegation in refutation of the charges contained therein." The National Executive Committee would have granted a hearing to Mrs. Foster upon these memorials, but she declined the opportunity, saying she would be heard nowhere but upon the floor of the convention. The Iowa memorial, and seven others were presented to the convention, and referred to the executive committee. They were returned to the convention, read with the answers to them which were prepared by a sub-committee, and distributed on printed slips, and afterwards printed in full in the daily and weekly editions of THE UNION SIGNAL, of which there were 80,000 copies sent out. During the discussion Mrs. Foster spoke fourteen times, and other ladies of the minority spoke very often. The rules which govern the convention, restrict delegates to but one speech on a motion.

Does this seem to indicate unjust parliamentary ruling or suppression of free speech so far as the minority is concerned, or like an abuse of majority power? Before the Iowa memorial, and the answers were read and distributed, copies of the memorial, with a letter from the Iowa union representing her as the defender of the true faith against the heresies of the National Union, and asking all to record themselves for or against the partisan action of the National, were distributed to delegates and visitors.

On page 72, Mrs. Ovington states, "The executive committee of the Iowa union voted to send 'The Reason Why' to all local unions, and did send it. The oft-repeated statement that this leaflet was suppressed at the fountain head is thus refuted by unimpeachable evidence." Yet there is the testimony of the presidents of the first, fourth, and eighth districts that the circulation of "The Reason Why" is forbidden in Iowa. Where is the "unimpeachable evidence" that it was circulated, and was not forbidden?

Mrs. Ovington also states that the executive committee would give its sanction to the appointment of a W. T. P. A. agent in each local union, if the business manager would agree to omit from the literature thus sent, such partisan literature as the corresponding secretary believed would be contrary to the spirit and scope of the Iowa work. This literature that the executive committee would, through the corresponding secretary, prevent being circulated in Iowa was not "Third party" in any particular. It was good, pure W. C. T. U. doctrine, which had been promulgated from the days of the Crusade, viz.: opposition to all regulation, restriction, tax or license, be it high or low, accepting nothing short of the utter prohibition and complete annihilation of the liquor traffic. If such literature were contrary to the spirit and scope of the Iowa work, pray tell us what is the aim, what is the purpose to be accomplished by that state union? Has Iowa ultimate design to pull down and destroy the liquor traffic, or is it merely drifting with wind and tide?

On page 74 we find the by-law of the Iowa W. C. T U., adopted in 1888. "Districts having over 500 members may at their district conventions nominate persons and present their names at the state convention as nominees for delegate and alternate to the National W. C. T. U. convention, these nominations always being subject to the vote of the state convention without debarring the district delegation or any delegate in the convention from presenting other nominations."

From this it is seen that even if a delegate had been nominated by her own district, a delegate from another district could place in nomination another in opposition to the one chosen by her constituents to represent them in National Convention. The corresponding secretary of the Iowa union declared at Nashville, in 1887, that no Third party woman should ever again go to the National Convention as a delegate from Iowa. On page 74, Mrs. Ovington writes, 'In the election of delegates to the last National Convention (New York) the non-partisan women for the first time refused to permit their personal regard for partisan women to determine their ballot; they declared in their re-election of delegates their conviction that women who will not represent those electing them, and be true to the constitution and by-laws of their own state union, are not the proper ones to represent that state union in the National Convention." Result of this declaration was the election of thirteen delegates from Iowa, all Republicans, and no representation from the minority.

Under the head of "The distresses of party alliance," Mrs. Foster says:

"Annual Leaflet, 1889. This little leaflet purports to set forth the work of the N. W. C. T. U., and it does so, clearly and in full outline, except that no reference is made to the political work of the society." "Why do the General Officers in this official leaflet omit all reference to this among other lines of work?"

Mrs. Foster knows that the National Union does no political work, and she cannot point to a single department of the party lines of work and call it a political line. The National W. C. T. U., by its state and local auxiliaries, is working through educational lines, and can do no other way for the prohibition of the liquor traffic until the power is conferred upon woman, making her before the law equal with men. Mrs. Foster's imputation upon the Christian courtesy of W. C. T. U. women who would engage a church for a public meeting, and then personally denounce the minister and his people, is unworthy of a true woman, and in making such a charge Mrs. Foster should give proof of such an occurrence.

The question is asked, "Are the Crusade women generally in harmony with the National Union?" Women who were most active as Crusaders, who at that time received the baptism of the Holy Spirit, have held steadily on their way, adhering to the first principle, as it was revealed to them at that time—undying opposition to the saloon and the overthrow of the liquor traffic, and, true to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, have been unswerving in their loyalty to it and its methods of work, and to all declarations of principle which it has made. These Crusaders believe that the action of approval of the Third Party by the National W. C. T. U., has not crippled the work, and notwithstanding the memorials and protests against the action which have been brought to convention year after year, statistics will show the increased growth of the National Society, whereby its cords have been lengthened and its stakes strengthened. The attempt to cripple the work began in the days of the Crusade. Even then, men feared the closing of the saloons might hurt their business. Men who were cherishing hopes of political preferment saw visions of defeat rising before them, did their mothers, wives, sisters and friends continue to wage war against the liquor traffic, and women withdrew from the work. After the organization of the Ohio W. C. T. U. in the summer of 1874, bitter and determined opposition sprang up from unexpected sources.

Ministers thought there was nothing to be gained by organized effort, and did not approve of the methods adopted, nor that women should be heard from the platform; and long before the adoption of the St. Louis resolution many of them had declined to read notices from their pulpits of W. C. T. U. meetings. During that notable campaign in Ohio of the "second amendment" in which Mrs. Foster took a prominent part, bitterest opposition to the Ohio W. C. T. U. came from all classes and professions. Politicians said, "The union is imperiling the life of the Republican party, for taxation is the rock on which this party rests." Talk of "Crusade basis of moral suasion work!"

What did the Crusade mean? It was the last offer of love and mercy to the liquor dealer, and the close of the "moral suasion" part of the temperance reform. Henceforth the battle cry of the temperance hosts will be "Law." By the terrors of the law, shall the liquor traffic feel the righteous indignation of the people, and the wrath of an offended God.

We publish the one below in full as the best, in our judgment, received. It was sent by Mrs. S.F. Harriman, W. Mansfield, O., and is worth the careful attention of all who ever ask or mean to ask other people to subscribe to THE UNION SIGNAL. We have already used a number of the other answers sent in, and in such cases give the paper free a year. We thank our readers for their quick and cordial response to this little test of their cordiality for the paper. Every answer sent has been read with care. Mrs. Harriman writes as follows:

1. (D. W. I.) Don't Want It.

1. "Because not familiar with the paper." Let us examine it. It is the organ of the World's, also of our National W. C. T. U. Its literary merits are unsurpassed; and no other paper has greater variety for the size. It takes the place of several papers with me. It is a preëminently religious paper, compares favorably with any of our religious weeklies. It is a paper for the home-keeper and the children, as well as for our field-workers, the clergy, the statesman, and all reformers and philanthropists. In fact, we have in it a journal on temperance reform in all its phases and relations, political economy, religion, ethics, hygiene, narcotics, education, etc., and a very satisfactory presentation of all leading reforms, besides current items and valuable advertising matter.

2. "Have never read the paper, but know all I care to from hearsay." In the interest of truth, and from a spirit of love and forbearance for those who differ from us on the great questions of the day, we ought to read both sides of the question, and be able without prejudice to judge for ourselves what is true or false. We do not judge of Democracy by what the Republican papers say, neither do we judge Republicanism by what Democratic papers say; nor can we judge prohibition by papers antagonistic to it.

3. "I liked it before it became a partisan paper." You do not reject THE UNION SIGNAL so much because you think it is a partisan paper, but because it indorses principles antagonistic to your partisan bias. If it indorsed your partisan views, you would have no quarrel with it. But let us see if you are right in thinking it partisan: The annihilation of the liquor traffic is the principle upon which the W. C. T. U. was founded, and the bed-rock on which it rests, and THE UNION SIGNAL, as its official organ, says, on every page, "The saloon must go." It keeps steadily before its readers the fact that it is not party but this principle it adheres to, and that it has indorsed all parties wherever found declaring for this principle. If this were not true, it would not have shaken hands with the Republican party in Dakota, or the Democratic party in the South, when they each declared for this principle. If the W. C. T. U. gives its support to one party more than another, it is because other parties compel it to do so by repudiating this principle of prohibition.

4. "Do not care to read about women who neglect home and go about talking of women's emancipation and kindred topics." Our army is so large that we have our home-keepers as well as field-workers. Much misapprehension of who the field-workers are, comes from a lack of information. Some will not be informed on account of prejudice created by pre-conceived notions of woman's sphere, aided by a sneering, perverting secular press. The field-workers are almost wholly composed of middle-aged women, who have raised their families, widows and unmarried women, and all their efforts focalize in the home. If every woman in the land were emancipated from self, from false social customs, and unnecessary worries, that she might consider the blasphemy and open revolt against God and his Christ in the nation, and the peril of the home from this and the saloon; she would seek by law their overthrow, never thinking of any impropriety in her desiring the power to save her home and country. As to suffrage, are the women of Boston less pure than before casting their clean little ballots into a box? Are they not more noble and true to "God and Home and Native Land," than if they had, through false modesty, refused to save the schools for their children? Do not the liquor organs acknowledge woman's suffrage as inevitable, and count it a dread factor in the overthrow of the traffic? As to time or taste for politics, you may have time when deprived of home and bereft of family, and an avenging taste when too late to save home or loved ones. It may seem to some that too much prominence is given by THE UNION SIGNAL to woman's suffrage and other reforms, but while it bids Godspeed to every reform and all reformers, with its shoulder to the wheel of every reform, it says temperance reform first, that these others may come in to bless humanity; but if any seem to be necessary to the overthrow of rum, as woman suffrage is thought by many to be, it considers it in the direct line of temperance reform.

5. "It is not the kind of woman's paper I want." In these closing years of the nineteenth century, fashions, needle-work, and bric-a-brac have a secondary place, or no place at all with many of the women of our country. They have gone out "to raise the fallen," "cheer the faint," and are building a wall of defense around the childhood of the nation against rum and vice. Try the paper. I think you will soon prefer to read about their work to much you once thought profitable.

6. "It says so much about duty." Yes, it has probing and convicting power; but in rejecting a call to duty, some have missed the only golden opportunity of a life-time.

7. "Too much religion in secular affairs." Look at the nations that have forgotten God and built governments to rest on men's shoulders; Christ said: "Without me ye can do nothing." This paper advocates enthroning Him in every heart, in every home, in every impulse that moves the nations, until all governments shall rest upon His shoulders, and Christ is Lord of all.

2. (C. A. I.) Can't Afford It.

1. Consider, rather, whether you can afford not to take it. The knowledge of what your sisters are doing through this world-wide organization, second only in influence to the Christian Church, for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and the purifying and uplifting of humanity, should be of great vital importance to every woman in the land.

2. Do you realize, my sister, that the temperance question is the greatest ethico-political question of the age, and that we as a nation have entered upon a conflict that promises to be the greatest struggle we have ever known as a people? Rum is intrenched in political parties, monopolies and syndicates, with millions of dollars behind them, controlling a large part of the secular press which is paid, Judas like, to kiss the people and then betray them and their country into the hands of this demon. The fight is upon us, none can evade it; the ears of the people are stopped by falsehood, so that to many wrong seems right. None who love the truth and desire justice done irrespective of party or organization, as you do, my sister, can afford to be without this paper. As I look at this matter we are responsible for the continuance of this traffic to the measure of our ability to be informed, and to lift up our protest against it.

3. But can you afford to leave THE UNION SIGNAL out, if you do take other temperance papers? You cannot obtain an adequate knowledge of the temperance reform without knowing what the W. C. T. U. is doing; for it is in the van with forty-two departments of work, and a working force of adults in this country of over two hundred thousand strong, and over one hundred and three thousand voters growing up in the Loyal Temperance Legions. And, our temperance papers are local with but few exceptions, while THE UNION SIGNAL is national and international. It is the only paper through which we can become fully acquainted with the W. C. T. U.

4. Is there not something you could do without in the home, or of wearing apparel, or could you not get up a club, so you can save or make the price of the paper? I do not see how any one can be even an efficient local worker without THE UNION SIGNAL, even if they do take the state W. C. T. U. organ; as the state work affects the National, and the National the state.

5. But perhaps you can drop some of the papers you are taking now, and that will give you the price of THE UNION SIGNAL. It is worth several local papers. Look over your list and see if you could not change off for a year and give this a trial.

6. Can you afford to be without its influence upon your daily life, its influence to lead you into a higher, holier, Christian life, that will be a benediction upon your household, especially upon the lives of the little ones God has given you; its encouragement, noble incentive to aggressive action and the knowledge of the bond of sympathy among women, and of what they have done, and can do by united effort?

7. If it should reveal to you yourself with possibilities greater than any earthly riches, would it not be a cheap investment?

8. From a purely moneyed standpoint you may find profit in it. Its "Lend a Hand," or other advertising matter may lead you or your daughter into a lucrative, as well as congenial employment. In an article by Mrs. Harris I learned where I could get Gluten or Entire Wheat Flour for five dollars a barrel; I had been paying over six dollars a barrel. This more than pays for the paper for a year. I need a thimble. I see under publisher's notes how I can get a gold one by a little effort, and so on through many items.

3. (T. M. O. P. N.) Too Many Other Papers Now.

1. Yes, but do you take a temperance paper? No home should be without one, and THE UNION SIGNAL should be on every woman's list; as the press of the country, with comparatively few exceptions, is either indifferent or antagonistic to temperance reform, and as the W. C. T. U. is the target of the rum powers venom, through a partisan press, it is absolutely necessary for those who want a correct understanding of the work, methods, and aims of the W. C. T. U. that they take THE UNION SIGNAL.

2. But do you take a woman's paper? Every woman should take one, and if not interested become interested in the work being done by women. Candid minds admit the necessity of THE UNION SIGNAL for this aside from temperance reforms; as the secular press almost wholly ignores woman, or speaks of her efforts in reform either slightingly, or with derision.

3. Are you not sickened by the sensational and sentimental in the papers of the day? You will find this a common-sense paper dealing in facts and teaching plain doctrine on every-day matters that concern us most; and we are only shocked with the mention of so much of crime and outrage as will serve to drive home the necessity of reform, for self-preservation and safety to country.

4. You think you must have papers on different subjects; this is to be commended, but when you can get several papers in one, why not take that one?

4. (N. T. T. R. I.) No Time To Read It.

1. Take time; read this first and crowd out the unimportant matter.

2. Save time by reading THE UNION SIGNAL, as in it you do not need to waste valuable time gleaning important from unimportant matter, nor wholesome reading from what we turn from with disgust in many of our secular papers.

3. If you think you are too busy or tired to read it, I urge you to try it; it is the busy, tired woman's paper. It has inspiration and incitement to action for the busy woman, and the lesson for her that the busy women are the ones that are in the van of every reform. It has rest, encouragement and comfort for you when tired.

4. To one needing an arrest of thought on this subject, THE UNION SIGNAL is just what you need. Many noble, generous, gifted women have not enlisted in the army that this paper represents, because they have not yet heard the call to aggressive action. Here is your call; you may be doing good work in the missionary society, or several societies that will only help you to work in this. Try the paper. I know you will not be found again without it.

5. To one not altogether frivolous, but whose education and environments are such that social duties, pleasures and fashions absorb most of their time and attention, try THE UNION SIGNAL for a year; you may not like it at first, but if you read it before lighter matter, I know you will learn to like it. Its department of dress reform will interest you; and I have found that no other paper of its size helps me so much in society. I get so much reliable information on the leading questions of the day aside from the great question of temperance reform.

The W. C. T. U. pin is elegant. I have seen no substitute for the white ribbon so desirable. I think it would be a good thing to put them also on a "jab pin," like the white rose. For outside wear they would be excellent. MARY T. LATHRAP.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

A state conference of Iowa Republicans who favor a modification of the liquor laws will be held at Des Moines, April 2.

Michigan University is in receipt of a scholarship fund of $25,000, the gift of Mrs. Clara Stranahan, of Brooklyn, wife of the New York ex-congressman.

The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee have decided upon a reduction of fifty per cent in the duty on sugar, which will result in a revenue reduction of from $25,000,000 to $28,000,000.

Another beautiful charity has been inaugurated in Chicago, a hospital for children. Its projector and superintendent is Dr. Prince, so well known for his work in connection with the Foundlings' Home. His new undertaking grows out of the old, and will supplement both the work of the day nurseries and of the other hospitals. It is located at 641 Carroll avenue, and will receive children between the ages of two years and fourteen, suffering from non-contagious diseases, requiring either medical or surgical treatment. Dr. Prince's beneficent plan includes not only the hospital but a country home for convalescents.

Under the new system of English city government, Lady Sandhurst, Miss Jane Cobden and Miss Cons, one year ago were chosen members of the London council. Lady Sandhurst's election was contested and all the courts decided that a woman was ineligible to hold office, although endowed with the municipal suffrage in 1869. No one contested the election of Miss Cobden and Miss Cons. Having waited a year under legal advice, they recently went to the council chamber, signed the roll and took their seats. They were cordially received and the question of their eligibility was not raised, but it is said that a minority of the council propose to carry the matter into the courts.

SENATOR BLAIR is one of the wisest statesmen in Congress; the white-ribbon army, the home-folk, the wage-workers, the militant Christians, are proud of his leadership. Though a recreant Senate voted down his Educational Bill by six majority, his plan of national aid against illiteracy is sure to win. More than any other senator of this generation he represents the hopes of the classes that need a champion. He has dared to take up the gauntlet for them; dared to devote himself to their interests, and we humbly trust they may not only dare but have the power to do, that he may yet be President of the United States. Two pillars must be set up between which the processions of the future shall march into America's temple of prosperity and peace. They are National Education and National Prohibition. When put in place these pillars of our moral Hercules will bear the name of Henry W. Blair.

THE House committee has reported favorably upon the bill providing for the appointment of a commission upon the alcoholic liquor traffic. These commissioners, five in number, are to be appointed by the President, and selected solely with reference to their personal fitness for making such investigation. They will be expected to investigate and report upon the traffic in vinous, fermented and distilled liquors in all its phases, its relation to revenue and taxation, its influence upon labor, agriculture, manufacturing and commercial interests; also its criminal, moral, and scientific bearing upon pauperism, crime, social vice, public health, and the general welfare of the people. It will also give its opinion of the practical results of the various forms of legal restraints under which it is carried on in the several states and territories. The great task is to be accomplished within two years. If thoroughly and honestly made the report of this committee will be the most valuable temperance document ever prepared.

THE Supreme Court of Wisconsin, by its ruling in the "Edgerton Bible Case," decides that reading the Scriptures in the public schools without comment is a violation of the constitution of the state which forbids sectarian teaching. Justice Lyon, who gave the formal opinion, based it upon the remarkable statement that the Bible itself is sectarian! This view is supported by the statement, "that the Bible contains numerous doctrinal passages, upon some of which the peculiar creed of almost every religious sect is based, and that such passages may reasonably be understood to inculcate the doctrines predicated upon them." Certain portions of Scripture having historical or literary value, will be allowed, and others "may be utilized to inculcate good morals—that is, our duties to each other—which may and ought to be inculcated in the public schools." This leaves the way open for other decisions as to what portions of Scripture do or do not "inculcate good morals." The Supreme Court of Wisconsin may shortly find itself in a labyrinth.

THE American Institute of Sacred Literature, of which Professor Harper, of Yale, is the moving spirit, has inaugurated a grand work tending to definiteness in the study of the Scriptures. It is an examination to be held in all parts of the world, Tuesday, December 30, 1890, on the historical facts relating to the life of Christ, and the literary facts connected with the gospel of Luke. It will include four grades; first, for ministers and theological students; second, for members of adult Bible classes; third, for Bible classes whose members range from fifteen to twenty years of age; fourth, for those from ten to fifteen years of age. The same sets of questions will be used in the examinations all round the world, translations being made for non-English speaking people. The papers will all be sent to Professor Harper, who, with a large corps of assistants, will examine them and grade on a scale of ten. First, second and third grade certificates will be issued, according to standing. To defray expenses examination fees will be charged as follows: for individual examinations, $2 each; for groups of from two to five, $1; for groups from six to ten, seventy-five cents; for groups from eleven to fifty, sixty cents; for groups of fifty or more, fifty cents each. We hope that at least fifty thousand W. C. T. U. women will take this examination.

THE Isabella Association having its headquarters in Chicago, with Dr. Frances Dickinson as secretary, is devising great things for the World's Fair. It is already gaining liberal support from progressive American women, and is reaching out into other lands, for the coöperation of sister workers and thinkers throughout the world. The statue fund is fixed at $25,000. Harriet Hosmer will reproduce in marble the form and face of Columbus' royal patroness. One-fifth of the statue fund will be appropriated for building a club house, called the Isabella Pavilion. The one dollar membership fees and the proceeds of Eliza Allen Starr's biography of the Spanish Queen will be used for the same purpose. It is hoped from these sources enough will accrue to erect a handsome structure where the women visitors of the Fair will meet socially. Arrangements are being made for a series of international congresses of women, representing the various professions and arts. One of the broadest, most significant, and probably most valuable of these will be the congress of medical women of all schools, in which "pathy" will give place to science. Some great social questions can best be studied from the point of observation where medical and moral science meet. Their solution largely rests with those who are at the same time physicians and philanthropists. We hail a world-wide congress of medical women as an auspicious event for womanhood and childhood, and so for the race, since the childhood of to-day determines the destiny of to-morrow's manhood. The amendment of the World's Fair Bill to admit women to the board of commissioners was due to a strong petition signed by leading women in Washington and throughout the country. Their money, talent and enthusiasm can hardly fail to secure recognition upon the executive committee to which the details of management will be intrusted. At least one member of that body will be a woman.

IN this age men are kings, if kings at all, by divine right inherent in themselves, not by descent. When the venerable Kaiser, in the ripeness of ninety royal years, laid by his earthly crown, the world dropped a tear. When untimely disease snatched the Emperor from his throne in the prime of his life the world sighed its regret. But when Bismarck, who needs no title to express his rank, and no scepter to enforce his power, takes his iron grip off the helm of Germany, the Continent rocks, and the world feels the shock. The loss of two Hohenzollern Emperors, within a year, occasioned sympathy everywhere. The resignation of the Chancellor produces consternation in political and financial circles throughout Europe. While he stood sponsor for the peace of the Continent there was confidence. He knew how to mass and wield the forces of his time, and make all bear upon the point to be gained. When Bismarck began his service, a group of twenty-two small principalities existed by grace of the powers surrounding them. In 1866, United Germany asked no protection from without. In 1870, answering Louis Napoleon's declaration of war, in a brief campaign, she wrested from imperious France two more provinces, and since then has been the very hub of Europe. By a brilliant scheme of diplomacy, a triple alliance was effected with Italy and Austria, to which England gave tacit consent. This kept Russia on the one hand and France on the other each in her proper place. The largest and most perfectly disciplined army in the world stood under this great political structure. But the age of iron in the social world is giving way. We are entering a period in which spiritual forces will dominate. To this period the "man of blood and iron" does not belong; and his apprehension of that fact and consequent resignation at this time, is the crowning act of diplomacy of his whole life. It is impossible to forecast the policy of the new Chancellor, General Von Caprivi, but it is believed that he will make more concessions to socialism than have been made by his predecessor.

IT is a curious thing, the criticism made by intelligent foreigners upon Americans. For instance, a Japanese prince now in this country said lately in conversation: "Do you know I think America has less religion than any other civilized country." When asked what he meant by such an unheard-of announcement, he went on to say: "I have been so fortunate as to visit almost every portion of your wonderful country. I have seen what I consider the most delightful society in the world; have been entertained by public committees, and private individuals; they have shown me magnificent state houses, and libraries, and private residences; they have set before me the richest food and rarest wines; they have introduced me at magnificent balls, entertained me in sumptuous yachts, and whirled me through beautiful valleys in coaches four-in-hand; and yet no one wishing to show me the glories of his city, has ever yet asked me to visit his church. You Americans rejoice in your triumphs of art, literature, society, and commerce, and are glad to exhibit them to foreigners, but really you seem to think that your religion is not worth exhibiting." Several of the Pan-American delegates have made similar comments. The leading men of the nation with whom they are associated are nearly all church members, but in relation to the Deity they worship, it would seem as if their motto is, "We never mention Him." This naturally leads clear-headed foreigners, who know that we give large sums to build up Christianity in their native homes, to think that, as the Japanese said, "We imagine that America gives money for missions without much care as to the possible results. We cannot help thinking, in short, that your religion is mostly a matter of dollars and cents." Surely there is material for sober and sad reflection in this statement, and possibly at no epoch in our national history could this criticism have been made with so much justice. Our fabulous growth in all material resources seems to have put the leadership of the nation into the attitude of the man with the muck rake. How long shall these things be?

DAFFODILS.

BY WARNER SNOAD.

THE wild March wind has kissed them and flung down
Her breath of freshness on their blossom crown.
The dews have drenched them till their moist hearts hold
The woods' own fragrance in each cup of gold,
And life's dark winter into gladness thrills,
Lit by the sunshine of the daffodils.

Drink in their beauty! see the light and shade,
Spring's dimpling fingers on their petals laid.
What artist's brush could catch the wondrous sheen
Of that soft harmony in gold and green,
Or paint the glory that the bright earth fills,
Where footsteps fall on sheets of daffodils.

A SHADOW.

BY A. R. E. S.

The usual quota of voluntary make-weights was distributed over the sugar and coal oil barrels in John Reeves' little country store, interlarding their discussion of crops, past and prospective, with the usual tidbits of scandal, when the entrance of the village doctor, his hoary beard still whiter with the snows of the December night, evidently created an interesting diversion in their meditations, for, at the first glimpse of him, the crowd, as one man, interrogated: "And how is old Barnes, Doc?"

"He won't live the night out; and two of you fellows will have to go over and stay, to change off with Simpson and Davis who have been there all day," replied the old doctor. "I tell you the latter end of an ill-spent life is a melancholy thing—a melancholy thing," continued he, and then as if proceeding from cause to effect, even though the process be verging on a leap from the sublime to the ridiculous, he went on: "Davis and I tried to induce him to consent to be undressed and have the clean clothes put on that Mrs. Ames sent over, but he wouldn't have it, and as the old fellow's idea of making his toilet seems to consist in putting any change of garment on over everything else that he has previously been wearing, I don't know as it would benefit him much, for to my certain knowledge he has on three flannel shirts, each one of which is evidently an afterthought of some six weeks' difference in time from the one next inside it—so he isn't suffering from cold, and that is apparently the main thing with him."

This descent of the doctor from views of a situation at an elevated height to actual, everyday details, apparently caused no surprise among his auditors, for had not they, as members of the Hillview Band, on the occasion of a torchlight procession and serenade tendered the doctor at his residence, following a political celebration whereat this worthy disciple of Esculapius had figured as orator (he being the local speech-maker, local poet, and magnate of the village generally), had not they, after the customary expressions of appreciation on the part of their professional host, been requested by him to refrain from traveling on certain streets in the continuation of their jubilee, lest they disturb the nerves of sundry old lady patients of his, residing and suffering on said streets?

The doctor's real worth of character was too well recogn zed for his eccentricities of speech or action to cause anything but an amused smile, and his flippancies of expression regarding the habiliments of the poor old waif, were ill borne out by the tender look in his gray eyes, which any of the straits of poor humanity always evoked, and, indeed, pity was needed for this wreck of a man who now lay dying in a loose board shanty on the edge of the lonely winter woods, in the solitude but not the sanctity of the anchorite, and unattended by anything nearer or dearer than that universal spirit of benevolence which dwelt in the hearts of his bar-room associates as in his brethren of a higher outlook.

These convivial friends of old Barnes were not lacking in the doctor's audience, and the offers of service were immediate and numerous, till the doctor decided the matter by saying, "You and Crawford had better go over, Baxter," and while these two worthies arose and commenced buttoning their great coats around them preparatory to facing the whirling snow-storm, the doctor continued dryly, "not but what anyone with a common-school education could do all there is to do over there—keep up the fire and give him the morphine that's dosed out and lies on top of the cider barrel nearest his bunk."

"Wal, Doc, I reckon I've played as many games of seven-up and drank as much good red likker with old Barnes as any of 'em, and I might as well take my turn makin' him comfortable," came from the departing form of Baxter, as a rush of cold air and a slam of the door announced the exit of these two roughly clad ministering angels.

"My!" panted Crawford, his superabundant adipose, brisk walking, and the icy air combining to deprive him of his breath as they waded through the deepening snow. "Tough, ain't it, Tom, dyin' over there in the woods, with no one to care whether y' die or live? Yes, and you bet I hain't got none too good an opinion of his old woman for leavin' him the way she did; he's the best man of the two, drunk or sober."

Years before Barnes' quaint little English wife, unable or unwilling to further contend with the adverse circumstances with which her husband's dissipated habits had environed her, had put on her bonnet—a bonnet which was rendered noticeable solely by the active wear that its owner's long continued poverty had given it, it having been made in the day when one glance at any of its kind was equal to a prolonged stroll in a botanic garden—and gone back to the merry England, whence they had sailed in the prosperous days of their newly-wedded life, leaving as the only legacy to her lord the sobriquet of "Widow" Barnes, a title conferred by our friend, the doctor, and which abode forever with him.

"Hello! Who's that with the lantern?" said Crawford, interrupting his partner's flow of invective concerning Dame Barnes; "Mis' Ames and Johnny, I believe," continued he, as a nearer approach to the shanty revealed a group consisting of an ample-waisted lady, a shepherd dog and a youth carrying a lantern which cast its shifting lights and shadows over the cabin and far up into the moaning tree-tops.

"Good evenin', Mis' Ames, been in to see the widow?"

"O good evenin', that's you, Mr. Crawford. They're waitin' for you; yes, I've jest been in to see him. The doctor stopped in as he was goin' home and said he wouldn't live till mornin', so Johnny and me come over to see if we couldn't do something, though pa said we wuz foolish, and I s'pose we wuz, for he don't know anybody now—and land alive! I don't believe I can sleep a wink to-night thinkin' of any one dyin' in such a lookin' place as that—and to think, too, that he wuz somebody's little baby once."

"O wal, Mis' Ames, you know we ain't all such good housekeepers as you be," replied Baxter ignoring the sentimental aspect of her observations.

"It's awful, anyhow," reiterated the good lady, thus summing up the whole situation in her tone, and starting homewards with her satellites, while her interlocutors with much stamping off of snow and scuffling feet entered the cabin, where, indeed, heaven's first law was supremely disregarded, from the greasy lamp with its feeble glimmer, the battered stove, under which a dog and cat slumbered amicably side by side, and the cider barrels covered with remnants of feasts, near and remote, to the central figure of the scene with his grizzled and unkempt hair, who lay in the last stupor on a rough cot.

But things had been different with the "Widow" Barnes. Fifty years, away back in the century, one day when the English daisy starred the fields and hedgerows, and the waters of the Solent whispered softly on the sands of the Isle of Wight, he first saw the light of day. And was this the outcome of that sweet-faced babyhood and sturdy youth, and honest, hopeful manhood? Drifted, drifted, until one could not recognize in the distorted fragments of the wreck anything of the fair original.

Five years before, by permission of Mr. Ames, the owner of the land, who occasionally employed him in harvesting, he had built this little cabin on the edge of a hilly pasture bordering on the woods, and here, under his own vine and fig tree, in the shade of a great scoke-berry bush towering far above his humble domicile, with his cat and dog, who looked up to him with all the veneration they would bestow on a worthier object, and the guinea fowls that paraded about the hut in their chinchilla cloaks with no loss of their exclusive airs because of their owner's questionable social position, and the patient-looking turkeys with their pathetic voices and see-saw gaits, he had lived and "bached it," as he said, plying intermittently his trades of extempore gardener, farm hand and hostler, but following each and every calling only as humble means to the end of keeping the cider barrels replete that graced each corner of his abode, and served the treble purpose of sideboard, chair and table, as well as furnishing the desideratum of the cabin's occupant.

And if, within, chaos did reign, there was yet a picturesqueness in the sight of this rude hut against the spring and summer and autumn woods. In May, how thick the golden stars of dandelions came out against the green firmament of the pasture, nebulous clouds of them, a milky way of dandelions; while in summer the great beech trees, whose dappled trunks looked as though they had caught and eternally photographed the checkered sunshine as it sifted through the innumerable forest leaves, stretched their arms lovingly over this poor home, and in autumn, that sunset of the year—for the year has its sunset, too, and dies gloriously, bathing the world in floods of color that flow and ebb even as the sunset colors do—in autumn the cabin and all its surroundings was transfigured by the aureole of splendor shed upon it by the tinted woods.

But from this picture, now framed by deserted meadows and leafless forests, the animated figure was slowly passing. All through the long, long night that followed, Baxter and Crawford (not yet unmindful of their own creature comforts in the shape of numerous draughts of their charge's royal hard cider) ministered to the dying man, the sound of whose labored breathing mingled weirdly with the sobbing storm, till finally, when the dawn rose over the now peaceful earth, the last faltering breath came and went.

* * * * * * *

"I tell you, Tom," said Crawford, after that first momentary hush which always follows the great Mystery, "blamed if this hain't done me more good 'n any temperance meetin' I ever 'tended, and what do you say to swearin' off now 'nstead of waitin' till New Year's, as we was goin' to?"

"Wal," answered Baxter, "I don't reckon there's any great hurry about quittin', as I never calculate to come to livin' and dyin' in the timber this way, but it's only three weeks, anyhow, and I'll go you."

They closed the eyes that would look no more on the sins and sorrows of the world, and arrayed him for his lonely and unmourned burial. Yet, not unblessed, for a few hours later, when the winter sunshine was bright on the newly fallen snow, that seemed spread like the mantle of God's charity over cabin and hill and wood, that but the day before had stood so bare and cheerless in their frozen outlines, a little company of neighbors were gathered with bowed and uncovered heads, around the dead, while the good parson prayed with singular sweetness and hopefulness, "Father of all, Thou who art mindful of the weak as of the strong; Thou who seest not alone the besetting sin, but as well the perennial springing impulses of nobleness; Thou who judgest us not by the half light that we judge one another, but by the pure rays of thy limitless love; Thou who art with us in Eternity as in Time, strengthen this bruised and weakened soul. Even as from sickness unto death Thou canst restore and make new the body, so on this sin-sick soul send down the healing balm of thy illimitable charity and uplifting grace, making it yet to attain its perfect stature and the perfection of its early promise."

And as they bore the rough pine box through the fields to its final resting place, the sprays of withered golden-rod that brushed it as it passed, as if saying adieu to the familiar form they had known so long, seemed, too, to symbolize a newer life and beauty, transformed as they were, by the soft, snow-wreaths laid upon them from the pale ghosts of themselves that yesterday swayed in the wind, into fairest exotics.

THE APPEAL OF THE HOME TO WOMAN.

BY REV. SAMUEL W. DIKE, LL.D.

It has become a truism among all sound thinkers that the preservation of the home is fundamental in all work for the well-being and improvement of human society. Mrs. Livermore has recently said that "to reform the public life, the purification must begin at the hearthstone." And nobody has a deeper interest in the home than woman. Her elevation and that of the home are inseparable. She does not work long for her own improvement in any one direction before she begins work for the home itself as bound up with her own dearest interests. Her attack upon the enormous evil of intemperance rests largely upon the conviction that this vice is a foe of terrible proportions to the home, and other work for the home has naturally followed.

There are three leading ways in which the home and woman's interest may suffer. The first which I will name here is from the assault of social evils upon it, of which the saloon is an instance of formidable proportions. The second is through the inefficient work which the home does as an important factor in the common social activity. The former weakens the home by assault upon it. The latter accomplishes the same result through the loss of power that always comes to a vital organ through diminished or misdirected activity. But I must pass both these by. The former is constantly and ably treated in THE UNION SIGNAL, and the latter is by no means overlooked. I have space here for the third, and that is the attack upon the integrity of the home. The home may be directly broken up, its members separated, and its work as a home completely destroyed.

It is precisely this that is going on, and to which I would now direct attention. No less than 25,535 families were broken up in the divorce courts of the United States in the single year, 1886, and this evil is increasing more than twice as fast as the population. It reaches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is found nearly all over Europe. In some of our states the divorces are six, eight, and have been ten per cent of the marriages for the whole state, while single counties show for years higher rates than these. In 1886, there were 21,800 children in that part of the families divorced in which the recital of the facts or the interests of the case required note to be taken of their presence. Nobody can tell how many more there were.

Now, conceding for the moment that divorce was the proper thing in the large majority of these cases, what a confession it is on the part of the American people! "Divorce, at best," said Elizabeth Stuart Phelps recently, "is pure surgery; nothing more nor less." This is essentially correct, and puts the thing under its right name. It is a practical confusion on the part of the American people as a whole that they have as yet found no remedy for this social disease that preys upon the vitals of the family—no remedy which can take the place of the capital decree of the courts, which brings not remedy, but dissolution. We thus try to save the individual, but through the destruction of the family to which the individual belongs. The Saloon is hostile to the Home. In at least one-fifth of the nearly 30,000 cases that were specially examined by the Department of Labor to determine, if possible, the point, it was found that intemperance was a direct or an indirect cause of the divorces. The suppression of the saloon, therefore, means a good step towards the reduction of the divorce rate. It is, however, but one.

But we must do more than give the home protection from these outside assaults of the saloon, and from those of the fiend of lust, which is hardly less omnipresent in society, to say the least, than the rum fiend. We must do more than fortify the home against the materialism of the times; the eager pursuit of money with its readiness to succumb to the hardships of the struggle for domestic support, and the net-work of commercial and industrial influences that combine to scatter families, and open them to the temptations of divorce in a heated civilization. We must go direct to the home itself, and see that its life is so sacred in the eye of the law that its dissolution can be decreed only for the most serious reasons, always in the most deliberate manner, and only when it is clear that remedy is hopeless. These qualifications which I have just made are very important. They would seem perfectly proper. "For the most serious reasons," "in the most deliberate manner," and only "whenever it is clear that remedy is hopeless." They cut off divorce for trivial offenses. They rule out all haste and lack of full and fair trial. They imply the exhaustion of all efforts in the remedy of the evils through the kindly offices of religion, education, personal effort and social helpfulness.

This course would cut down the dockets of our courts immensely. And this would be especially true if those guilty of offenses that result in divorce should be punished. Surely "extreme cruelty" towards a wife ought, if possible, to send the brutal husband to the penitentiary. Drunkenness, when it strikes directly at the home, is a double crime against the social order. It is an offense against individuals, and an assault upon the institution of the family. It is a marital offense and a paternal crime. This is essentially true also of desertion and neglect to support. At present our laws, indirectly at least, encourage these offenses, and of course there are grave difficulties in the way of success in punishing them. But something probably can be done. Perhaps much could be accomplished if public attention should be seriously turned to the subject.

We need to check our excessive indulgence in easy divorce, partly for the very object of turning attention to the real remedies for domestic infelicities. For divorce, I repeat, is not so much a remedy as it is a confession of the hopelessness of any remedy. It may be an individual relief, but it is at the expense of the very existence of the family. It recklessly sacrifices the family under pretence of rescuing the individual. The word "pretence" is not too strong in many instances. For it is not so much the salvation of the individual in character, as the gratification of an extreme self-seeking, that is the underlying motive in the application for divorce. Whoever marries thereby enters into a relation beyond the contract by which the relation came into being. He has thereby passed beyond the sphere of the contract as much as the ship at sea is outside the dock it left on sailing. The contract is not the thing to be remedied in the courts. Indeed, it is not before the divorce court except as evidence of the creation of the relation. It is a family that now confronts the law or, at the best that can be said on the other side, two or more individuals in such high domestic relations that the interests of society in their dominant relations, is the paramount matter for its adjudication.

No one has more concern in the maintenance of the integrity of the family than woman. Her dearest interests center there. All that she does for the home or by the home rests on the assumption that there is a home for and through which she may work. And she cannot afford to throw up her hands and say that there are no remedies for its ills, and her only relief is in the surgery of the courts, just as the recognition of the right to life and its vigorous development has proved the salvation of the individual, whether man or woman, from those very ills that once seemed to justify infanticide and the destruction of the defective members of society, so it will prove here. The upward movement from our present sacrifice of defective families must sooner or later cast away its heathenish notion that destruction of domestic life is essential to the preservation of society. We must demand the restriction of divorce in order that attention be directed to remedial influences. And behind it all there must be carried on the work of the education of our people in the great elementary ideas of the family.

MORAL COURAGE DEPARTMENT, ESPECIALLY FOR MEN.

BY E. P. MARVIN, (a man).

We have men enough already, whose consciences vote prohibition, to carry all before them, if they had the full courage of their convictions and the victory over their selfish interests. Let conscience take the throne and these "Lords of Creation" would soon find a way or make one, to down the twin giants of appetite and avarice and annihilate the 200,000 infernal saloons of our heaven-favored land. But this stubborn work requires rugged moral heroism.

Men must have iron in the blood, granite in the backbone and God in the heart. They must have the moral courage to espouse a righteous and unpopular cause, and join for a little while "a contemptible minority." How shall we invigorate these consciences and rally these cowards to battle? Would a "Moral Courage Department" do it?

All true Christian life is a warfare, and a soldier is worthless without courage. In this evil world, dominated by the usurper, Satan, we reach peace through war and crowns through the conflict of battle. A truce is treason. The gospel invades Satan's kingdom, attacks the dominions of selfishness, and crosses purposes and swords with all the hosts of evil. It purposes by heroic treatment to conquer evil and bring in everlasting righteousness.

What is this needful moral courage? It is not stupid obstinacy, nor contention about immaterial trifles. It does not become stupidly obstinate by opposition. It is not stiff-necked with pride, conceit and the determination to have one's own way. It has no selfish ambition to serve, and does not boast when putting on the armor. It is not mere natural resolution, pluck or grit. These are spasmodic and shortlived. They may plunge us into rash acts, but they seldom make true martyrs. Rage may disregard self, but it seldom serves others.

Moral courage is not a consequential, domineering spirit, the love of power, the exclusive choice of a captaincy. It is calm and strong, and knows how to be abased. It is not the enemy of the flesh. What, then, is it? Fidelity to moral principle at any cost or hazard, the courage of deep, moral conviction, boldness in obedience to God. It is that quality of the soul which enables us to encounter difficulties and dangers with firmness, and at least deserve success. It is opposed to cowardice, time-serving, trimming and tide-riding. It despises worldly and selfish policy, and does not wait for others to speak, but only God and conscience. It does not ask what is expedient, but what is right.

Moral courage is founded on true knowledge, fully counts the cost, and promptly decides for God and the right. It has clear eyes, a tender heart and a strong arm. It blends the tenderness of a woman with the strength of a giant.

"The bravest are the tenderest;
The loving are the daring."

It is yoked with discretion; it is not rashness, bad judgment or fanaticism. It does not plunge headlong like the horse or mule into battle. Headlong men are not men of long heads. It does not fritter away energies and influence on trifling causes, but reserves its supreme force for the main thing. It is based on knowledge, wisdom, discretion, sanctified common sense.

It is planted in a profound sense of duty to "God and Home and Native Land." It is a kind of constraining moral necessity. It is not a mere sentiment but a fixed principle of unhesitating obedience.

"Ours not to make reply,
Ours not to reason why,
Ours but to do or die."

Should a department be formed for the development of this essential element of success among us "men people," I know of no better text-book than one printed at the Bible House, New York.

1. This book teaches us to abandon ourselves in entire consecration and unhesitating obedience to God for the welfare of humanity.

It leads to self-crucifixion, puts us under authority, constrains us by love, and girds us with heroic fearlessness. Riches, honors, pleasures, majorities, life—all are nothing. It puts us with a little flock, love inspired, patient, pitiful, and ready for the martyrdom of righteous pioneers.

Our leader requires not simply our kindly regards but our heroic obedience at any cost. We must endure hardness as good soldiers, and boldly say, "The Lord is my helper; I will not fear what man can do unto me." Success, that shining goal, is doing our duty. If all the world is against us, then we are against all the world.

When Christ sent out his missionaries, he utterly divested them of all human and earthly supports and defenses, and compelled them to the sublimest courage.

2. This text-book of moral courage presents as the muscles and nerve of that courage, profound and unwavering faith in God. Cromwell's pocket Bible energized his soul. Knox had faith in God and never feared the face of clay. Taking hold of the arm of God we are steady and strong. Under the shadow of the Almighty we fight with safety. Our principles are worth dying for. Intense moral convictions concerning our duty to God and man are the stock out of which heroes and martyrs are made.

3. In its sublimest quality, moral courage is the result of being filled with the Holy Spirit. Before Pentecost, Peter quailed before a maid servant. Afterward he defied all the authorities. Once he was timid as a lamb; now he is bold as a lion. The Bible is full of exhortations to courage and living examples. It is a well-furnished text-book. While the pulpit is a suppliant, it is also a thunderer. An apostle in some of our modern pulpits would produce a moral earthquake.

Away with toy soldiers, men on dress parade, sentinels who dare not fire off their guns! It is no piping time of peace. The combat deepens. The times are getting late and perilous. God wants heroes. He wants men crusaders. With absolute fearlessness and sanctified stubbornness we should move directly on the enemy's works. Evil is bold and strong; we must be bolder and stronger in the Lord. About nine-tenths of our moral avoirdupois should be backbone. Then we shall do what we thought we couldn't. Then King Alcohol will be dethroned.

Perhaps our women are sufficiently endowed with this moral courage, but let us have a department for men.

BUSINESS CAPACITY OF WOMEN.

BY D. P. LIVERMORE.

IV.

In this, my final word in reply to Marion Harland, I shall show that women, on every hand, are successfully engaged in business pursuits. It is fair to judge women by the same rule as we judge men, other things being equal. Success in business must be regarded as satisfactory proof of woman's "capacity" for business. It is only within comparatively few years that various industrial employments and business pursuits have been open to women; and while there are not as many women engaged in business as men, the thousands on thousands of women in business show how mistaken Marion Harland is in her position and line of argument.

There are no statistics bearing directly on the business "capacity" of men or women, but as both sexes are more or less engaged in business pursuits, it is fair to assume that they have "capacity" for business! In the "census of Massachusetts" for 1885, we learn that of the "General Partners" in business there are 1,743 females, and seventeen female "special" partners; and of "stockholders" in the state, there are 31,156 males, and 11,575 females, which is a very fair showing for woman's capacity for business, considering the little time and opportunity afforded her for engaging in trade and different industrial pursuits.

The evidence is cumulative and abundant in all the departments of life, that women have large capacity for business. Even the Queen of England often gives direction to her ministers in administering the affairs of her government, and is not a mere "figure-head" as those assert who try to belittle the capacity of women.

Senator Hoar delivered an address in Tremont Temple, Boston, on "Equal Rights," and among other things, said:

Women who have been intrusted with political functions, have been wise and able and just sovereigns, in far greater proportion than the other sex. With three or four exceptions, every decent sovereign in Europe since the Dark Ages has been a woman.

This careful judgment of one of the ablest statesmen of our country, concerning woman's capacity for responsible positions in life, will command the attention of all thoughtful people. In further proof of woman's business capacity, we give the following from the Springfield, Mass., Republican:

The Civil Service Commission are to report most favorably on the work of women in the government service. They assert that women's work in the service is of a high standard of excellence, and that in many cases their clerical labors are more accurately performed than those of men.

Such women have quite as much capacity for business as men. Dr. L. P. Brockett has written a volume in opposition to woman's enfranchisement, entitled the "Rights and Wrongs of Woman;" and yet he is candid enough to admit that women are successful in business. On page 200 he says:

We know that a young, beautiful and accomplished woman in Western Massachusetts, whose husband was president and chief business manager of a very large paper manufactory, when he was cut off in the prime of manhood, took his place, and has now been for some years the active and capable manager of the business. We know that in the largest manufactory of fire-arms in the world, the widow of the founder of the establishment is the largest stockholder, and is constantly consulted in its management. A large machine shop in Delaware, doing a successful business, is managed by the daughter of its founder, an intelligent young woman, who for some years worked constantly at the bench, and now can do as large a day's work, and do it as well, as any of the men in her employ. One of her sisters is also among the most skillful workers in the shop. These are only single instances, rare ones, perhaps, of the ability of women to conduct large manufacturing operations.

In commerce and trade they have often engaged, and with signal success in many instances. For many years, in Philadelphia, there was a prominent book-store and publishing-house having the simple sign, "S. Hart & Son." Of the many thousands who dealt there, very few knew that "S" stood for "Sarah," and that this was a firm in which a mother and son were the partners. Mrs. Hart commenced business in this firm when her son (Abraham Hart, subsequently an extensive publisher, owner of coal mines, and a millionaire) was but sixteen years of age, and took an active interest in the business, until failing health compelled her retirement.

But larger enterprises, commercial, mercantile and financial, than this, have been and still are in the hands of women. Mrs. Burdett-Coutts is as successful in her business operations, the conducting of her great banking-house, and the management of her vast estate, as she is liberal and noble in the dispensing of her princely charities. In Paris, and indeed on the Continent of Europe generally, some of the largest commercial houses have women at their head.

In New York, in some instances, where the experiment has been tried of a joint management of a mercantile business by husband and wife, and has failed, in subsequent management by the wife alone, has proved successful. The numbers of women engaged in business in their own names in all our large cities is already great, and is constantly increasing. Few of them, as yet, engage in the wholesale trade, but those few, as well as the retailers, have generally been successful.

When women have a chance, they often show great capacity for business. Miss Mary E. Garrett, daughter of the late John W. Garrett, is reported as one of the wealthiest women in our country, she having a fortune of more than $20,000,000. Her father gave her such careful instruction in business affairs that she is able to manage her immense estate as well as any man. A very capable and well-educated young woman in Chicago, who is prospective heir to a large property, has been carefully instructed in business matters by her father, who takes great pride in the capabilities of his daughter; and she now controls thousands of dollars, has her own bank account, and makes her own investments.

When Marion Harland attempted to show the "incapacity of business women," why did she so carefully avoid all reference to this class of women, and draw her illustrations from "salesladies," "girl-stenographers," "type-writers" and "nurses,"—who, in no proper sense represent the business women of the country! "Eleven women in Santa Clara, Cal., run and manage prune orchards," and several hundred women in the Dakotas are engaged in farming, which requires business capacity; and the papers inform us that Mrs. Charles D. Haines, of Texas, has recently been elected president of a steam railroad company. "She is a highly accomplished woman, and understands the railroad business thoroughly." In further proof of woman's capacity for business, I give the following from Dr. Brockett's volume referred to above.

Rev. Dr. Malcom, who about thirty years traveled extensively in India, Burmah and Siam, says that in Burmah, the women are the sole merchants and traders, and that they always accumuiate property. They act invariably, he says, upon the cash principle, buying only what they have money to pay for, and giving no credit.

Does not this look like conducting business on a safe basis? If men were as careful and wise as such women, and carried on their financial affairs with equal prudence, there would be fewer business "embarrassments" among them, and the country would not be disturbed, as it now frequently is, with wild speculations, numerous defalcations and dishonest failures. From ten to twelve thousand failures of men are reported annually in our country. Where is the proof that men are more successful in business than women? Who have wrecked so many of our railroads and squandered millions on millions of the people's money? Certainly not women!

REVIEW OF "TRUTH IN THE CASE."

"IOWA NOT ALONE."

In reviewing that part of "Truth in the Case" which follows the heading, "Iowa not alone," page 78, and which is designed to prove that the W. C. T. U. of other states, either by their local, county or state branches, support the "Iowa position," we find by analysis the following material used:

First, and principally, the opinions of individuals as expressed in letters, addresses or articles contributed to one of the state papers.

Second, three short chapters concerning Chester county, Penn., Maine and Massachusetts, purporting to indicate sympathy from these states.

Third, a discussion of the question by Mrs. Aldrich and Mrs. Foster reiterating their personal opinions and unjustly accusing the National leaders of "fraud," which the latter compares with "embezzlement," assuring the public that "the difference in honor is in favor of the embezzler, the grand larceny committed by this Christian organization being of heart and soul and home influence, while the embezzler steals material value," page 146.

Fourth, a criticism upon the methods suggested for the evangelistic department from the standpoint of an individual member of the Iowa W. C. T. U. under the head of "Ecclesiastical Assumptions," page 133, which, having no relation to the question under discussion in "Truth in the Case," we will not take time to answer; it, however, indicates the animus of the entire movement of the leaders of the secession and the pamphlet which they have published. We will consider these points in order.

Under the first head we find quotations of personal opinion as expressed in certain articles published in the White Ribbon, formerly the state paper of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U.—one from Mrs. Joseph D. Weeks, page 78, and another from the former president of the state of Pennsylvania, Mrs. Frances L. Swift, page 86; also an anonymous communication from Connecticut, signed simply "White Ribbon," page 102; another statement of personal opinion from a member from Arkansas, another from an individual from California, one from Mrs. Wilson, of Illinois, and one from Mrs. Ecob, of New York. A communication, also of individual views from Mrs. Tilton, of District of Columbia, is given on page 127, in which the writer defends Mrs. Foster simply and her position, without the slightest reference to any action of the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia. A letter from Mrs. Angie F. Newman, of Nebraska, is also inserted, of which only extracts are given, and we learn from Mrs. Newman that such parts of her letter as qualify the opinions expressed therein, and were favorable to the N. W. C. T. U. and its President, are left out of "TRUTH in the Case." It seems to this committee to be unnecessary to reply to these statements of individual opinion, having already sufficiently noticed those of the leaders. It is evident that having nothing to record of the action of local or county W. C. T. Unions they have been obliged to resort to this method of proving that "Iowa is not alone." It would not be difficult among 200,000 members to find some who would individually take sides with the Iowa leaders, but the local unions who are on their side are conspicuous for their scarcity.

Under the second head we will consider only the three chapters which refer to the action of local unions, viz.: Chester county W. C. T. U., Pennsylvania, page 84; Maine, page 110, and Massachusetts, page 112. On page 81, an extract is given from what purports to be Mrs. Darlington's annual address to the Chester county union, Pennsylvania, but a letter from one of the leading women of that county says: "In reality it was only a paper read before a thinly attended quarterly convention at Atglen. These quarterlies were formed more for conferences than anything else. The one referred to above was held in November, 1888, and the paper of Mrs. Darlington was followed by similar ones from the corresponding and recording secretaries. A resolution followed that the unions of the county declare for non-auxiliaryship to the National. This was tabled by a vote of twenty-six to twenty-three. Notwithstanding this a motion followed and was carried that delegates carry instructions home to their local unions for meetings to be called for decision as to whether they would remain auxiliary or not, and report to an executive committee meeting at Downingtown a month later. At the latter meeting the vote stood as recorded; twenty-five to remain auxiliary and thirty-six against, while four were neutral. To prove that they were not 'thoroughly conversant with the plans and methods of the organization,' as claimed on page 84, during the ensuing months eight or nine of the unions that had voted to be non-auxiliary, reconsidered their action and became auxiliary. One union of twenty members which decided unanimously for non-auxiliaryship, afterward voted to be auxiliary. By the time of the next ANNUAL county convention in September last, the vote of the unions was a tie, with a preponderance of members for auxiliaryship.

"Realizing that they could not elect their officers, a resolution was sprung upon the convention, stating 'that for peace's sake it would be best to defer the election until after the state convention, arranging for an adjourned annual county meeting at Coatesville, at which this election should take place.' Could we have proceeded with the election it would have been much better for us and saved us much trouble, but it would have been unfortunate for them. Each side sent fifteen delegates to the state convention. We would have had sixteen but for the fact that two unions, Downingtown and Schuylkill, were excluded because 'they had not been organized under county rules.' These rules were 'non-auxiliaryship.' The two unions were formed as auxiliary to county, state and National, and sent their dues to the county treasurer, which were received and reported at the convention in her report, but afterwards refunded to the unions. The county corresponding secretary, also, had received the unions prior to the convention, or rather had sent them full instructions of procedure after they were organized, and reported them at the convention. Still they were ruled out, but, nothing daunted, they sent their dues to the state and National, and they were received by the state treasurer. After considerable discussion their delegate was admitted to the state convention and then we counted sixteen. For receiving this delegate the state has been severely censured in the White Ribbon, our former state organ, but the writer of the article neglects to state that they had tried to pay their dues into the county treasury, but were refused. If Mrs. Ellen Watson's non-partisan amendment had not been tabled at the state convention, and a resolution indorsing Third party had been introduced, they were prepared to secede in open convention, and were equipped with a speech-maker and other arrangements for a 'scene,' but they were disappointed and called a meeting later in the Colonnade Hotel, at which, however, no definite plans were laid as to their future movements, no doubt determining to wait until after the Chicago convention. We came home and at the Coatesville adjourned annual session the secession came at noon time, and the seceders repaired to the Presbyterian Church to arrange for a Christian Temperance League to be formed. Although our numbers will be diminished we will hold a W. C. T. U. at every point, and organize new ones wherever possible. We have established beautiful county headquarters and are arranging for a column in the Daily Local News for the furtherance of our work."

The above quotations are from a letter of one of the Chester county officers whose authority cannot be questioned. Last December (the 5th) "The Chester county W. C. T. U. held a large and enthusiastic convention at Phœnixville, over two hundred delegates and visitors present. Thirty-five out of fifty unions were represented, although the weather was most unpropitious. Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, of Massachusetts, gave an address, and expressed herself as 'filled with admiration and gratitude for the large, intelligent and consecrated assembly.' The new state president of Pennsylvania who was elected at the fall convention and who is heartily in sympathy with the National W. C. T. U., was present and made an address."

In regard to Maine, see page 110. We have the reply of the state president that "only two unions have seceded; one of them, Fort Fairfield, in Aroostook county, withdrew about two years ago, and there is now in that place a strong, large, active union auxiliary to state and National W. C. T. U. The other was at Skowhegan, which seceded two weeks ago. Aroostook county W. C. T. U. has not withdrawn; on the contrary it was (although the most remote) the banner county at the last state convention. In Caribou, which was Mrs. Florence Porter's home, she and six other women seceded and set up for themselves, and called a 'county convention,' but little work has been done, however, by them." Mrs. Stevens also says "there may be a few young people banded together in the county calling themselves Y's who really are not so." The "state organizer" referred to, certainly spoke the simple truth when she said no society not auxiliary to state and National W. C. T. U. had a right to the name of "Woman's Christian Temperance Union," and she does not seem to have caused much trouble in thus speaking the truth, judging by the above statement concerning Aroostook county. Thus it may be seen upon what a slight foundation rests the impression given out in "Truth in the Case," that Maine is affected by sympathy with the "Iowa position." The remainder of the chapter is occupied with personal opinions of Mrs. Florence Porter, which it is not worth while to answer, being but a repetition of the same statement to which reply has been made in these reviews.

"Massachusetts" now comes under notice. See page 2. The very first statement in the chapter is utterly without foundation, that "it is reported from the headquarters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Massachusetts that, in point of fact, there are but six partisan unions in the state."

This quotation Mrs. Foster has taken from a communication made to the Congregationalist signed with initials only, to which a complete denial was made in the same paper over the signature of the state president and corresponding secretary, a week or two after. The TRUTH is that out of nearly three hundred local unions with a membership of twelve thousand, only fifteen have passed resolutions of disapproval of the action of the state convention which has always been in sympathy with the National resolutions; of these three are given on page 112. Not one union in the state has seceded and scarcely any members have withdrawn from lack of sympathy with the state and National union. New unions constantly are being formed, and new members rapidly coming into the present local unions. A spirit of great harmony prevails throughout the state, and the interest and zeal of the members is steadily growing; these are the almost universal reports of the local unions in the recent county conventions held in every part of the state. There are some members who are not in full sympathy with the resolutions of the National and state conventions, but they understand that they are not bound by these resolutions, and they realize that in a great movement like this, all cannot see alike in everything, and that after a proper expression of their difference of opinion their duty ends, and they agree to disagree on those questions which do not practically affect them, and go on with the work of the union.

We have thus proved that "Iowa is alone" in her anomalous position toward the National W. C. T. U., so far as states are concerned, and has only here and there a follower from among the 7,000 local unions of the nation.

The third head, consisting of personal views of Mrs. Foster and Mrs. Aldrich, has been fully answered in the preceding sections of this review. Iowa must stand alone in the long and determined warfare upon the National Union, and be held responsible for disloyalty to sacred obligations which has finally led to present conditions.

A PROHIBITION VICTORY AT THE CAPITOL.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The 12th of March was "a red-letter day" for prohibition in the National House of Representatives. On that day consideration of the Bill to Provide for the Organization of Oklahoma Territory was resumed in the committee of the whole house on the state of the Union. At the time of the previous rising of the committee, section seven of the bill had been reached. This section, as reported, provided for inflicting the high-license system of Nebraska on the territory instead of continuing the prohibitory regime. Mr. Morse, of Massachusetts, offered an amendment by adding that,

The provisions of section 2139 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, extended to this territory until otherwise provided by law.

Section 2139 says that,

No ardent spirits shall be introduced under any pretense into the Indian country. * * *

This amendment was lost. Mr. Kelley, of Kansas, then offered an amendment to strike out the word Nebraska wherever it occurs in the section and insert Kansas. A lengthy discussion for and against continuing prohibition in the territory until after the first territorial legislature, followed. Messrs. Kelley, Peters, Perkins and Funston, of Kansas; Kerr, of Iowa; Pickler, of South Dakota; Allen and Cutcheon, of Michigan; Dingley, of Maine; Morse, of Massachusetts; Conger, of Iowa; J. D. Taylor, of Ohio; Stewart, of Georgia, and Rogers, of Arkansas, spoke in favor of the continuance—the two last named being Democrats. Messrs. Chipman, of Michigan; Fitch and Spinola, of New York; Tarsney, of Missouri, and Mills, of Texas, spoke against the continuance—all Democrats. Mr. Payson, Republican from Illinois, who was in the chair, had previously spoken in favor of continuing prohibition in Oklahoma.

During the progress of the discussion, Mr. Stewart, Democratic Prohibitionist from Georgia, offered a substitute for the amendment of Mr. Kelley, which substitute, except as to its termination, was in effect the same as the amendment offered by Mr. Morse and lost. In offering it, Mr. Stewart said:

It is now simply a matter of construction as to whether this statute does not already obtain in that territory. In order to put it beyond question, I have offered the amendment.

His substitute was agreed to. The part of the section amended now reads:

SEC. 7. That the general statutes of Nebraska, which are not locally inapplicable or in conflict with this act, or in conflict with any law of the United States, are hereby extended to and put in force in the territory of Oklahoma until after the adjournment of the first session of the Legislative Assembly of said territory.

Provided, That section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be enforced in said territory until after the adjournment of the first session of the Legislative Assembly of said territory.

Mr. Pickler, in concluding his remarks, had the clerk read the memorial of the National W. C. T. U., entreating Congress to continue to protect Oklahoma against the liquor traffic.

Mr. Fitch, who is the successor of Mr. Louis Schade as attorney for the United States Brewers' Association, in the course of his remarks explained why the committee took the statutes of a state "entirely removed in locality and in circumstances" from this territory. He said:

"It is claimed that this is an attempt on the part of the advocates of prohibition to do here in the House what they were prevented from doing in the committee. In the committee this same matter was brought up and discussed. The advocates of one side desired the laws of Arkansas, and on the other the laws of Kansas; and the laws of Nebraska where a high license exists, were selected as a compromise measure."

Had the amendment as offered by Mr. Morse prevailed, instead of the one offered by Mr. Stewart, the Territorial Legislature would have been prohibited from licensing the infamous traffic, if so disposed, while that amendment remained unrepealed by Congress. As it is, at the first session of the Territorial Legislature a license statute may be enacted.

The next day, the bill as amended was reported to the House and passed. The yeas and nays were ordered on the prohibitory amendment—yeas 133, nays 104, not voting, ninety-two. Eight Democrats voted for and not a Republican against. The Democratic favorable votes were those of Messrs. Hooker, Lewis and Stockdale, of Mississippi; Stewart, of Georgia; Rowland, of North Carolina; Stump, of Maryland; Outhwaite, of Ohio, and Tracey, of Albany, New York. This bill was a substitute for the Oklahoma bill of the Senate. Rejection by the Senate of the prohibitory amendment is not anticipated.

The Washington Sentinel, organ of the United States Brewers' Association, edited by Mr. Louis Schade, in an editorial of nearly a column, headed, "A Prohibition Victory at the Capitol," says:

The personal liberty people throughout the country have no idea of the power which prohibition has attained at the National Capitol. . . . . Up to the present time the House was regarded as right on this question. But that is no longer so. The debate and vote on the Oklahoma Territory Bill in favor of prohibition, have shown that our apprehensions are only too well founded.

A letter of appreciation has been sent every Congressman voting prohibition for Oklahoma by the National W. C. T. U. through its superintendent of legislation and petitions.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN DENMARK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In THE UNION SIGNAL of December 5, I find an article which defends my beloved native land from always being mentioned by temperance orators as the most drunken country in Europe. Though I am very glad to see that the reverend author of this article still cherishes such kind feelings towards my little native land, where he once lived for several years and was one of the first men who started the temperance movement there, I find myself in the sad necessity—according to truth—to repeat in THE UNION SIGNAL what I am telling so often in public temperance lectures, that poor little Denmark really is the most drunken country in Europe. This statement is first taken from the official statistics for the years 1871-80 (the next time the government will publish these statistics will probably be after 1890), and next from several private publications of later date, that are all coming to the same sad result, and finally, I think I shall be able to state myself, according to my experience on my numerous lecture trips in the different parts of the country, that perhaps we dare say, that the habit of taking brandy is decreasing, but unfortunately that strong beer has become the daily drink of nearly every house in Denmark. Both rich and poor, men and women—even children—have adopted as "our national drink," and this strong beer can be said actually to be the greatest curse of our nation. And our laws so fully legalize the drinking custom, that when a criminal acts in drunkenness, it will be regarded as an alleviating circumstance for his penalty.

Our government and parliament sustain views so different from those of the temperance workers both in regard to the source of our curse and its remedies, that two years ago a bill became a law, giving every farmer permission to make brandy in his own house with the only restriction that he must not sell it en détail (not less than ten liters) and recently the government has introduced in the parliament a bill—with the purpose to decrease the drunkenness of the nation—which charges beer and brandy with rather low taxes (beer never being charged before). It is very uncertain if this bill will become a law, the representatives declaring it unjust to bereave the poor man of his brandy. From these facts you will understand that we temperance workers have been desolate, first because the authorities were doing nothing to fight the great evil of the nation, and now we deeply deplore the wrong manner in which they are acting in this respect.

Our only hope for the salvation of our poor country from the curse of strong drinks is, that the temperance movement has certainly come here and is gathering members round its pure standard. But this movement always has a hard battle to fight in conquering the selfishness of men, and here in Denmark we are very slow to act, even if it may be to our own salvation, and the movement being to-day only ten years old, we must still work hard and continue our sowing; the harvest will certainly come, but perhaps not in our life-time. I think that we cannot count more than thirty thousand temperance people in Denmark at the most, and among these I don't believe you will find sixty persons of the cultivated classes; the total abstinence unions being ordinarily regarded as an asylum for the drunkards, and only very few joining us except for the sake of themselves or their own suffering husbands. And I am very sorry to say that the Danish women are our great antagonists. For these two reasons I have myself joined the W. C. T. U., as I think this union, perhaps, more able to gain the cultivated classes—especially the women—than the I. O. G. T., to which I belonged for several years, and whose organization and work I have appreciated as the best temperance society. But the W. C. T. U. is advancing very slowly here in Denmark. From the beginning (October, 1888) we were the only temperance people, but later some others also have taken the pledge, and we have determined that when a new W. C. T. U. is to be formed, there ought to be ten women who did not take the pledge before, and who are willing to become members. There are but two lecturers of the Danish W. C. T. U., and as we are poor people and have few members we cannot do very much for want of money. The I. O. G. T. has been very kind to us, and has arranged four meetings for our union in different towns. Three of them were not public, but the best people of the town were invited by printed cards.

The Danish Union for the Emancipation of Women has invited me to lecture, but I told them that I had enough to do for the I. O. G. T. and the W. C. T. U., and that I valued so much the temperance cause that I had to sacrifice all my strength to this noble warfare. But as it is still seldom here that women will consent to lecture, the union proposed that I should fill their invitations to lecture when they had no other to send, and I then have permission to lecture on the temperance cause as women's work, though the union feels but very little interest in this work, only one of their members having joined us. But it is a great advantage for me to speak before these audiences, and to have these meetings arranged and my traveling expenses paid without any trouble to me. Almost always there are large audiences when I am lecturing, for people are curious to see and hear a woman lecturer, and I always hear of the great sympathy for our reform, but it is very seldom that a woman joins our union. We must still sow, the harvest is not ripe yet.

A week ago I had the pleasure of organizing the second W. C. T. U. in our country in a little town on our own isle—Sjelland—with ten members; they have a very able president and secretary, two cultivated women. I hope they will be able to do good work, especially for the children, what we need so much, but here in Copenhagen we have no member of our union who is able to start a work for children. I am very sorry for it, but I have not time left myself to do so; for the time we must wait and hope.

It is my consolation through THE UNION SIGNAL to hear about your great work in America, and to know that we are members of the same union and united in the same work and prayer; unfortunately the Danish women do not at all resemble their energetic American sisters, and it is hard to get them to work; but the great need is here, and therefore we must continue our noble warfare.

Yours "For God, Home and Humanity,"

Pres. W. C. T. U. in Denmark.

MARCH.

BY M. M. D.

In the snowing and the blowing,
In the cruel sleet—
Little flowers begin their growing
Far beneath our feet.
Softly says the Spring, and cheerly,—
"Darlings, are you here?"
Till they answer: "We are nearly,
Nearly ready, dear."

"Where is Winter, with his snowing
Tell us, Spring," they say;
Then she answers: "He is going,
Going on his way.
Poor old Winter does not love you,—
But his time is past;
Soon my birds shall sing above you,—
Set you free at last."

ALECK'S RECRUIT.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Nobody in Dr. Alden's congregation listened more attentively to the pastor's sermon than Aleck Gardner, one warm Sunday morning. With wide, brown eyes gazing into the beloved face, and ears that were unwilling to lose a word, the boy carried into his listening the same thoroughness which made him the best scholar in his class, the leader in all the games on the campus, and the dearest fellow in the world in the opinion of his mother and sisters.

Dr. Alden's subject was "Christian Life," and his text, "How much owest thou unto my Lord?" Among other things, he said that the soldier in Christ's army was always a volunteer, but that no true volunteer was ever contented to come into and stay within the ranks alone. He would try to bring in recruits. He would never be afraid to show on which side he was, nor ashamed of his colors. Like Hedley Vicars, who, after his conversion, laid an open Bible on his table, so that his gay comrades should see for themselves that he had begun a new life, Christ's soldier would be brave and steadfast, and would try to win others into the kingdom.

Aleck Gardner belonged to a very pleasant Sunday-school, and his class was composed of boys, like himself, from the best families of the ward. In all New York there was not a better neighborhood than the one in which the Gardners resided, and the church and school were both aristocratic.

Aleck went home, resolved to put the Doctor's sermon into practice. To do so was to set about bringing in a recruit that very day. He ran over in memory the names of his friends and acquaintances, not one of whom but had gone to Sunday-school ever since he was three years old.

Aleck finally made up his mind that if he was to be of use he must get his recruit out on the avenue somewhere.

"For highways and hedges, I must put alleys and street corners," he said to himself with a smile, which was followed by a firm setting of the lips, and a glow in the bright eyes. Aleck Gardner was evidently in earnest.

Bible in hand he set forth to Sunday-school looking on both sides of the way for his recruit. Presently he saw him. But would he—could he—present that lad, even if he should consent to go, to the select circle of young people in Dr. Alden's church-school.

For one moment he hesitated. The next, with head erect, and outstretched hand, with a manner which was sweetly persuasive, and as polite as a manner could be, he approached the boy, who stood in a "don't care" attitude, leaning against a lamp post.

The recruit's head was frowsy, and red locks stuck like wisps of straw through the torn places in his old hat. His feet were bare, his trousers were patched with ill-selected pieces, he had on an old faded shirt of striped calico, and no jacket.

"Won't you come to our Sunday-school with me?" said Aleck. "I beg your pardon, but it's rather slow work standing here in the sun with nothing to do, and our teacher is splendid."

The boy of the sandy locks looked glum, and an angry blush stole through the thick freckled skin. He looked as if he might be getting ready to hit straight from the shoulder.

"You're making fun of me," he said, glowering on handsome, well-dressed Aleck, from hat to shoe-ties as fresh as a pink, and as elegant as boy could be.

"Not in the least," was the prompt answer. "I am in dead earnest, and I never wanted anything more in my life than I want you now to go to our Sunday-school with me. Please come along!"

"Will you have me as I am? No dressing me up in your old clothes, nor giving me a new hat—eh? What do you think of those boots?"

This lad had something of the spirit which animated tough old Samuel Johnson when a poor student at college His shoes were wretched, and some kind person, in pity for their forlorn state, set another pair before his door—which pair the future doctor of letters promptly threw out of the window. He would stand, please God, on his own feet and in his own shoes.

Aleck had remembered a certain gray suit in his closet at home, not much the worse for the wear, and had fancied how well his new acquaintance would look were he washed and brushed up generally; but with something of the divine tact which made the Apostle Paul the missionary he was, all things to all men, he at once put the gray suit in the background.

"Come just as you are. It's yourself I'm after, not what you have on. Come in as my friend."

The smooth, slender hand was laid on the reluctant arm. Aleck did not know how strong a conflict was going on in the soul beside him, nor how slight a thing decided the other boy's action; for just as Aleck spoke, there appeared on the corner a knot of boys of Tim Macgruder's own class.

They were ragged, dirty, and rejoiced in defiance of law and order; and they set up a shout of derision when they perceived the company in which their leader, as Tim Macgruder was, had somehow found himself.

What was their surprise when that leader turned, shook his fist at them menacingly, and then walked like a lamb for meekness, beside slim Aleck Gardner, and, the amazed boys bringing up the rear in the distance, they entered the portals of St. Barnabas's church side by side.

Tim Macgruder's entrance there would have made a sensation, had the boys and girls been less well-bred, or Aleck Gardner less a favorite and a gentleman. As it was, no eye was allowed to rest on him with a stare, and the welcome of teachers and boys was cordial to Aleck's new recruit.

Never will Tim forget the pleasure of that first hour in the Sunday-school—the delight of the hearty singing, and the interest with which he listened to the lesson study.

One, two, three Sundays he was in his place, in the old clothes, though each week there was an improvement in cleanliness. On the fourth he appeared in a plain but neat suit, with hair brushed and shoes on his feet. Tim had found a good situation, was a member of society with an interest in keeping the laws, and was bringing home his wages every Saturday night to the poor old mother, whose prayers for him were now full of joyful thanksgiving.

Aleck's recruit went on step by step—won an education, entered college, finally studied for the ministry, and is to-day the successful, hard-working pastor of a prosperous church.

All this is true, although it does seem stranger than fiction. For, though Aleck's name was not really Aleck, nor Tim's name Tim, yet both Tim and Aleck were real boys, the sermon Aleck heard was really blessed to a hearer who became at once a doer of the word, and every incident in this story of Aleck's recruit did really take place.—Sunday School Times.

WHAT THEY READ.

The Congregationalist recently invited its young readers, under twenty years of age, to send in a list of the twenty books which they best enjoyed reading and valued most highly. From this list our contemporary was to select the twenty volumes preferred by the largest number of competitors, and those who came nearest to the popular choice thus expressed were to receive certain awards. The offer was kept open until November 15. There were received in all 1,674 lists; of these 378 proved defective and were accordingly ruled out of the competition. Of the 1,296 others, 709 came from young folks over twelve years of age. Their choice was as follows:

Little Women	499	Ramona	207
Uncle Tom's Cabin	461	John Halifax	187
Ben Hur	447	The Bible	186
Little Lord Fauntleroy	438	Tom Brown at Rugby	183
Little Men	342	Aunt Jo's Boys	182
Ivanhoe	279	Longfellow's Poems	174
David Copperfield	253	Swiss Family Robinson	156
Pilgrim's Progress	235	Eight Cousins	150
An Old-Fashioned Girl	224	Youth's Companion	126
Robinson Crusoe	212	Boy's of '76	115

The 487 competitors among the younger class of readers made a choice of twelve of the same books as their elders, their lists standing thus:

Little Lord Fauntleroy	377	Eight Cousins	122
Little Women	272	Five Little Peppers	118
Robinson Crusoe	245	Anderson's Fairy Tales	109
Swiss Family Robinson	193	Grimm's Fairy Tales	108
Uncle Tom's Cabin	179	Under the Lilacs	100
Little Men	174	Youth's Companion	99
Pilgrim's Progress	153	The Bible	98
Sarah Crewe	149	Hans Brinker	88
Aunt Jo's Boys	142	Arabian Nights	86
An Old-Fashioned Girl	142	Alice in Wonderland	84

Probably the majority of the replies were received from the New England States, and may be accepted as showing the literary tastes of the young people in New England homes.—United Presbyterian.

The Still Hour.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 6, 1890.

BY REV. C. C. HARRAH.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

(Luke 6; Acts 7–12.)

Sunday, 6; Luke 6. Verse 9, Acts of mercy and necessity are lawful on the Sabbath. In these times when there is so much Sabbath desecration, we cannot be too careful to abstain from anything which is improper on this holy day. Verse 20, This Sermon on the Mount will bear many readings and much prayerful study. It is best understood in the light of our Saviour's own life. He fulfilled in His conduct the rules of life here given.

Monday, 7; Acts 7. Verse 1, Stephen shows in this discourse, that the more gloriously God manifested His grace to Israel, even from the beginning, the more perverse and ungrateful was the conduct of the people. Verse 55, While his hearers yielded more and more to their violent passions, Stephen's soul was full of the Holy Spirit; and looking up, full of faith and hope, he saw Jesus standing ready to receive His faithful witness.

Tuesday, 8; Acts 8. Verse 1, This persecution was the means of scattering the disciples abroad, so that the gospel was preached everywhere. Our Lord is able to use the evil-doing of His enemies as a means for extending His kingdom. Verse 13, The example of Simon shows us that there are those who believe, but who do not adopt the true faith. True faith moves the heart, and the renewed soul abides in the ways of truth.

Wednesday, 9; Acts 9. Verse 5, By the grace of God, the worst of persecutors may become the greatest of saints. It is a faithful saying that Jesus is able to save the chief of sinners. I Tim. 1:15. Verse 16, In one way and another God prepares His instruments to do His work. Sometimes it is through suffering that one is brought into the courage of faith, and has his heart filled with Christian joy. Verse 22, The convert who begins by sincerely asking, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do" (Verse 6), and who keeps that right disciple spirit, will increase more and more in strength.

Thursday, 10; Acts 10. Verse 2, God everywhere commends those who regularly offer prayers and supplications to Him, and who habitually perform acts of charity. Verse 35, God's love extends to every individual and to all nations, and He would have all men come to a knowledge of the truth and be saved. I Tim. 2:4. Verse 44, This is the Pentecost of the Gentiles; from this time on they share equally with the Jews in the blessings of the gospel.

Friday, 11; Acts 11. Verse 2, There were many occasions in the apostolic church that called forth differences of opinion, but they did not divide and organize different churches because of these differences. We should make more of our vital faith and less of our opinions. Verse 21, The whole church became preachers of the gospel, and the Lord blessed their labors and many were saved. Acts 12. Verse 5, What would we do if we could not pray in times of trouble? Verse 15, It seems that they prayed for something that they hardly expected. God has surprises for His people in His answers to prayer. Verse 24, One enemy after another will pass away, but the kingdom will continue to grow and the name of Jesus will continue to be exalted.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(Temperance Work by Moral Suasion. Isaiah 28:1-4.)

There are the two necessary lines of temperance work, prohibition and moral suasion.

1. So far as the temperance work has to do with the heart, and with the formation of a new life in those who are depraved by appetite, the wise and right method is to use that truth of the Word of God which will move the mind and heart, and, by all the means of moral suasion, produce a sentiment in favor of reform. Civil law can remove those objects which feed and stimulate bad passions, but it cannot change the vicious thirst and the depraved disposition.

2. Moral suasion work is necessary to prepare the way for effective temperance legislation. It applies the truth to the heart and will of the people so as to persuade them to do well, and law has a foundation of moral sentiment on which to rest, and will be enforced.

3. Moral suasion in the temperance movement is continually necessary in order to keep up that educating work among the young which is the only safe ground of hope for the future. If the young are brought up so as to have a high tone of moral sentiment, they will be certain to put this sentiment into prohibitory law.

HOLD FAST.

BY LUELLA CLARK.

Hold fast to hope: though suns have set
And rayless night the earth o'erspread.
In order, strength and beauty yet
Heaven's countless shining hosts are led.

Hold fast: what boots the tempter's strife?
Though waves may roar and winds way wail,
Thy buoyant bark—a thing of life—
Shall face unharmed the fiercest gale.

Hold fast: though cruel wrong bear sway,
The right shall triumph: strife shall cease,
And, soon or late, will come a day
Of clearer vision, deeper peace.

Hold fast: no tide of war or wave
Can move the anchor of thy trust;
Heaven-held, strong shall it be to save
When earthly thrones have turned to dust.

Hold fast: the sun no more may rise
And moons may wax and wane no more.
Still where thou art shall cloudless skies
Bend bright above a peaceful shore.

THE GOOD EMPRESS.

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

Paul exhorts that "supplications, prayers, and giving of thanks be made for kings, and for all that are in authority." We can give thanks with good grace when we think of the beautiful life of Augusta Victoria, Empress of Germany.

Crowned women have borne no small part in European affairs. Napoleon's star westered to its setting when he took the crown from the head of Josephine. But for that cruel blunder he might have had Europe at his feet. The Empress Eugenie, under her Jesuit confessor's counsel, urged Louis Napoleon into the conflict that dethroned him, calling it her war. It reconstructed the map of the Continent.

With what wise, womanly skill Victoria has ruled England for more than half a century. Indeed, we cannot forget that the three English reigns in which literature and the peaceful arts prospered most, were those of Elizabeth, Anne and Victoria.

This excellent German Empress, for whom we "give thanks," was carefully educated by her father, the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, in a little, country village. Her home life was simple and loving. In illustration of her kindness to the poor, we are told of the princess and her sister pushing an old woman's wheelbarrow to the top of a hill, and of the custom of the family to let their children invite to the castle every Christmas eve, fifty of the poorest people in the little town, loading them with presents.

From her childhood this lady has given evidence of genuine piety; and since she became empress, she has used her power to help all benevolent and Christian institutions. Through her influence her husband, who was then the crown-prince, presided over a meeting of the Berlin City Mission. On account of the political position of the leader of the mission, the Prince and Princess were bitterly persecuted for this expression of sympathy with the work. They met the storm with courage and patience, not abating in the least their interest in the cause of Christ. They have always shown themselves ready to give their influence to help the Evangelical Church Aid Society, the hospitals and all Christly enterprises.

With all her public work, her sweet home duties are never neglected. Her five little boys are taught by her the simple, earnest piety that made her own home life so lovely and glad. It is no small matter to have a beautiful Christian mother at the head of the court of one of the greatest nations in Europe.

We heard Clara Barton speak in one of our conventions of an evening's talk with the old Emperor of Germany in which he declared that he would have it distinctly understood by all the world that it was not his military prowess or statesmanship that raised his country to first rank among the Great Powers, but the hand of God. The present emperor is said to carry with him his grandfather's Bible, making its truth his guide. It is a good Providence that has placed at the head of the great German people a man and woman of good family life, and who are true, earnest, fearless Christians.

THE FLOWER MISSION.

BY ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS.

[At the request of Miss Jennie Casseday, superintendent of the National Flower Mission, who is too ill to write a message herself, we gladly publish this excellent article from the Woman's Journal, of Ottawa, Canada.—ED.]

The chief aim of the Flower Mission is to comfort the sick, the weary, the lonely and the sorrowful. It uses flowers as its letter of introduction and adds a Scripture text to each little bouquet as a reminder of the Heavenly Friend whose loving sympathy is round about His children even though they know it not. Whenever possible it visits hospitals, carrying comfort and blessing wherever it goes, and many a weary sufferer is cheered and refreshed by the fragrant gifts and gentle words of the Flower Missionary.

In urging a country union to take up this department, the most common objections met with by the Provincial superintendents are that the W. C. T. U. in that place has "few members; the town is small; it has no hospital, and there are no families too poor to have some plants of their own." If a large membership, a large town and a hospital were necessary adjuncts to a Flower Mission, and if our flowers and texts were to be sent only to the very poor, as we send bread to famine-stricken sufferers in China, these excuses would be most convincing, but experience has proved that the delicate compliment of a gift of lovely flowers is appreciated by both rich and poor. Sickness, sorrow and death find entrance to the smallest hamlet, and where they come there also is work for the Flower Missionary. Indeed, many a small country Flower Mission does as much real personal work in its care for the sick, the aged and the oppressed in its neighborhood as city missions which only visit hospitals. Especially is this true when we wish to make the ministrations of the Flower Mission pave the way for direct temperance work. It may require many visits, and great patience and tact before the friendliness displayed by the Flower Missionary will meet with a response, and only then is it wise to offer a temperance pledge. Do you say, "All this takes time; it would be far easier to make up two or three hundred bouquets and send them around by a messenger." You are right; it would be easier to send them as you suggest, and, as far as mere figures are concerned, would make a larger showing in your annual report; but I must confess to a keen appreciation of the feelings of the boy who refused to send his flowers by the committee, saying he wished to carry them to the sick people himself, "for," added he, "I don't think I should care very much about second-hand flowers." Committees must sometimes do the work of distribution, but it has been truly said by Frances Power Cobb that: "It is a law of human nature that the sentiment of sympathy should be drawn forth by personal service to the suffering, and feelings of gratitude and affection by the receipt of such personal service."

Every invalid member of the union itself should be regularly visited, for, besides the good it will do her in keeping alive and fostering her interest in temperance work, this custom secures more regular attendance at the meetings, and greatly helps in dealing with that class of outsiders who would be pleased with the attention if only sure they were not being patronized. To illustrate: A few days ago I carried a bouquet and text to a young girl who was ill. She was delighted with the gift until I happened to say I brought it from the W. C. T. U. Flower Mission, when I was immediately questioned as to what the Flower Mission was, and if it only took flowers to "poor folks." Fortunately I could tell her we sent them to anyone to whom we thought they would be a comfort, and mentioned a distinguished lady, of whom she knew, to whom they were sent during a severe illness, and who highly prized these little outside messages of sympathy, although she was the owner of many beautiful plants. It was amusing to notice how quickly this explanation quieted the proud girl's evident suspicion that I might perhaps go home and write in my diary, "Carried flowers and texts to another poor heathen to-day."

A pleasing feature of the Flower Mission department, and one peculiarly adapted to our Young Woman's Unions, is the work with, and for the children. The members of the Band of Hope, Kitchen Garden, and Sewing School are supplied with seeds or slips, and encouraged to care for the growing plants during the summer. Sometimes rewards are presented in the fall to those who have been patient and persevering, and very often the children are asked to send flowers to the Mission, or bring their growing plants to decorate the Hall for the public meetings of the union. This plan enables us to show the children how to use their flowers for the good of others, and furnishes an excuse for regular visits from those in charge of the work. Entrance to the home thus gained, the Flower Missionary who has tact and a loving heart can help the children of the poorer families in many practical ways. One country union gave a "piazza and lawn party" to the Band of Hope children last fall, when the young florists had a most creditable display of plants, and felt a great deal of pride and pleasure in being thus noticed by older temperance workers.

Some people tell us that it is absurd to claim that a simple gift of flowers and a Scripture text, or the care of a growing plant can really be of use to any one. To this we answer that, so far as the texts are concerned, we have faith to believe that God's Word shall not "return unto Him void." As to the flowers themselves, the true Flower Missionary believes that our Heavenly Father so fashioned them, with their dainty beauty and exquisite perfume, that they exert a refining and elevating influence upon all beholders. Lovingly and prayerfully let us seek so to use them that they may fulfil their God-given mission.

WORDS TO THE WISE.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

A noted writer on education imagines an antiquary of the remote future puzzling over our advanced text-books and examination papers, surprised to find therein no reference to the bringing up of children, and wondering if the educators of our period could "have been so absurd as to omit all training for this gravest of responsibilities." Afterwards, in a more serious vein he thus considers the "young mother." In what was called her education "not one idea was given her respecting the methods of dealing with the opening mind. . . . And now see her with an unfolding human character committed to her charge, profoundly ignorant of the phenomena with which she has to deal, undertaking to do that which can be done but imperfectly even with the aid of the profoundest knowledge." "Is it not monstrous that the fate of a new generation should be thus left to . . . chances?"

"A word to the wise is sufficient," says the proverb. But are enough of us wise? and are the wise of us wise enough? The vital issue of the times seems to be—how best to cope with badness as it finds expression in prevalent conditions, often so appalling as to dismay even those most earnestly combating them by means of the well-known forces, philanthropy and reform. Suppose that in our vigorous warfare we pause long enough to ask, Are our methods of overcoming as effective as can be devised? Are we gaining the victory? Are reforms and philanthropies becoming less and less needed? Are we emptying the prisons? the almshouses? the various asylums? Are policemen and police courts becoming things of the past? Do we hear less of political corruption? of defalcation? Are the distillery fires extinguished? Does honor rule in business? Is the social evil on the decrease? Does our present civilization suggest that "we are all members one of another?"

Truly the view is not encouraging; yet think of the immense contributions levied for our long protracted warfare. Every available resource taxed—time, means, thought, invention, executive ability, energy, labor, enthusiasm, love, sympathy—the best that humanity possesses, freely offered up to sustain the conflict. Yet still do thousands and tens of thousands of toilers starve that employers may grow rich; crime abounds—a large per cent of it caused by liquor drinking—money controls legislation and secures position; the general adulteration of goods, and other forms of dishonesty are thought matters of course; disreputable houses are becoming city institutions, and city magistrates declare publicly that prostitution must and ever will exist, and should therefore be licensed and legally made safe for their patrons by medical examinations of the inmates. To prove the need of this latter measure, a city grand jury says, "Statisticians affirm that more than forty per cent of the young men growing up in large cities are unfit for the most sacred relations of life," and medical authorities urge it for "the safety of innocent wives and children." Recruits for the institutions thus legally recognized and protected are secured by trickery, by deceptive advertisements, and by importations of dupes from foreign countries. In some places the legal taxes imposed on their inmates go toward paying the state expenses.

Now all conduct, good or bad, is but individual character expressed, and the especial conditions we are now considering as expressed in conduct, show individual characters lacking in honor, in self-restraint, in self-respect, in purity, in fidelity, in integrity, and in high purpose. As our writer suggests, these lacks can be supplied by a home training which could be given by truly enlightened fathers and mothers. The mother has the larger opportunity. Indeed, it is constantly told us in regard to this home training, that it is woman's special vocation. Strange that she should be educated in every direction except that of her declared vocation, when even common sense would demand a special education for that.

Methods of giving such special education will be suggested by further "Words to the Wise."

THE KINDERGARTEN.

Miss Willard says: "This is the greatest theme, next to salvation by faith, that can engage a woman's heart and brain." Its importance comes from it being the work of prevention, a nobler work, even, than that of rescue. It goes to the fountain-head and seeks to cleanse it, that the outflowing streams may be pure. Some of the noblest women in this and other lands are devoting their lives to the work of bringing the blessings of the kindergarten to the poor little waifs, the miserable "mites of humanity" who swarm in the low haunts of great cities and who, without the kindergarten, will develop into its dangerous classes. Among such noble women, Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper stands preëminent, as the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association, of which she is the head, is first among these beneficent institutions. Its tenth annual report lies before us, and nothing of more thrilling interest has come to our table this season. Its review of the decade shows that it commenced ten years ago, with only a monthly pledge of $7.50, but with unbounded faith in God and His people; that faith has had such abundant fruition that at the close of its tenth year, we find the Association supporting nineteen kindergartens with an enrollment of 1,517 little children to whom the kindergarten is a veritable heaven in contrast with the squalor and the sin of their homes, and that it has had entrusted to it to do the work $25,295. So economically and wisely has this trust been executed that every dollar seems to have been made to do the work of two.

The report gives suggestive glimpses into the homes from which the children come; in one a drunken father had almost killed his wife, but she, with a wife's loyalty, told the visitor that she was cutting wood and a piece hit her; the lady sympathized with her too much to hint that she knew that her husband had hold of the other end of the stick. One teacher tells of a darling boy, not four years old, a perfect picture, who had been absent for a week. On being asked if he had been sick he said: "No sick, fuss in our alley—at our house papa hit mamma, and mamma said naughty cuss words and I cried." When asked why his papa hit his mamma, in a tone of the greatest grief he replied, "'Cause he drinks beer." Volumes of arguments against beer and whisky can be framed from the reports of these schools. The testimony is reiterated that drunkenness and laziness are the real causes of all poverty in San Francisco. Mrs. Cooper considers Tar Flats, the region from the water front back to Beale street and north to Folsom, and the quarter known as Butchertown, as the worst in the city as regards the abuse of little children. There is more crime in "Barbary Coast" inhabited by French and Italians, but she says their chief drink is whisky, and it does not debase like the so-called beer used by the Irish and other races on Tar Flats. The outhern aces may abuse their families when drunk, but at other times they really care for them, and the children when taken young, and brought up decently, develop no bad, ancestral traits—their bodies are sound and their minds bright. But on the Flats she finds life sodden and aimless, the children born of drunken parents often showing deformity, mental deficiency and inherited disease. Sometimes in their visits the kindergartners find the mothers lying drunk and unconscious on the floor.

Out of these homes, or haunts, the free kindergarten takes the children, too young for the temperance school, but not too young to learn the lessons of evil constantly before their eyes, and with a tenderness learned of Him who gathers the lambs in His bosom, leads them into the green pastures and beside the still waters where souls can grow. As Florence Kollock truly says: "In the work of the Free Kindergarten is found the true solution of the great problems, intemperance, idleness, ignorance and crime. It is the most scientific treatment ever applied to these monster evils—a treatment from which there is no escaping the cure, so true as the work of the school is extended."

Business men are coming to appreciate the value of this work in its twofold relations to morals and to the industries. The Produce Exchange of San Francisco sustains one of the kindergartens, the first example in this country of a commercial organization recognizing the practical utility of this work. A well-known business man, in sending a generous donation, wrote: "The community could better afford to lose anything else than this sort of work with these little street Arabs. I've been watching this kindergarten for four years, and I know what I am talking about." When it became necessary to give up the school at Tar Flats because the building was to give place to one for "building cars instead of character," a prominent manufacturer offered to take a subscription paper around among the manufacturing establishments, and raise all the money needed to re-establish the school. He said, "I know how our rich men around these manufacturing establishments feel about this work."

The men and women of San Francisco have proven their faith in the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association, by giving to it $100,515 during the decade of its existence; of this sum Mrs. Leland Stanford has given $45,000, and the more priceless Macedonian gift of herself in personal work and supervision of the association of which she is honorary president. It has enlisted the warmest sympathies of the best people, not only of the Pacific Coast but of the whole nation. When the National Educational Association met in San Francisco, few things in that wonder-city elicited greater interest and warmer commendation than the work of this organization; the local executive committee gave graceful proof of this by sending its treasurer a check for $1,000 at the close of the convention. The National Commissioner of Education, Hon. W. T. Harris, bears the strongest testimony to the value of its work, and Labor Commissioner Tobin, recognizing that the foundation for trade labor is being laid in the kindergarten through its education of hand and eye, has put this association into communication with nearly all the Labor Bureaus in the country. Various State Boards of Charities have signified their appreciation of the kindergarten as a most effective preventive measure. Eastern visitors to the coast find few things of more interest than the work of this association; it so impressed Miss Willard on her first visit, that at her earnest solicitation, the W. C. T. U. of that city established in connection with it the first free kindergarten of the W. C. T. U. Now it numbers them by scores and feels that no department of its work is more Christlike. A sagacious business man from New England, after visiting the Golden Gate Kindergartens, watching carefully the children's work and comprehending the bearing of such training upon the future of the child, remarked: "I wish the leading manufacturers of New England could see such a work as this, they would not fail to discern the value of such training for the cultivation of mechanical skill in the use of the hands and the unfolding of the powers of observation and the inventive faculties." Manufacturers can see such work done, for there is now scarcely a center of population where it is not carried on to a greater or less degree. May their eyes and all eyes be opened to see the glorious possibilities enfolded in this work, which loving mother hearts are doing from love of the Master. It gives added proof to the sometimes derided proposition that the sympathetic intuitions of woman often produce most practical results; the whole race of "practical Gadgrinds" never invented anything that is accomplishing so much in proportion to the investment, for the industries, as well as the morals of the community as these sneered-at "play schools" which have their foundations deep down in the mother heart, which itself rests on the heart of God.

The kindergarten idea takes hold on the very springs of life, as Mrs. Cooper shows in the paper she prepared for the National Educational Association. We are glad to give a few of her grand words to our hundreds of thousands of readers, for they are worthy to be written in gold. "To secure the best conditions for unfolding the latent possibilities of the child, is the supreme work of the kindergarten. And so we say again, parents must be what they would have their children to be. There must be genuine nobility bequeathed as an inheritance. There must be fewer shriveled, stunted travesties of humanity, 'half-minted with the royal stamp of man.' Let superabounding life enkindle life; let strength beget strength; let power invoke power; let beauty of soul insure soul-beauty; let virtue bequeath virtue; for thus are heroes bred, full of opulence of being from the earliest hour of birth, and plethoric with life and vitality. Let mothers bind their children to their hearts with the silken ligaments of love ere they see the light. Let every faculty and attainment be made to pay tribute to the coming child; let mentality be tense and active; let the spirit of conscientiousness be in full play; let there be a chivalric regard for every motherly duty; let there be a more generous intermixture of the noble, Madonna stamp of motherhood—self-consecrated, unselfish, and devoted; let mothers oftener sing an exultant magnificat, and we shall oftener behold the majesty and beauty of physical perfection wedded to the finely-tempered, well-endowed, flexible intellect, and all irradiated by a gentleness, love and sympathy that will make the world richer for that life."

We cannot close the book giving record of such rare, Christlike work done, without quoting from its tribute to the Greatheart who made so much of its work possible—Halsey Fenimore Cooper, who has "passed through the gates into the city." "If I have accomplished anything in my life," says Mrs. Cooper, "I owe it to my husband. He has been my strong staff, my beautiful rod, my helper everywhere, and the inspiration of my life." Those who knew him in his daily life can well understand that this is true. He gladly dropped out of sight himself if he might aid his wife in her works of charity, and advance the interests they both loved. No night was so dark, no storm so great as to hinder him if there were sick or destitute to be ministered to. Had some poor soul poured its tale of sorrow into Mrs. Cooper's ear, she always found a sympathizer in her husband, who was ever ready to serve the poorest and humblest, and was glad to share the many burdens laid upon the sympathetic heart of her who was more than life to him. Great white-souled man! Cheer and sunshine went everywhere with him; every face brightened at his coming, and the downcast and disheartened were uplifted and encouraged by his presence. The kindergarten work was especially dear to him; everywhere coöperating with his wife, he was ready to serve in the humblest place, if only Mrs. Cooper could be helped and the little children blessed.

ECONOMICS AND INTEMPERANCE.

Even those most conversant with the evils of intemperance hardly estimate aright their magnitude. In this period of the world's history when economic science is approximating more closely to absolute accuracy than ever before, few students of its problems have justly measured the waste of material and production caused by the use of liquor. In the city of New York with its adjacent suburbs of Brooklyn and Jersey City, there lives a population of at least three millions of souls. In the metropolis itself 9,000 saloons are licensed, in Jersey City, 1,000, and in Brooklyn four times that number. These are situated in the busiest and most accessible portion of the three cities. That they are centers of contamination, plague spots of wretchedness, hot-beds of crime and vice, need not here be stated. It is the economic question with which we have now to deal.

These 14,000 dens of corruption, more frequently than otherwise, are situated upon street corners, so that the average frontage of each must be more than twenty-five feet rather than less; however, let this be the basis of calculation. We then find that if these saloons were extended in a straight line side by side and touching each other, there would be a row of groggeries stretching 350,000 feet, or a trifle more than sixty-six and one-quarter miles in length. This is just about two-thirds the distance between New York and Philadelphia.

In imagination let us take hold of one end of this row of saloons and draw it up facing the other end and parallel with it. We shall then have a street slightly more than thirty-three miles long, adown which flit shadowy forms, despairing, broken-hearted, gaunt, wasted and hopeless, the ghosts of the drunkard's victims.

But never mind these dumb, gaunt wraiths; we are dealing not with emotions, but with statistics. Let us count the cost of these dens to those who support them.

On an average it is estimated that fifteen dollars per day is spent in liquor, in each; a less amount and they would fail. Consequently, $5,500 are annually spent in each saloon for rum, gin, brandy, whisky, absinthe, ale, beer, and the wines. Multiply this by 14,000 and we have an expenditure of seventy-six millions and six hundred and fifty thousands of dollars every year, for strong drink alone in the metropolis and its suburbs. This gives an average of twenty-five dollars for every man, woman and child within the specified area.

That this estimate must be rather less than above the truth, is evident. "Stylish" saloons, like that at the Hoffman House, do a business amounting daily to hundreds of dollars, instead of the paltry sum of fifteen dollars. Therefore, the average expenditure for liquor must be more than twenty-five dollars.

Now at the least computation four-fifths of this population, embracing the majority of women, all the children and the total abstainers among men, never patronize the saloon. Therefore the remaining non-abstainers, one-fifth in number, expend on the average one hundred dollars annually for strong drink. That is just so much taken out of the necessities of life and expended on luxuries (?)

Let us suppose this $76,650,000 applied to the rent, food, fuel and clothing of the class from which it is chiefly drawn. What would that mean? It would mean the abolition of dire poverty. It would mean wholesome departments, nourishing food and decent clothing. Properly spent it would mean the extinction of mendicancy and pauperism. It would also mean the rearing of children in decency so that the next generation would be far above the present. It would mean the beginning of a new era.

Widening our observation from the metropolis to the entire country, we find that 200,000 saloons withdraw 400,000 men from productive industries and absorb outright $100,000,000. These stupendous facts tell their own story and draw their own moral.

Let us suppose these millions of dollars spent for beneficence, for the building of beautiful homes, and for the endowment of schools devoted to science, art, industries, education and religion! What might not be the status of the United States could this money only be withdrawn from the endowment of paupers, lunatic asylums, hospitals, prisons and potter's fields!

What stands in the way of this change?

What, excepting a want of comprehension of the first principles of Christianity? What, except that that ignorance which is the root of selfishness, and selfishness which is the root of greed, and greed which is the root of politics, still control the civilization of the nineteenth century.

THE NATIONAL PAGEANT IN CHICAGO.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse is president of the Chicago Foundlings' Home, the Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago, the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and the Women's (Temple) Building Association. Indeed, she is the chief woman among the "Electric City's" charities. What she does is on a large scale, and "whatsoever she doeth hath prospered." So, when Mrs. Carse arranged with that intrepid young manager, Miss Cora Scott Pond, of Boston, to have her "National Pageant" given in Chicago for the benefit of the Foundlings' Home and the Bethesda Day Nursery and Kindergarten, the knowing ones said, "That means this greatest of entertainments will reach high water-mark."

And so it did. Seven hundred of "our best people" participated; over seven hundred carriages stood in line along the splendid streets that inclose Chicago's three-million dollar Auditorium, and though it cost $2,000 to give the exhibition, it cleared $6,000 for the benefit of charity.

The scene was memorable: Five thousand people, all concentering their gaze on the magnificent living pictures of America's history to the tune of choicest music, national airs and songs of home; an avalanche of humanity in the huge hall, and gorgeous scenes springing up to meet them on the platform; each seat so related to the stage that everybody's view was unobstructed; the ladies with bonnets off that none might lose the scene because of their untimely head-gear; the thousands of electric lights blazing like a firmament of newly-lighted stars, then all the light thrown on the stage where Isabella on her throne receives Columbus; the pilgrims land; the courtship of Miles Standish brings John Alden to the front; Bunker Hill Battle is fought once more, while deep voices in the distance sing "The Sword of Bunker Hill"; Washington and Lafayette and suite give a reception; an old-fashioned New England home with twenty-two children in it is depicted; heroic Anne Hutchinson is banished; then come scenes from the late war; emancipation; the reunited states symbolized by lovely maidens; emancipation and its joy; Chicago at the World's Fair, and finally woman's sphere in modern days, with all Chicago's notable women in the foreground—ministers, doctors, lawyers, editors, business women and philanthropists. The central group in this great scene consisted of Mary A. Livermore and Frances E. Willard (orators); Harriet Hosmer, the famous sculptor, now sojourning in Chicago, and Matilda B. Carse, "the woman who dared!" High above them all upon her pedestal rose the "Goddess of Liberty," Mrs. Katherine L. Fiske, whose tuneful voice led in the closing hymn, "America." The departure of Chicago's First Regiment for the war in 1861, was, perhaps, beyond all others, popular with the audience. Mrs. Livermore was never more majestic than in her role of historian, setting forth our national history in glowing language, and herself the impersonation of its best accomplishment. Miss Helen L. Hood was a power behind the throne as she is always. Miss Cora Scott Pond is a genius in her way, and is helping the good causes of patriotism, charity and woman by this Pageant, of which she is the inventor and patentee, which has been given in most of our chief cities, and goes to Australia and Great Britain later on.

THE concurrent testimony of travelers proves that appalling immorality exists among the people of Alaska. Dr. Sheldon Jackson, general agent of education for the territory, reports serious obstacles to missionary work in native customs which are especially demoralizing to girls. By request of the Senate Investigating Committee, one of the teachers has prepared a letter to Congress, detailing the difficulties, and suggesting some remedies. She asks protection for girls, sold by their parents to white men for immoral purposes, for children married against their will, and for orphans who are sold into slavery. The natives buy their wives. It often happens that parents buy a wife for a baby boy, and the children are raised together. Since the advent of the white miner in Alaskan society, girls are leased, and yield such an income that their parents refuse to allow them to go to school. The local courts sustain this infamous traffic, by declaring the parents' right to control their children, and girls who beg to be taken into the mission schools cannot be admitted without their parents' consent. With a care for the future worthy of better application, native couples adopt young children for second husband or wife, in case the first should die. Boys in their teens in this way become husbands of crippled old women. The letter is said to make specifications which are unfit for public print. This Christian woman's brave exposure of social corruption, under the shadow of the American flag, must be heeded, and Congress can hardly fail to adopt some measures to aid the missionaries in their difficult task. Drunkenness is almost universal among natives and miners. Three pages of Kate Field's Washington were recently occupied with an attempt to prove that this general intemperance is due to the prohibitory law there—not enforced—citing it as an example of what prohibition does for a territory. Her remedy is California wines. This lengthy article, so like a patent medicine advertisement, is its own answer. Dr. Jackson has a somewhat different interpretation of the bibulous habits prevailing in the extreme northwest. He says: "President Arthur sent there a set of drunkards and gamblers. President Cleveland removed those officials because they were hostile to the missionaries, and then appointed another set just like them. One District judge has fled to British territory under charges of forgery and two of his successors were drunkards. With such an official atmosphere in the territory the missionaries have encountered serious obstacles in pleading the cause of right and morality. President Arthur's appointees banded together to drive out the missionaries because they did not wish their habitual practices held up to the natives as immoral. The present governor, appointed by President Harrison, is an old-fashioned New England Congregationalist from Vermont. He goes to church every Sunday, and people are still talking about the fact that he teaches a Bible class. His example has revolutionized public sentiment, and it is now popular for white men in Alaska to go to church at least once on Sunday, and the government officials usually go, no matter how much they may swear about the missionaries during the week. The natives are docile and tractable and follow naturally the example of white superiors." Had President Arthur appointed General Fisk governor of Alaska, supporting him with officials of like mind with himself, the prohibitory law of the territory might have produced different results.

THE Reform Syndicate founded by Rev. Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts is the happiest new departure that we have in journalism. Nothing more helpful to the temperance reform, to the labor reform, to Sabbath reform, etc., can possibly occur, than that the broadside regularly sent out by this syndicate, giving the latest news and most expert opinion on all those phases of philanthropy, should be widely circulated. We sincerely hope the white-ribboners will do their utmost to forward this endeavor. Miss Willard says of it: "All the presidents of states have, I think, received specimen pages, and they certainly cannot better help our many-sided movement than to induce their local editors, church editors, etc., to patronize this witty invention of Dr. Crafts, who has a sixth sense for journalism, and cannot fail to make this enterprise a noble success, if he is at all sustained by the good people whose interests will be most forwarded by the largest possible attainment in the direction that he seeks."

ACCORDING to the report presented at the recent annual meeting of the Irish Temperance League at Belfast, the arrests for drunkenness in Ireland have decreased from 92,927 in 1884 to 87,582 in 1888, with a lessened consumption of liquors making a net reduction of $2,692,522 in Ireland's yearly drink bill.

The Watch-Tower.

A lovely idea it is to link Easter with thoughts of the purified body, meet temple for the Saviour to dwell in. This is what Miss Julia Coleman has done in her Easter cards. On them surrounding the flower-twined cross, speaking of the glad resurrection, are such words as these from McDonald: "I want to help you grow as beautiful as God meant you to be when He thought of you first." And these from Keble: "For thee He died, for thee He lives again." And with it united this sentiment:

"Present your bodies—oh, how pure and sweet
They should be for such presentation meet."

Another card bears this stanza:

"Christ hath risen!
Open your hearts and let Him in.
Keep both soul and body clean,
He will sup with you."

Marriage in the new civilization will be made not the refuge of women who are weak and dependent, but the glory of women who are gifted and strong. This can never be until women have been themselves made independent in purse and person by our marriage laws, and developed in intellect by the widest opportunities of culture.—Frances E. Willard.

Bishop Vincent, who is one of Miss Willard's most kindly personal friends, almost never omits to invite her to Chautauqua, and has done so in all the later years, but she has been unable to accept on account of the numerous smaller Chautauquas where she thinks so much temperance light does not concentrate, and to which she is pledged to go; accepting more summer engagements this year than at any previous time.

Good-will can conquer anything. "Love is the Holy Ghost within, and hate is the unpardonable sin." Point me to a mortal who was ever yet hated into doing a thing you wished to have him do, and I will start a museum that shall outreach Barnum's, though it has but one cage in it, with that person inside. It is not more true that water will put out a fire than that the only spiritual chemical that will dissolve opposition, ugliness, and original sin, is the love of the heart of God, and that mirror of it which the human heart may furnish.

Let total abstainers beware of a beverage called "Hop Soda," masquerading as a temperance drink. It has been manufactured on a large scale at Fairport, N. Y. Its effects betrayed it. The W. C. T. U., without the aid of chemical research, pronounced it an intoxicant. There is no surer re-agent for testing the properties of a drink, than a boy, and no more reliable observer than his mother. Samples were finally sent to the internal revenue department for analysis; Hop Soda was found to be pure beer, and its manufacturer promptly placed under arrest for violation of the internal revenue laws. His offense is not the debauching of boys, but the doing it without a government permit!

Mrs. Chant held fourteen meetings during her recent visit to Baltimore. Several of these were in fashionable and most conservative churches, whose doors were rarely, if ever before, opened for a woman speaker. Mrs. Chant spoke from within the chancel on several occasions, and at St. Peters P. E., three clergymen in their robes assisted at the services. "Home Influence," "The Beatitudes," "The Fruits of the Spirit," and "Rescue Work," were the principal subjects of her addresses. The collections were ample for all expenses.

The women engaged in carrying on the Massachusetts Home for Intemperate Women, the first of its kind founded in the United States, are very much encouraged by their success. The Home is located at 41 Worcester street, Boston, and is industrial as well as reformatory. A large laundry receives work from all parts of the city; plain sewing and button-holes are done with exquisite care. No matter how poor, forlorn, or friendless the woman is when she enters this friendly refuge, she is never sent away without a place to go to and clothing suitable for her needs. The secret of success lies in the fact that a strong home influence is thrown around every inmate; there is an immense saving power in the work, and industry rules in every department. All women labor who are strong enough to do so; if ill, they are kept in their rooms and nursed back to health, if possible. The knowledge that they have learned some occupation by which they can support themselves, is a great help in many ways. One woman who had been arrested forty-five times, was taken to the Home, lifted by kindness from the depths into which she had fallen, into self-supporting lines, and for seven years she has been a hard working, self-supporting woman, happy in a life transformed.

THE LITERARY GIRL.

BY ELIZABETH PEASE.

She has been pictured as an eccentric, near-sighted, spectacled, bangless, intellectual sort of a girl. According to current report her favorite retreat is a library—or for closer security, a young ladies' boarding school—and she is quite shut away from the rest of the world by an insurmountable line of dry, scientific and immensely intellectual books. At home she figures as an encyclopedia; in society, a curious, anonymous article; in the matrimonial market, an unknown quantity.

The funny man puts her and her eye-glasses and profound speeches into his funny paper. Young Mr. Swell announces as his opinion that this sort of thing is "awfully out of place in a woman—not at all his style, don't you know?" It is enough for her to be picturesque, fascinating. And a more kindly sister remarks condescendingly, "Ah, yes, she is peculiar—rather literary, poor dear!"

Now this poor dear girl, if, indeed, such a phenomenon could be found outside of the newspaper, might fairly be judged a trifle peculiar. A young lady who coquets desperately with Greek or Latin lexicons, and is perhaps forced to spectacles to follow up her conquests and completely vanquish such unromantic things as a Hebrew or Sanscrit grammar; who sums up her list of accomplishments under the heads of calculus, surveying or international law; and finds place in life for but the one idea of brains and books,—this type of maidenhood would not meet the ideal of the world at large.

But suppose this most unnatural and unreal specimen should prove, after all, to be an exaggerated creation of that other unnatural, but too real item of humanity, the funny man. Suppose there should be some mistake about this literary girl.

Avoiding the presumption of any attempt to compare her with our men of letters, though among the latter might possibly be found those who would not gain by the comparison, one can but remark the widely differing modes of treatment prescribed for the boy and girl of literary tastes. A young man may graduate with high honors from a prominent college; he may even publish an article in the North American Review or a story in the Century, and no one suppose that henceforth he must be unfitted for society; no one mournfully predicts that ultimately he will be stamped as a fossil of some prehistoric age. But a young lady under the same unfortunate circumstances would be an object of sympathy, for she would inevitably suffer the enduring contempt of young Swell and all of his associates. Possibly she would be called "intellectual," if that were any consolation, but that dear little feminine adjective "sweet" would rarely be applied to her.

To be sure, experience teaches nothing of this sort, but what, indeed, is anything so humble and everyday, compared to the elegant authority just quoted. What though, according to one of our best writers, we find that the truest wives, mothers and sisters, housekeepers and philanthropists, as well as the women of the greatest social influence, were women of cultivated minds. Suppose we do know that the George Sands and George Eliots and Madame de Staëls of literature were not excluded from society on account of their disagreeable intellectual accomplishments? What has all that to do with the girl of to-day, who would be literary but for that dreadful appellation "strong-minded," which, in order to avoid, she is quite willing to be weak-minded. Of course she may belong to a Browning club, or write a novel, a very light one, well filled with extravagant adjectives and elegantly sprinkled with French phrases. But to be capable of thinking out any of the problems of life or of science by the aid of the best minds represented on her library shelves, to remember that she has an inside as well as an outside to her head, would this necessarily make her queer, mathematical, spectacled and blue? Are the terms "intellectual" and "agreeable," when applied to women, so nearly like two parallel lines that no amount of calculation can bring them together?

We will not take it so. Passing over the simply "good girl," the most charming young lady of the period is the one who combines an interest in her higher studies and aims in life with a degree of attention to certain little worldlinesses of style and attire, to which the best of us are perhaps not wholly indifferent, and who includes in her vocabulary some of those "trifles light as air" for the edification of certain corresponding elements in society.

Carlyle says of the intellectual man, "I confess I have no idea of a truly great man who could not be all sorts of men. For the man of true intellect is the noble-hearted man withal, the true, just, humane, and valiant man." And one likes to think this of the literary girl; to believe that the woman best adapted to make a more delightful world is the one who reads and understands the happiest thoughts of the brightest minds, and that she who loves the inspired writings of the world's grandest men and women, is, because of this culture, to be larger, lovelier, and, if you please, vastly more interesting to us all.

News from the Field.

MISSISSIPPI.

BEACON-LIGHTS.

"Lights are shining all along our shores, whose radiance should fill our hearts with gladness and hope." So wrote me recently our superintendent of juvenile work, Miss Belle Kearney, who has canvassed our Gulf coast, followed our grand water-courses, and visited our northern and eastern towns, everywhere being warmly welcomed, and never failing to organize a Y or a W. C. T. U. in any place visited in our state. Her testimony is significant, indicating the receptivity of the people to temperance instruction, even though a woman may be the teacher. In her earnestness she exclaimed, "I am proud of the girls of Mississippi and predict for them a future laden with fulfilled possibilities. In the temperance cause I have had the support of girls of every degree, from the plain girl whose life is filled with bread-winning, to the cultured leader of society. Equally cheering prospects are to be gained in the direction of the Loyal Temperance Legions who have raised funds to swell the treasury, adding works to faith. Scientific temperance instruction is gradually being introduced into the schools, and Demorest medal contests are in vogue."

Wishing to locate these beacon-lights, I interviewed by letter the watchers of the towers, and asked for facts and figures to show the range of their influences; and as varied were the data as hues of the prism; but combining all the coloring as seen through the mists of doubt and fears, a bow of hope emerges, promising that the deluge of alcohol shall recede as the tide of popular sentiment is swayed by the moral reforms that now engage the attention of the statesman, philosopher and the organization known as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Among the centers of learning in our state, forward in temperance work, as far as heard from, are Oxford, Starkville, Iwka, Brookhaven, Clinton. At Oxford, the location of the State University, which years ago opened its portals to women, is a flourishing union, whose work is revised and reported to a favorable local press. A five-mile college law protects the town from the inroads of the liquor traffic. Starkville, the seat of the Agricultural and Mechanical College, which ranks among the most successful of its kind in the United States, never has had an open saloon, the moral sentiment being strong enough to outlaw its existence before the passage of the five-mile law.

The Agricultural and Mechanical College teaches scientific temperance, using Walker's method. Mrs. Wallace's addresses there in October last provoked criticism that drew the union and sympathizers into the papers, attracting attention for some weeks, resulting in much good to temperance. The Female College and public schools instruct in scientific temperance, using Smith's text-books.

Emblazoned in shining letters on the temperance banner is Iuka, which can furnish leaven for the entire state, were other powers dead. Says the president of the Iuka W. C. T. U: "We have an interesting temperance school of one hundred pupils, meeting on the second and fourth Sabbaths. Professor Dean, principal of the Iuka Normal Institute, teaches a large class of young ladies and gentlemen. We have also an intermediate and infant class. Professor Dean has also organized a class in scientific temperance literature, and I think our town is fully awake on the subject. We have no saloons; have had none for several years."

Brookhaven, a few miles south of Jackson on the Illinois Central railroad, glories in the success of Whitworth Female College, due to the friendly espionage of the M. E. Church. A five-mile law protects the town, and the local press accepts the reports of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. B. T. Hobbs ably superintends the press work.

Clinton, ten miles west of Jackson, surrounds her male and female colleges with a five-mile cordon, and boasts that "our town has no police force, and has had none in ten years; our calaboose is partially rented, only a corner reserved for an occasional culprit; and, though once with high-license fees our town was always in debt, now, with none such, we have money in our treasury, better streets and highways than before, and in these ten years all of our institutions of learning have wonderfully improved, society has developed and we have won the respect of the state."

There is a pathos in many of the letters I have received from the presidents of the unions, lamenting that they cannot report the progress they desire; but when the record is revealed, it tells of efforts that have resulted in securing local option, the introduction of scientific temperance instruction in the schools, medal contests, and press support, as in Greenville, Crystal Springs, Booneville, Knoxville, Waynesboro, Shubuta and quaint Biloxi on the Mexican Gulf, proving that there is advancement which will ultimately develop into visible good. All armies stack arms at times, but arouse to the bugle's call. If the unions remain intact, the hour of concentrating forces will surely arrive.

The visit of Mrs. Wallace to Mississippi in October last was a revelation to many regarding woman's capacities, and although her ideas on suffrage were novel to her audiences, respect was accorded her views. In Vicksburg, Col. R. V. Booth, a prominent lawyer, gave her a graceful introduction to the many who assembled to hear her suffrage arguments, expressing his pleasure in listening to a subject never before discussed in Vicksburg. I did not hear her suffrage address, but was present when she discoursed on the "Christian Women's Warfare against the Saloon." The memory of her sweet voice haunts me still, which in its softness was as soothing as a lullaby.

In November the Rev. Sam Jones made an evangelistic tour of Mississippi, and at Meridian devoted one service to the W. C. T. U. of this state. Eight thousand dollars was the spontaneous offering of one call upon the audience. Negotiations are now pending for the construction of a building in Jackson to be used as state headquarters. A lot has been purchased, and soon the W. C. T. U. organization will be located in the capital city.

If lights have radiated along our pathway, they are now intensified by the shadows which depress, in that hopes that were brightest have faded away. For years the temperance workers of the state have labored to introduce into the public schools, by legislative authority, the study of physiology and hygiene with reference to the effect of alcohol and narcotics on the human system. The bill, as presented, passed the Legislature in 1888, but received the veto of Governor Lowry. Not dismayed, its friends made a second presentation of the bill to the session lately adjourned. The White Ribboner, our W. C. T. U. organ, edited by Mrs. Kells, thus relates the fatal issue:

It was referred to the committee on public education of which Hon. J. F. Sexton was chairman. With reasonable promptness the bill was reported back to the House with the unanimous recommendation that "it do pass." Every day we would hear, "The bill shall come up to-morrow," till we grew as weary as St. Patrick's snake, asking, "Is it to-morrow yet?" for it was not till Thursday, February 20, that it got a hearing before the House. It was lost by a vote of fifty-one "nays" to forty-nine "yeas." Three members who were committed to it were sick at home. Their votes would have gained the day for us.

The failure of the bill to pass was a surprise to most of the Legislature. The Senate was nearly solid for it, and it was believed there would be no formidable opposition in the House. There were no objectionable features in the bill. Governor Stone would have signed it, and Governor Lowry had kindly sent word, "You'll get your bill this time."

Our noble Lieutenant Governor sends this kind word of sympathy:

JACKSON, February 22, 1890.

MRS. KELLS, Dear Madam:—Much to my regret and against my earnest efforts, the House last night refused to pass the Instruction Bill. You cannot regret this more than I do. If there is one thing more than all others that will conduce to the welfare of this country, it is the education of the children on this subject. I was assured all along that the House would pass the bill, and I had prepared its way through the Senate. With kind regards, I am very respectfully,

M. M. EVANS.

I can comprehend opposition to prohibitory legislation, but when intelligence declines investigation from a philosophic standpoint there must be selfish aims restraining noble impulses, regardless of the greatest good for the greatest number.

In patience let us remember the infirmities that lead humanity astray. The petition uttered by the Divine Teacher, "Lead us not into temptation," is the ordeal of each life. If some fall by the way, let him that standeth encourage the fallen to rise again, and extend a helping hand. If temperance workers have failed to shape legislation according to their views, let them refrain from denunciations, and renew their efforts in reclaiming those who have bowed the knee to Baal.

NORTH DAKOTA.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Although for several months no word has been sent out concerning the work in the North Dakota field, yet the women of this state have been quietly doing what they could to advance the cause so dear to us all.

There are times which try men's souls, and such a time has come to the good people of this state during the past two months. Our legislature gave to us a strong enactment for the enforcement of our constitutional prohibitory law, voted in by the people last November, and for a time all seemed well, and the future of our young state looked bright and promising, notwithstanding our empty treasury, when suddenly that infamous lottery scheme, that plot to saddle upon our state a lottery for thirty or more years, came like a thunder-bolt from a clear sky upon the people of our state, who have the best interests of our commonwealth at heart, and are not willing to sell our noble birthright for a mess of pottage. Protests from all parts of the state, numerously signed, found their way into the legislative halls. Mass-meetings—indignation meetings—were held in many of the cities and towns, in order that their spirit and influence might spread like a great wave and reach even to Bismarck and overthrow the scheme. It has been said that in all this the women of the state took no part, and the question was asked, "Are the women of North Dakota in favor of the lottery?" This statement which has gone out all over our country is not a true one. The women took an active part against the passage of that disgraceful bill, and sent many protests, both by telegraph and by letter, to our legislature, and, as it is feared that the lottery question is not yet settled, the women in some of the towns are still at work gathering up names and sending in their protests. God grant that their prayers may be answered!

The suffrage bill which has been watched so closely, whose passage is so earnestly desired, after passing the Senate with a large majority, was lost in the House by one vote. Many times now have the women of our state been "so near and yet so far" from realizing their hopes on this great question, but the right will yet triumph, and they are not cast down.

A bill authorizing school boards to purchase United States flags to fly over school-houses has passed the House. Many letters have been sent to Washington by people from all parts of our state urging our United States Senators to vote in favor of the Blair Educational Bill.

The first convention of the Barnes county W. C. T. U., was held in December, at the Congregational Church of Valley City, with Mrs. L. M. Biggs, of Sanborn, the county president, in the chair. This county has been recently organized, and contains only three unions, but notwithstanding the small force of workers, the convention was a grand success. It opened at 2 p. m. with devotional exercises, followed by addresses of welcome and response, after which the president gave an outline of the work of the W. C. T. U., and questions were asked and answered, that all present might be better prepared for the work of the coming months. In the evening the Y's took part in the exercises. A beautiful

W. C. T. U. poem was recited by Miss Marion Fox, and a finely written essay on the work of the Y's was given by Miss Ida Wiser, the bright and active president of the Valley City Y. The county president then read a very interesting article which she had prepared on the National Convention, at which she was one of the delegates from our state. The state president gave a brief address, and some of the resident ministers spoke words of encouragement and cheer. Resolutions having the true ring were adopted, and all went away feeling that it had been good to be there. In January, Miss I. C. De Velling came among us for a couple of weeks and spoke in many of the towns along the line of the Northern Pacific railroad. All were much pleased with Miss De Velling, and felt that her words were laden with good, both for the work and the workers.

The ladies of the different unions have been doing missionary work these past few months by sending and carrying relief to the suffering ones of our state during this most trying winter. One union has upon its list more than twenty families which it has supplied from time to time with clothing, fuel, food, medicines, and the necessities of life. Another brave little band in a small town has raised $20 to send to the sufferers in Nelson county, besides caring for those nearer home. These are only two examples, but in all parts of the state during this hard winter the women have been obeying the divine injunction, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

The Demorest medal contests have become very popula throughout our borders, and much good has resulted from the taking up of this line of work. The little town of Leonard is soon to have its tenth contest, and is planning for a gold medal contest to be held some time in April. Miss M. H. Sowles, of Leonard, has been appointed state superintendent of contest work, and it is hoped that all unions needing aid or suggestions in regard to this work will apply to Miss Sowles at once.

It gives me great pain to be obliged to record the death of one of our faithful workers, one who has done so much for the cause we all love so well, and to whose untiring efforts in our recent campaign so much of our success is due. Mrs. J. C. White, long a faithful, active member of the Casselton union, heard the call of the Father and passed into eternal life on the morning of February 3. Mrs. White was president of the county organization during our local option campaign, and secretary of the Non-partisan Alliance in our late campaign. The Alliance, in appreciation of her faithful labors during all that hard summer and fall, sent Mrs. White as fraternal delegate to the W. C. T. U. Convention at Chicago in November. Our hearts are cast down as we think of our loss, and we know not where to look for one to fill the vacant place, but the Father called and we bow to His will, knowing that "He doeth all things well."

WISCONSIN.

NOTES OF EARNEST WORK.

Early in February Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, the talented and popular president of the Illinois W. C. T. U., came to Wisconsin in response to a call from some of the white-ribboners of the state, made many months before. Her first work was in Milwaukee, where she spent two days, lecturing to crowded houses and meeting the women in the afternoons to suggest better methods of work and to inspire them with an earnest zeal in carrying on this many-sided work of elevating and saving humanity.

From Milwaukee she went to Fond du Lac, where she remained four days doing noble, heroic service "For God and Home and Native Land." Sunday morning, February 9, she preached for the Rev. G. F. Treve, of the M. E. church, a sermon replete with the gospel of the Master, and which proved to be only a foretaste of the good things to follow. Sunday evening a union service was held in the Congregational church, which was filled to overflowing with eager and attentive hearers. Monday evening she lectured in the Baptist church to another crowded house. Tuesday evening the lecture was given in the Presbyterian church, and again the church was crowded.

The interest was so marked that men of various shades of political belief contributed the means to secure the Crescent Opera House for the lecture on Wednesday evening. It was filled by earnest listeners to hear the eloquent speaker on "Capital and Labor, and its Relation to the Liquor Traffic." Many laboring men and women listened with the deepest interest and attention to this lecture, and they must have been greatly benefited. The bondage under which the laborer and his highest interests are held to the liquor traffic was clearly pointed out, and a clearer insight into the fearful hold which the latter has gained upon the body politic was given to every one present. No lecturer has so captivated the minds and hearts of the people of Fond du Lac, as has Mrs. Rounds with her eloquent speech, her keen wit, and above all, her irresistible logic. The afternoon meetings were largely attended. New members have been added to the union, and a social purity meeting organized as a direct result of her work.

From Fond du Lac Mrs. Rounds went to Waupaca, where she met with a hearty reception and remained two days, speaking to full houses and stirring men to a keener sense of the great responsibility that rests on them as holding in their hands the interests of the community.

From Waupaca she went farther west to Chippewa Falls. In this city she lectured to good audiences on Sunday and Monday evenings, February 16 and 17. New members were gathered into the union, and much interest manifested. Tuesday, February 18, found her at Eau Claire, where she spent two days in the service of the W. C. T. U. Her first lecture was in the M. E. Church, where she was greeted with a large audience which was treated to an excellent lecture. Wednesday afternoon, in spite of a driving snow-storm, a goodly number of the faithful convened in the M. E. church, and listened to an interesting and very helpful talk on methods of work of the W. C. T. U. Wednesday evening the lecture was given in the Baptist church on "The White Cross and Social Purity movement." She delighted her audience and gave them much food for honest, earnest conviction, which can but bear a large fruitage in a higher type of thought and a truer social life. In consequence of great physical weariness and a bronchial trouble, the result of much work and many words, she was obliged to cancel her engagement at Wausau.

Friday morning, February 20, Mrs. Rounds started on her return trip over the Wisconsin Central. She lectured in Marshfield, Friday evening, to the universal acceptance, and the great delight of all who heard her.

Saturday she returned to her own Illinois "true blues."

Her trip in Wisconsin, though short so far as time and distance are concerned, will be rich in results for the unions which she visited. The universal sentiment in every place where she lectured was, "We wish she could remain with us longer," accompanied by the question, "When can we have her here again?" We hope to have her in the state again next June, immediately following our state convention in Racine. WHITE RIBBONER.

NEW JERSEY.

UNION COUNTY CONVENTION.

The eighth semi-annual convention of the W. C. T. U. was held at Elizabeth, March 12. Sessions were held in the morning, afternoon and evening, all of which were most interesting and instructive.

Mrs. S. J. C. Downs, our state president, and Mrs. J. T. Ellis, our corresponding secretary, were present, both giving many valuable suggestions regarding the work.

One of the questions on the program was, "What is the Vital Need of the W. C. T. U. at the Present Time?"

The answers were as follows: "Prayer and the power of the Holy Spirit;" "Consecrated common sense;" "The assistance of the ministers and of Christian men;" "A more vigilant care of the children."

Papers were read by the delegates on "Tobacco and Narcotics;" "Sunday-school Work;" and "Prison Work."

A large audience gathered in the evening to listen to Mrs. Barney, National superintendent of prison work, who was to speak on the subject "From Jerusalem to Jericho." The audience gave her marked attention, and all went home feeling well repaid with the day's work.

MARYLAND.

WORK AT UNION BRIDGE.

Union Bridge now has three temperance organizations: The local W. C. T. U., the Y, and the Loyal Temperance Legion. The W. C. T. U. was reorganized September, 1889; it has twenty active members and seven honorary members. It holds regular monthly meetings, and an occasional public meeting. Its first public meeting, held a few weeks ago, was an interesting occasion. Much interest is manifested by the members, and new names are added from month to month. President, Mrs. M. E. McLinn; secretary, Mrs. A. B. Dumm; treasurer, Mrs. John Weaver.

The Y was organized October 2, 1888. It is composed of forty members, of whom twenty-six are active and fourteen honorary. Since January 1, fourteen members have been added. Parlor meetings are held once a month, the exercises consisting of addresses, readings, music, etc. This association is very popular with the young people, and is rapidly growing in numbers and usefulness. President, Miss Ruth Hibberd; secretary, Miss Sadie Watt.

The Loyal Temperance Legion was organized in November, 1887. It now has forty-eight members. Mrs. Clayton Wolfe and Miss Ruth Hibberd have charge of this important work. Weekly meetings are held, in which the children are taught in temperance catechism, recite temperance selections and sing temperance songs. The children enjoy the meetings and enter into the exercises heartily.

The county W. C. T. U. has the following officers: President, Mrs. Wm. H. Hoffman, Uniontown; vice-president, Miss Lizzie Herr, Westminster; secretary, Mrs. George Routzalm, Uniontown; treasurer, Miss Hoffman, Uniontown. WHITE RIBBONER.

WYOMING.

NOTES OF WORK.

The year just past has been the most progressive one the W. C. T. U. of Wyoming has known since the work was started, due perhaps to two causes: A better knowledge of how and where, and more conveniences for exploring our vast territory.

After Mrs. C. M. Woodward came to us, helping very materially in organizing the northern tier of counties, the territorial president visited each point and encouraged the workers on the lines which Mrs. Woodward had started. Leaving Cheyenne by rail, she traveled north but a short distance when she was obliged to take the stage, and to ride over rough roads through an unsettled country a distance of one hundred and fifty miles, occupying twenty-seven hours of continuous riding; she passed no towns in all that trip, and only five houses. Since the annual convention Mrs. O. F. Fisher, president, has sent out letters and circulars to each point bearing upon the work mostly needed. The legislature which has just adjourned was petitioned quietly but effectively, and we rejoice that two measures in which our hearts were interested are laws to-day upon our statute book. A good Sunday law, which though passed two years ago, came up for repeal; and a good cigarette law, with a strong fine attached. The W. C. T. U. are being encouraged more than ever before for the good sense and courage they show in standing by their convictions and their National President. We hope soon to become a state. Speed the day! We feel our work to be hampered much of the time, but there has been so fine an election law passed by this legislature—or if we become a state, so fine a one in the constitution, that we shall feel that neither money, avarice nor trickery can control any longer the strong moral sentiment that is bound to sweep over our beautiful borders. GOOD WORDS AND WORK.

Miss Moore was with us January 14 and 15, and delivered an admirable address on each evening, to an attentive and appreciative audience. The lecture was held in the M. E. church. The pastor, Rev. O. L. Fisher, in a few well-chosen words, introduced the speaker and stated the object of her visit. She held the close attention of her audience to the close. It was a great pleasure to many of us to have an opportunity of hearing this cultured and refined woman on the great question of the day. Her arguments were clear and convincing, and I am sure reached the hearts and brains of her hearers. Of course we cannot estimate the good done, but we know of several young men won to the cause, and this is a rich reward. At the close of her address, by request of the W. C. T. U., she made an irresistible appeal to the pockets of her audience, which was liberally responded to.

On Wednesday afternoon an informal reception was held at the home of Mrs. Fisher, where Miss Moore was entertained. A very pleasant and profitable time was spent. We shall long remember her encouraging and hopeful words. She told us that during all the years of her work in this great cause, she had never once been discouraged. If we all had the faith and courage of this noble woman we should press on with renewed hope and zeal, although the outlook seems often disheartening, expecting to conquer "in His name," and with His help.

MAINE.

JOTTINGS.

The work in Maine is progressing in a most encouraging manner. New unions are constantly being organized, and there is a constantly increasing interest in the society.

We have been greatly favored by having Mrs. Chant with us in various sections of the state. In Portland she spoke eight times. Her audiences, which were large in the beginning, increased in numbers and expressions of interest at each meeting. She spoke on "Suffrage," "Social Life in England," "Social Purity," and "Total Abstinence and Prohibition." She also spoke for the Y's, and addressed a mothers' meeting (in place of the regular sermon) in St. Stephens' Episcopal church. Lewiston, Dexter, Bath, Bangor, and other Maine towns have been fortunate in being able to have this strong, delightful, magnetic speaker tell them so much concerning the things which "make for righteousness." We expect Mrs. Woodbridge in May and Mrs. Lathrap in June.

MICHIGAN.

ETCHINGS.

The executive committee meeting of state general officers met at Mrs. Lathrap's house, in Jackson, March 11. The many kind and helpful things done for us by our host and hostess and the nieces, will not soon be forgotten. Daily before us, hanging on the wall, was a copy of the Angelus; a rare picture, but a rarer, fairer one we saw every morning at family worship, when all gathered in the parlors with Bible in hand, and were led in the Scripture reading by the aged mother, Mrs. Torrance, who, ninety-four years old, yet reads without glasses.

Much business came before us, and on Wednesday we held a joint meeting, the local union coming in, and plans were made for the state convention to be held at Jackson, May 20 to 23. The first evening we are tendered a reception, as a body, by Mrs. Lathrap; the other evenings are to be occupied by Miss Willard, Miss Anna Shaw and Colonel Bain. The program is very full, and so planned that the meeting can but be helpful and enjoyable.

Returning from Jackson I found on my table cheering news from the field. From the first district came the word that to the Detroit Central W. C. T. U. have been sent $120 since the death of Mrs. Cushing, she having been at the head of their finance committee. The Eastern union, Detroit, is about to hold their ninth medal contest, other Detroit unions one each.

Volney Cushing begins work March 25, speaking twice in each place save one. Three new Loyal Temperance Legions have been formed, one district awarding first diplomas in the state.

From the corresponding secretary of the eighth district comes this item: "The fortieth wedding anniversary of Rev. and Mrs. James McLeod was observed by the W. C. T. U. and other friends at their hospitable home; hearty congratulations and many gifts, tokens of appreciation and love were presented; among the latter 'Memories of the Crusade,' from the author. Thirty-four of the forty years have been spent in Laingsburg, earnestly devoted to Christian philanthropy and temperance work. All felt as never before, the force of this passage, 'To him that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward.'"

As my pen takes up ninth district letters, I say, "God bless them!" Beginning with Reed City, the home of our grand treasurer, where they have given $50 as a union to state treasury after the bank failure. From Ludington they write me: "We accepted the offer of THE UNION SIGNAL, and send the three papers to the jail, also THE UNION SIGNAL to our six clergymen." Mrs. Norine Law, Y lecturer, has been there three evenings. Their annual meeting was followed by a tea. The letter closes with this sentiment: "We have started out to work this year."

Mrs. Law, in writing of herself, says she has been in the field four weeks, strengthening Y's and W. C. T. Unions, and organizing new ones; the interest seems to be good, with an undercurrent of growing sentiment. And now I come to Big Rapids, where lives our broad, planning superintendent of scientific temperance instruction. She has had a large chart printed with the Michigan law regarding the teaching of temperance in schools of the state, with two eyelets at the top and our white ribbon by which to hang them up; her idea is that a copy of these shall be in every school room, as she writes, "That the pupils may see, and when they comprehend that this instruction is required by Michigan for the protection of her girls and boys, it clothes the matter in a new light and dignity." Having the coat of arms of the state upon them, they are really an ornamental card for any room, and are provided complete for ten cents.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

GLEANINGS OF MRS. HARPER'S WORK.

A temperance meeting was recently held by Mrs. F. E. W. Harper among the colored farmers of St. Helena Island, South Carolina.

Mrs. Harper has been holding meetings with great success in Atlanta, Columbia, Spartansburg and other towns of this state. Then she came to our county town, Beaufort, and we were rejoiced to secure a three days' visit from her before she left for Savannah.

Sunday noon she spoke to a crowded church, afterwards held a mothers' meeting, and in the evening addressed another meeting, but the more they heard the more the people wanted to hear, and when on Monday the only large hall on the island, Darrah Hall, was opened, there were already waiting more than sufficient to fill it. To us, who for twenty-seven years have worked against intemperance, the sight was very cheering.

On the platform sat on one side, a number of the Frogmore division of the Beaufort union (white), representing the wealth and culture of the island, whose ready aid and sympathy are always found on the right side; the rest of the platform was occupied by the pastors of the churches, the elders and leaders of our temperance vigilance committee.

Two lines of front seats were occupied by the St. Helena union (colored), each wearing proudly the white ribbon. Then into the hall poured, in steady array, with banners and drum, the young people of the schools, five hundred at least, most of them already pledged to temperance. The grown people filled every vacant place; crowded the galleries, and listened at doors and windows. There were young men and women, strong and prosperous, old men, who had seen strange changes in their lives; aged women in their old-time head-kerchiefs, all eagerly listening.

"Praise waiteth for Thee," sang the girls. "Praise waiteth for Thee, Oh, God," repeated the boys, and the clear young voices carried on the anthem gloriously. Then I had the pleasure, as president of the society, of introducing Mrs. Harper, and for an hour at least they listened in hushed silence to an address as wise as it was eloquent. The earnest lecturer turned back for them the pages of history, traced the rise in antiquity of other races, showed the causes of prosperity, the beginnings of decay, and drew from these histories many lessons of encouragement, hope and warning for the young race entering so eagerly on its new heritage. Then she pictured home life as it ought to be, doing her best to allure her listeners into the ways of temperance and purity, and to encourage them to stand by their pledges and never be satisfied till the licensed drinking house, which stood within the very sound of our songs, should be closed forever.

When she ended, heartfelt thanks for her words were voted by the society, presented by the union, with flowers by the children; but her best thanks were the resolves of the young hearts there to rise to the height of the life she had shown them; and the temperance workers felt the deep desire that every working man and woman in the South could have an opportunity of hearing Mrs. Harper's words.

NEW YORK.

ORLEANS COUNTY CONVENTION.

This was held February 28, and March 1, in the Baptist church of Medina. After the consecration services conducted by Mrs. Burgess, of Albion, a new feature was introduced, that of seating the delegates by number, each delegation being furnished with a bannerette bearing the name of its union.

Greetings were received from Niagara county W. C. T. U. in convention assembled at Ransomville, with the injunction to read Joshua 1: 8. The children's hour was admirably taken up with songs, recitations, and declamations from the Loyal Temperance Legion, an impressive object lesson by Mrs. Yarrow, and an interesting sketch from the aged temperance pioneer, Mr. Parsons, who had charge of the temperance school in Medina for twenty years.

The convention in the evening was given an enthusiastic greeting by the Medina clergy, Revs. Latham, Lester and Winchester. Mrs. Louise Rounds, of Chicago, president of Illinois state W. C. T. U., gave the address of the evening, with which all were delighted.

The opening of the question-box by Mrs. Rounds, during the Saturday forenoon session, also proved to be a very interesting and instructive feature. The good sisters could not say too much in praise of Miss Anna Cole's paper, "The Way of the Y's." She reviewed the work of the Y's from its first inception till the present time, and gave a brief summary of membership as follows: In New York state, 2,479 and 1,040 honorary members. In the nation 31,657 regular, and 6,790 honorary members.

The memorial service conducted by Mrs. Ruggles, revealed the fact that seven of our dear sisters had been called from their earthly to their heavenly home since our last convention—Mrs. Julia Smith and Miss Janette Braley, of Albion, Mrs. Chloe Thayer, of Hulberton, Mrs. Dr. Healy, of Medina, Mrs. Margaret Kemp, of Gaines, and Mrs. A. M. Morgan, of Eagle Harbor.

The afternoon session was made intensely interesting by an address of an hour by Mrs. Rounds, defining the position of the W. C. T. U., and its attitude toward political parties.

We have now twenty-three unions including the Y's, and were represented by seventy-five delegates. It was voted in executive session to purchase a county banner, and Miss Jennie Phillips, Mrs. S. Spencer, and Mrs. E. Waldron were appointed as banner committee, funds to be raised in the various unions by mite-boxes, and such other ways as each might deem best. The new county president, Mrs. Rev. Underhill, presided admirably, and bids fair to be as much beloved as were our retired presidents.

EMMA C. ROOT,
Co. Supt. Press Work.

DUTCHESS COUNTY CONVENTION.

The twelfth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. was held in the W. C. T. U. Building, No. 12 Cannon Street, Poughkeepsie, February 27 and 28. The convention was opened at 9:30 a. m. with devotional exercises; prayer by Mrs. S. M. Tuthill; Scripture reading by Mrs. W. S. Eno. At ten a. m. the convention was called to order by the president, Mrs. H. A. Nelson, and was cordially welcomed in a few appropriate words by Mrs. Walter Farrington and Rev. G. H. Gregory, pastor of the Second M. E. church; his earnest words and hearty God-speed were very grateful to the hearts of the listeners. The response by Miss Mary Sherwood was earnest and thoughtful.

The president in a feeling and impressive manner thanked the convention for "The Life of Miss Willard," presented to her on Christmas Day as a gift from the unions of the county.

In the afternoon the devotional meeting was conducted by Mrs. G. R. Brown. All the officers and forty-two delegates answered to their names at roll call, and a large number of visitors were present at all the sessions, among whom was Edward Carswell, of Canada, who spoke briefly to the convention. The president gave her annual address, which was full of hope and incitements to further and better work. At 4 p. m. the Y meeting was held, Miss Sarah Ham, superintendent. Mrs. F. J. Barnes, National superintendent of young woman's work, made an earnest plea for the work among girls and young women.

At the evening session, held in the Second Reformed church, the convention again had the pleusure of listening to George W. Bain, of Kentucky. Rapt attention was accorded the speaker; smiles, tears and applause alternately greeted him.

Friday morning, after the devotional exercises, the election of officers took place. Mrs. H. A. Nelson was re-elected for the eighth time as president of Dutchess county. The reports from the superintendents of nineteen departments of work and verbal reports of local unions were very interesting and encouraging. Friday afternoon an impressive memorial service was held, conducted by Mrs. L. A. Hoag, seven members having died during the year. At 4 p. m. the Loyal Temperance Legion of the Poughkeepsie union marched in; after singing several pieces and recitations by the scholars, the Rev. Wayland Spaulding, pastor of the Congregational Church, gave a short address, which the children enjoyed.

During the convention we had the pleasure of welcoming Mrs. Ella C. Velie, the publisher of Woman's Temperance Work, our state paper. Dutchess county won the banner which she presented, at the last state convention, to the county having the largest number of subscribers. She made an earnest and effectual plea for her paper. The convention closed with a consecration meeting, conducted by the president, and adjourned to meet at Powling in May.

MISSOURI.

WORK AT WHEELING.

On the afternoon of December 4, 1889, a few enthusiastic women of Wheeling met and organized a W. C. T. U. of ten members, only two of whom had ever been in such a meeting before. They elected their officers and began a great and noble work in good earnest.

We have now fifty-six members, twenty-four ladies and thirty-two honorary members, wearing the magic white ribbon. We have also organized a Loyal Temperance Legion of some twenty members; have taken up six departments of work, heredity, literature, narcotics, social purity, press and juvenile work; have placed in depot and public rooms receptacles, and distributed over two hundred pages of literature; have had one entertainment before a crowded house, opened by prayer, reading of Scriptures, and comments thereon; singing by the Loyal Temperance Legion, readings, essays, etc. Not a sentiment was heard that did not breathe of the love of Christ and humanity. We have in our union fourteen yearly subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL and The Young Crusader.

Mrs. Helen B. Harford, our state organizer, has given us two valuable lectures, and we hail her coming among us with great joy. Her presence and words of encouragement have strengthened us to be earnest in the work. We are now arranging for a parlor entertainment, and a Demorest medal contest.

SUMMER ASSEMBLY AND SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Asheville is most beautifully situated right in the heart of the Alleghanies. A broken plateau 2,250 feet above sea level, with ravines and valleys dividing the rolling hills, makes it worthy of its name "the land of the sky." No healthier spot can be found in all our broad land. Right here in this beautiful mountain resort, one of our most devoted W. C. T. U. women, Mrs. Col. Ray, with her good husband, has presented the W. C. T. U. with a number of acres of land for building up a W. C. T. U. Summer Assembly and School of Methods. The first meeting will be opened July 23, when the assembly will be formally dedicated by Miss Willard, assisted by Mrs. Chapin. Miss Mary Allen West will take charge of the School of Methods and Dean Wright of Boston will inaugurate the work of systematic Bible study. The program is not yet fully made out, but we promise all who come a treat in the way of good things. All letters of inquiry regarding board and local needs should be addressed to Miss Anna Aston, who is secretary of the board of directors, at Asheville. All letters relating to speakers please direct to me after May 1st, to Riverside, Cal., care Mrs. N. P. J. Button, president Southern California.

The W. C. T. U. of Asheville will do all that can be done to make the month we tarry with them a pleasant and profitable one. We hope many men and women will make Asheville their Mecca this year and help us build, in our sunny southland, the most influential of all our summer resorts. The program will be sent out very soon.

M. L. WELLS,
Pres. Board of Directors.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE note regarding Mrs. Boole's address and reception should have read Williamson, New York, instead of Williamston, Pa.

THE blessings of the Asbury Park, New Jersey W. C. T. U. follow their former superintendent of health and heredity, and of the Loyal Temperance Legion, Mrs. J. B. Parker, to her new home in St. Augustine, Fla., where she has been elected president of the W. C. T. U., and also a trustee in the M. E. Church.

BY some oversight the address of Mrs. L. A. Burgdorf, evangelistic superintendent of the third district of Michigan, was omitted in her circular letter in THE UNION SIGNAL of February 6. Write her at Marshall, Mich.

A CORRESPONDENT in Union, Ohio, sends this timely note: "We have just held the second Demorest medal contest in our town. Nothing that we have ever tried surpasses this in the educational line. People become interested whether they will or not. A small admittance fee of five and ten cents was charged, which amounted to thirty-two dollars for the union. Let all poor unions try this, and they will soon gather enough money to pay their debts and furnish each member with THE UNION SIGNAL."

MRS. M. J. BORDEN, of Las Vegas, has been appointed W. T. P. A. representative for New Mexico; and Mrs. A. M. Jarrett, of Socorro, superintendent of legislation and petitions, in place of Mrs. W. B. Sloan, resigned.

THE Rev. Dr. W. H. Boole and Mrs. Ella A. Boole conducted a series of meetings under th auspices of the W. C. T. U. of Perth Amboy, New Jersey, from Sunday, February 2-16. These were wonderful meetings, largely attended by all classes; the union was strengthened, members were added, and a temperance sentiment awakened, surpassing anything that has been known in the community for a long time.

A LETTER from Mrs. Youmans' secretary contains these words: "Mrs. Youmans wishes me to say that she is in full accord with the policy of the National W. C. T. U., and claims for it the promise, 'No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper.'"

THE W. C. T. U. of Bedford, O., held their annual meeting at the residence of Mrs. Marie Medary, March 10, and elected officers for the ensuing year: president, Mrs. Helen Brown; vice-presidents, Mesdames Laura Robinson, Rebecca Libbey, Hattie Gordon; corresponding secretary, Marion Cumstock; recording secretary, Estella C. Stanley; financial secretary, Dema Bennett; treasurer, Mrs. Alice Whitlam. There was a full attendance. Mrs. Foote, of Newburgh, was present, and gave good words of counsel, which were well received. Altogether the outlook for the future of this union, under the leadership of Mrs. Brown, is very favorable, and all seem filled with a spirit of determination to carry out the work of the W. C. T. U. in this place.

A Lucky Girl.

MR. EDITOR:—I think my experience will interest many of your readers, and as I have married recently, and retired from business I hope to benefit others that are in need. My face being partly broken out with pimples and blotches, our physician gave me a medicine that cured me in a short time, and made my complexion beautiful. My cousin also had a lot of freckles; this medicine cleaned them off, and left her face nice and pretty. Many of my friends were anxious to try it, and I concluded I could make some money selling the preparation. I saw on the bottle that the medicine was made by Marion Walker, Louisville, Ky., and the price was $2.00 for two bottles, enough for one face, so I wrote for the agency, and in twenty-two weeks I cleared $407.44, an average of $18.52 a week, which I think is good for an inexperienced girl. Any one can get the agency by writing to the above address, and can make lots of money, too. A SUBSCRIBER.

Is This What the Women Want.

Here's news for every woman who goes about with broken corset bones. There's a material that'll neither break nor roll up, and it's guaranteed. A year is not too short a time to wear out that warranty. If it does, here's your money without a word—but it won't.

The material is Kabo.

And more. It's stitched in, double-stitched in, top and bottom, and it can't be worked out with any ordinary wear.

The Kabo corset is more than a common blessing to the average woman. There's no wearing out of corset lacers by the sharp edge of the eyelet; there's nothing to rust, no eyelet visible through a thin dress; never a breaking of a corset lace with those loop eyelets.

The dealer takes the risk in selling the Kabo corset. He buys and sells under this guarantee:

"If for any reason whatever the corset is unsatisfactory to the wearer, it may be returned to us through the dealer, and the money paid will be cheerfully refunded without question. No matter what condition it may be in, provided it hasn't been worn over three weeks; and if the Kabo with which the corset is boned ever breaks, we will as cheerfully refund the money."—CHICAGO CORSET CO.

A VERY GREAT OFFER. For 20 cents we will send THE UNION SIGNAL five weeks and a copy of the Handy Manual, which is a 25-cent book packed so full of valuable information and tables that it is easily worth $1 to any one. Indeed, it's worth more than that to the man who wants instantly to know things he learned once but "has forgotten." Star offer workers can count each name thus sent, and agents can have the usual commission on each name. Push this offer if you want to get a lot of short-term names. Only 20 cents for the two!

Money-Making Entertainments.

The list is worth your attention, as it comprises all sorts and kinds, and if your union seeks to occasionally make some money by amusing the people you will find here ample material. In many instances the entertainment will result in not only making the coffers heavier but in silencing the scoffers! Why? Because the planning has been not only to amuse but also to arouse thought while being amused, and a new idea that comes to you on the wings of a hearty laugh has a good-natured way of settling down quite at home in its new quarters. Here is the list:

Prohibition Program. Price 10 cents. By Anna A. Gordon. Song recitations and exercises of the brightest and best kind. High license is fired at in a way that tells. A dialogue by Mr. E. J. Wheeler on "Sensevs. License," is full of vigor, fun and education!

CRUSADER SERIES. No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3. Each 10 cents. No. 1 is on general temperance points; No. 2 on the Temperance Temple, and No. 3 is "The Trial of Prince Nicotine." All are bright and good.

Crusader Programs. Price 25 cts. A book of 188 pages, full of the best of Sunday-school and general temperance exercises, largely from the Sunday-school Young Crusader, given in its columns from time to time. All are good; none need costumes or any such outside helps. An admirable book in every way. Twenty-four numbers or exercises in all are given.

HINTS FOR Y. W. C. T. U. ENTERTAINMENTS. Price 10 cents. Explaining the mysteries of Oriental Tiffin, Kaffee Klatsch, Mother Goose, etc. Candy recipes are added to sweeten things generally.

YE HATCHET PARTIE. Price 15 cents. By Miss Mary H. Mather, superintendent department of entertainments National W. C. T. U. The most successful shekel winner we have ever printed for young ladies' use. Other good entertainments are also given, "Mistress Mary and Her Flower Garden," "Silhouette Social," etc.

INTERSTATE MILKMAID'S CONVENTION. Price 5 cents. By Laura J. Rittenhouse. An amusing and witty "take off" on a woman's convention. The amount of learning (?) displayed on the cow business is funny.

Co-operative Housekeeping. Price 5 cts. By Lide Merriwether, president Tennessee W. C. T. U. An admirable allegory to show how the women of the country could clean house at Washington if they only had the chance. Telling and effective.

Platform Voices. Price 25 cents; compiled by Miss Julia Ames, editor UNION SIGNAL. This is a collection of unusually good temperance poems and recitations. Great care has been taken in the selections, and we cordially recommend this book to all who need "something in the line of recitations" and don't know exactly what. This book fills the vacuum completely.

From Rev. Jas. H. Potts D.D., editor of Michigan "Christian Advocate," Detroit Mich: "To say that we are delighted with the Piano does not express the fact. It is a wise General who knows when to call up the reserves. Health often needs reinforcement. The order for such reinforcement is endorsed by

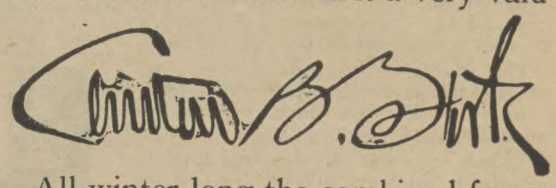
GEN. CLINTON B. FISK.

My Dear Mr. Bowne:

I wish to say I received the Emulsion you sent me and am very grateful for the same. I note you claim in your advertisement that patients gain one pound a day. I am willing to grow half a pound a day, but must draw the line at anything above that in the way of increasing heft, but in sober honest statement it may truthfully be said that I have been greatly benefited by the Emulsion. There is no doubt about Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites being one of the best remedies sold by anybody on earth. I would as soon think of robbing the widow and orphan as to be guilty of puffing any quack remedies, but I thoroughly tested Scott's Emulsion and found it a very valuable remedy in cases of Colds, Coughs and General Debility.

Yours truly,



A HARD FIGHT.

IT has been a hard fight. All winter long the combined forces of the weather and "La Grippe" have been exerted to destroy Health. The Constitution, weakened by resistance, repels with less and less vigor each attack of the enemy. But the supreme struggle is yet to come. The enemy holds in reserve the March Winds with which to deal the final blow. The cry comes up for Reinforcements. Send for Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. Wonderful how such reinforcement does increase the resisting power, heal the lungs, cure the cough, and restore to health. Use now Scott's Emulsion.

CAUTION! Be sure you get the genuine SCOTT'S EMULSION. PALATABLE AS MILK. Put up always in salmon color wrapper, and prepared only by SCOTT & BOWNE, Mfg. Chemists, New York, and sold by all druggists.

WHAT have the saloons ever done for humanity? How many souls have they saved? How many people have they clothed, except the saloon-keeper's family? When we have a strike the saloon-keeper often contributes more than the dry-goods man, but he robs them of more. I never knew one of them to give a cent that he did not expect a dollar in return.—*T. THERE are about one hundred Sunday-schools for Chinamen in the United States doing a good work among the one hundred thousand residents of this race in this country.

GOOD words come from North Topeka, Kan., Tecumseh and Edgar, Neb., concerning the work of Rev. Geo. H. Vibbert. It is believed that his labors in Nebraska will gain many votes for the prohibition amendment. His charges are entertainment and collections.

THE Jewish emigration to Jerusalem in 1886-1889 reached 20,000; more than half the citizens are Jews; so in the rural districts commerce begins to flourish; industries are developing; the whole country is changing for the better; this is due largely to the Rothschilds.

THE following resolutions were passed by the unanimous action of the Chicago Methodist Preachers' Meeting, March 10, 1890:

WHEREAS, The National House of Representatives has by a vote designated Chicago as the place for holding the World's Fair in 1892, and whereas, the United States Senate in all probability will confirm said action, therefore,

Resolved, By "The Chicago Methodist Ministers' Meeting" that we respectfully memorialize Congress to instruct the contemplated commission, by congressional act, to prohibit all Sabbath labor, whether skilled or manual in the erection of building, or buildings, or in otherwise preparing the grounds for said World's Fair.

Resolved, That we also respectfully memorialize Congress to take such action as shall instruct said commission to close the gates and suspend the exhibition on each Sabbath during the continuance of said Fair.

Resolved, That we also respectfully memorialize Congress to take such action as shall instruct said commission to forbid the sale of spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors, or any other intoxicants, on the grounds or within the inclosure, during the continuance of said Fair.

Resolved, That we respectfully invite all fraternal bodies and ecclesiastical organizations of whatever church, to unite with us in the above memorial.

Resolved, That two copies of the above preamble and the first three resolutions, be sent, one to the United States Senate, and the other to the House of Representatives, signed by the president and countersigned by the secretary of this meeting.

Baby Barendse,

Three months old when cured by the use of Steketee's Worm Destroyer.
Read what its mother says:

"The undersigned has a child only three months old. It became sick with pains in its bowels and stomach when scarcely two months old. It cried and whined nearly all the time, and was completely run down in flesh. We gave it everything that we thought would relieve the child, but it grew worse all the time. We made twenty powders from a teaspoonful of Steketee's Worm Destroyer, gave it one powder three times daily. To our astonishment it was relieved of thousands of worms. We have given the child but twenty powders. It is entirely cured. I shall always recommend Steketee's Worm Destroyer. MRS. B. BARENDSE,

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Henry M. Stanley will sail from Cairo for England, April 7.

The bill suppressing pool rooms has passed the Maryland Legislature, and been signed by the Governor.

The International Labor Conference in Berlin adjourned on Saturday. No detailed account of the work achieved has yet reached us.

United States delegates to the Pan-American Congress have offered absolute reciprocity to the Argentine Republic. The Argentine delegates will decide this week whether or not to accept the proposition.

To aid his employés in the Mount Carmel, Pa., mines, Hon. Wm. L. Scott has given his check for $5,000, with promise of further generosity should the distress demand continued help. This, with the prospect of speedily opening the mines for work, gives courage to the 2,000 colliers who have been idle for three months.

Terrific storms prevailed last week from Utah on the west, to Virginia on the eastern limit, and from Minnesota to Tennessee, resulting in great loss of life and property. The destruction was greatest in Louisville, Ky., where over one hundred persons were killed, many were injured, and a considerable part of the city reduced to a shapeless heap of brick and timber.

An Anti-Opium League has been formed in Holland with the object of bringing public opinion to bear on the system of raising revenue from the opium monopoly in the Dutch West Indies. The manifesto of the League is signed by a considerable number of present or former members of both branches of the Netherlands Legislature, ex-colonial officials, and other influential persons.

THE American Temperance Life Insurance Association of New York City makes the following statement: "Our experience proves that the cost of insurance to total abstainers is at least one-third less than in associations that admit moderate drinkers, and less than one-half the cost of expensive old line companies."

THE extradition treaty between Canada and the United States officially announced last week, shows that the petition presented by the W. C. T. U. was not unheeded. Rape and abduction are among the extraditable offenses. If honestly interpreted and faithfully executed, this will arrest the infamous underground traffic in young girls, which has been carried on across the border heretofore. The iron-clad provisions for offenders against laws designed to suppress slave trading, ought to apply here also.

WE rejoice to record another victory at the National capital. A proposition was made, some time since, to add an amendment to the Army Appropriation Bill, by which $100,000 should be obtained to establish the system of canteens in the army, in place of the post-traders' stores. The purpose of the canteen is defined by the Adjutant-General thus: "To supply the troops at reasonable rates light wines, malt liquors, plain lunches, and other conveniences, besides furnishing them the facilities for billiards, ten-pins, dominoes and other games." It was argued that the post-traders' stores belonged to the past, when the army occupied isolated localities, and that these tended to impoverish and debauch the soldiers, while it was claimed that the canteen system would improve the discipline by keeping the men within the garrisons, and promote temperance because of the character of the liquors sold; the suggestion was also made that rooms should be set apart for this purpose, "wherever practicable, in the same building with the library or reading rooms." The National superintendent of the soldiers' and sailors' department, Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, took immediate action to defeat this pernicious bill, and a memorial, signed by herself and other leading W. C. T. U. women, was presented to both Senate and House, making earnest protest against the fallacious arguments used in the case. A notable debate took place in the House March 29, and our cause was supported ably by the Hons. Morse, of Massachusetts; Pickler, of South Dakota, and Kerr, of Iowa. In the committee of the whole the amendment was defeated by a vote of sixty-two to forty-one. A letter which has arrived from Mrs. McClees just as we go to press, will appear next week, giving full particulars.

A CAREFUL comparison of the records and accounts in seventy-three British Hospitals shows that the aggregate decrease in the amount expended for alcohol since twenty-five years ago is forty-seven per cent. It is interesting to note the explicit reduction in some of the largest and best-known institutions. In King's College Hospital the expenditure for alcohol in 1863 was £7 14s. per bed. In 1888 it was £1 8s. 8d. This is significant and hopeful, as occurring in a college hospital, where many students and internes learn to be chary of prescribing a substance which cannot establish its claim to be called a food, and which is too uncertain both in its composition and operation to be relied upon as a remedy. In the same time the London Fever Hospital has reduced its bill for liquors from £3 5s. per bed, to 15s. 9d. and has increased its milk bill correspondingly.

MISS ALICE FLETCHER is again the heir of the choicest relic in the possession of her dusky admirers, the only genuine "F. F's." of America. When the Omaha tribe of Indians consented to take land in severalty, they presented her with the "sacred tent" which had held their archives under the old régimé. It was deposited in the Peabody Museum at Cambridge, Mass. Miss Fletcher is now in receipt of the pipe of war and council, which has inspired and ratified all tribal deliberations of the Nez Perces for more than thirty years, and was gravely and grimly passed around when the Nez decided upon their outbreak. More gratifying than the gift is the statement accompanying it that she has destroyed its significance, since because of her efforts, they are no longer a tribe, but citizens of the United States.

THE bill approved last week by the House provides for admitting Wyoming to the Union without nullifying the clause in its constitution which grants to women the right of suffrage. The Senate may amend the bill on the ground that of the 18,000 votes polled for the constitution, 4,000 were cast by women, who under United States statutes are not granted the privilege of franchise. The discussions in the Senate are likely to freshen the agitation for equal suffrage throughout the country and throw new light on the conflicting opinions regarding the rights guaranteed women under United States statutes. Wyoming women feel secure, as shown by their action in a meeting at Cheyenne recently, when Mrs. Post, a vice president of the National Suffrage Association, was in the chair. Anticipating that within sixty days Wyoming will take her place among the states, the first sovereign power on earth to obliterate political distinctions between men and women it was

Resolved, That this convention deems it eminently fit and proper that the women of Wyoming should in every fitting manner express their gratification that Wyoming becomes a state, with such a sure guaranty of their political and civil rights as exists in our state constitution; and, be it further

Resolved, That we do earnestly ask the hearty coöperation of all the women of Wyoming in procuring funds with which to purchase a flag for presentation to our commonwealth upon her admission as a state—a flag in whose cluster of stars Wyoming's will shine bright, not only as indicative of our joy, but as a star of hope to our sisters throughout the Union.

IMMORAL and border line papers calling themselves "liberal" have always yearned over the Kansas sufferers. They also keep in motion rumors of re-submission and pitiful tales of increased taxation, decreased emigration, and other deplorable conditions. Their special correspondent fails to interview the right parties to secure such items as those contained in the report of the Kansas penitentiary made by its warden, George H. Case. He notes such moral progress as has not been made in any other commonwealth. From year to year there has been a steady decline in the number of criminals in spite of steady gains in population. The entire convict population is now only 255. The latest and most formidable peril threatening the state is female supremacy. The alarming prediction is made that at the April elections a hundred towns will turn their city offices over to women. "The suffragists are leaving no stone unturned to capture the local governments," says one of the specials. It is conceded that women care little for partisan politics, but we gather from the various reports that they realize their high calling in politics. They count themselves a handful of salt thrown into the bitter pool for its cleansing. It is said sarcastically that previous to election the candidates, especially those for the mayoralty, are summoned to appear before the executive committee of the Equal Suffrage Association, and state their position toward liquor joints and other disreputable haunts. This is good if true; it is the best remedy yet prescribed for the chronic office seeker, and most discouraging to the growth of the ward politician. It is highly interesting, though somewhat confusing, to note the conflicting statements of the secular press. One correspondent says: "The women are not registering this year," thus fortifying the old saw that women do not want to vote; while another declares that, "The granting of municipal suffrage to women has proved a grand success in Kansas. It is going to play a more important part in the approaching spring election than ever before. . . . Wherever the experiment has been tried, it has stifled opposition, and the movement has grown in popular favor to a marvelous degree." Kansas women are certainly doing their duty without fear or favor and better government will be the result.

THE New York Sun has been to church. It is proper to go to church at this time of year. Lenten meditations between services are also proper. When a shining journal like the Sun reflects, the public reads its reflections. Dim, mysterious Trinity was the sanctuary; Dr. Dix the rector, and woman's relation to society and religion, the theme. For several seasons the Lenten lectures at Trinity Church have been addressed to women. They form the great majority of the worshipers. "Without the faith and veneration of women the church would soon fall into decay," says the reverend Doctor. He rebukes their love of pleasure and desire for luxuries, and counsels them to the meekness and humility shown in the character of the mother of Jesus. He is reported as deploring the falling off in faith and religious virtues among women in these latter days of luxury. We take issue with this. Woman's faith was never so active and so regnant as in the present hour. By faith she founds homes for deserted babes and day nurseries for those who are half orphans through drink. By faith she establishes free kindergartens for little waifs and industrial schools for larger ones; opens houses of refuge for lost women, and gospel missions for lost men. By faith and foresight she organizes the work for women in all lands, and evolves that most practical feature of modern missionary effort, the medical woman equipped for her high calling, to heal the sick and preach the gospel. By faith she throws herself into the temperance reform, giving it an impetus which carries it forward farther in fifteen years than it had advanced in one hundred and fifty previous years. Woman came into her kingdom on the dawn of that first day before the sepulchre owned by Joseph of Arimathea and occupied by the Son of God. She has been enlarging its borders and increasing its strength ever since. Who supposes that Herod's edict against the innocents could be enforced now, if only Christian mothers stood between the cradle and the Roman soldiery? We object, also, to this saying of the great journalistic luminary: "In the long run men carry women with them, mold their opinions, and exercise intellectual power over them. They are what men make them." Is it not rather true that men and women are what they make each other? Woman's human tower of strength, her confidant in peace and counsellor in war, is the man she loves; but on the other hand, every good man, however great and strong, credits the woman who has loved him—mother, sister, wife—with "making" the best that is in him

Contributed.

EASTER MORNING.

BY SERENA SNOW.

Hail, glorious Easter morning!
Thy lily bells gleam white;
Oh, speed the rosy dawning
That breaks through brooding night.

Sing, birds and brooks and blossoms,
Sing praises to thy King,
Through all the leafless valleys
Let chimes of gladness ring.
Bright spring throws out her banner;
The grasses green appear,
Earth's chorus shouts hosanna!
Welcome the glad new year.

As from their low, dark prison
The buds and blossoms break,
So hath the Christ arisen
Death's darkness to forsake
He lives in life immortal,
Beside the Father's throne
Beyond the heavenly portal
Where he shall meet his own.

He slept, he is arisen;
We sleep, we shall arise,
And walk the fields Elysian,
The fields of Paradise.
Inhabit waiting mansions
Whose walls are hung with peace,
Where faith shall find expansion,
From doubt a full release.

Then come, sweet Easter morning,
With life and light aglow,
For in thy rosy dawning,
Our hope shall brighter grow,
And bring the whitest lilies,
To crown the Lord of love,
For earth shall join the pæans,
Archangels sing above.

RHODA'S EASTER CARDS.

BY MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

CHAPTER I.

"O-o-o! hum! ho!"

"Why, Clardy Langhorn, what a groan!"

"Guess you'd groan."

Rhoda sprang from her chair, palette and brush in hand, and stepped into the little room behind the portieres.

"You're right, Clardy; I should. Poor boy," and she bent down and kissed the frown on the pale face which scowled at her from the pillow.

"Say, Rho, I just can't stand it, I can't. If I only had something to amuse myself with; if you weren't all the time at that poky old painting; if you'd even move in here where I could see you; but you sit out there and paint and paint, and I lie here and fume and fret."

"Well, dear, you know I must get those cards—"

"Yes, I know," impatiently.

"And the light is—"

"Oh, I know all about the light."

"Well, then, dear, what can I say or do?"

"Nothing; I'm a whining dog, and—"

"No, you're not," laying her cheek down on his forehead.

"And if I would get shot, I must—"

"Now, stop, Clardy! I will not have you get off on that strain again. You are just my own dear, and you must not be left in this way any longer, cards or no cards. I must—say, I'll tell you, I'm going to roll you out there, and have you help me."

"Help you? I can't paint."

"You can when you learn."

"I can't learn."

"Yes, you can, as well as I did."

"Oh, but you're a genius. Will Horton said so."

Rhoda blushed, and Clarence softly touched the dimple in her cheek.

"Somebody said, 'Genius is a capacity for a great deal of hard work.' I'm sure you have that somewhere," she continued. "I can bolster you up so you can use your hands, and you can really help me. I wonder I have not thought of it before."

"You can't roll me out there; and then what'll you do when Will comes? It'll spoil your studio to have this old bed in it."

"Nonsense! My things don't spoil so easily, and if anybody comes you can enjoy them, too. As for rolling you out—wait a minute, I'm going to make a place for you."

Rhoda was a brisk little body, and with her firm hands and supple arms went to moving furniture about in the small studio, then returning to her brother's shut-away corner, and bending against the heavy old-fashioned bedstead, she rolled it slowly, but steadily, out into the light.

The young man's face brightened; the frown melted, and he said: "This is jolly! It's awfully good of you, Rho, and I'll be an ingrate if I forget it when I get my legs again."

Rhoda looked quickly up from the bedclothes which she was arranging. A quiver came to her lips, which parted as if to speak. But she hesitated, and her eyes filled.

"Out with it, Rho; you may just as well; I know what 'tis."

"O, Clardy," and she took his hands. "If you only will remember—not what I do, that isn't much, but how I love you, dear, and that I've nobody in all the world but you, and—"

She could not finish; tears rolled down her cheeks, and her tongue refused to frame the awfully suggestive words that would have told her thought.

"Don't, Rho." The boy's voice was husky. "I will remember, Rho, and I promise you I will never go with that crowd again. This bullet hole in my hip is enough anyhow. I tell you, I've thought of lots o' things lying here; what if it had gone a little higher?"

"O, Clardy!" sobbed Rhoda. "But it didn't, you see, —and I'm not going to cry;—there, I will stop. This is a great how d'y do, to get you out here and then cut up like this. I know you are going to be my good, true brother, and we shall be so happy together. But now we must get to work."

"We?" laughed Clarence derisively.

"Yes, we. I am going to have you at work before you can say Jack Robinson. No more idle days for you. I'll show you in a minute. Now! How does that go?" crowding a pillow down between his shoulders, and piling others under his head.

"That's all right," replied Clarence.

"Doesn't hurt your hip a bit?"

"No, it's all right when I draw my other leg up. There, give me that old atlas. That's all right. I can do something, if it's only to draw your picture for Will Horton, while you paint Easter cards for the Y's."

"You'll have no time to draw my picture, sir,—for really I shall keep you busy. But you must not get tired, Clardy: you won't, will you?"

"I wish I could get really tired doing something just once, for a change. So if you've got anything, bring it on."

"Do you see this? and this?" Rhoda handed him some dainty cards, traced with exquisite designs in floral sprays, and fancy lettering. "Now that lettering disappoints me; mine always does. You can do that part b-e-a-utifully. I remember some lovely fantastic things you made for me once, on a school composition. It was about a summer day, and the best thing about it was the title page. That was all alive with squirrels and snakes and birds, and children in all shapes, worked into those letters. These Scripture texts, and bits of verse you can do better than I, while I do the flowers and designs. So you see, young man, you've got into business. I shall overwork you, I know I shall."

Clarence had been looking critically at the sample cards, fingering the little white satin bow which each one wore, because it was a White-ribbon-Y-Easter-card; and at last he said: "I can do that, Rho. This could be improved, that's a fact—you are first rate at painting, but you don't seem to be much on the lettering. Give me a pen, fine point, black ink and the thing to print. How do you like the Gothic?"

"Anything, Clardy; suit your own taste. I have perfect confidence in you."

"O, thanks, awfully!"

"You are quite welcome, Sir Slangster."

"Now here is this,—I have sketched this honeysuckle, with the humming-bird after the sweets. And it just came to me, when I thought how he goes around with that inquisitive bill of his, poking into the very heart of the blossoms, after what his little heart craves, that the most appropriate text would be this:—of course always on every card first, 'He is Risen, Alleluia!' then the text to suit the design. On this one 'And ye shall seek for me and find me when ye shall search for me with all your heart.' That's what the little hummer is doing, you see—and when we search for Him who is risen in that earnest way——"

"O, don't preach, Rho!—you know how I hate it."

"Preach? I didn't mean to preach, Clardy," and Rhoda's voice trembled. "I was only thinking out loud, you see. I—I—thought—you see I wanted to talk to you, and one must talk what one is thinking." Two little tears glinted on her eyelashes. She was tired and nervous with watching as well as anxiety.

"That's all right, Rho," answered Clarence apologetically. "Talk—I want you to,—but—you know what I mean. I never could endure anything that seemed like improving the occasion."

"What an idea!" and Rhoda laughed a little in spite of the pain she always felt at this disposition in her brother. "I never thought of such a thing—and yet," with a twinkle in her eye, "what would you do with an occasion, if not improve it?"

"That's all right; I guess we understand each other; and now I'll begin. Your humming bird is alive: I see him hum."

Clarence Langhorn and his sister Rhoda, with old Hannah, who had kept the kitchen ever since they could remember, had lived alone since a fever had left them motherless. Drink and vice had left them fatherless before they were old enough to know what that meant. The mother, a remarkably gifted and cultured woman, had taught free-hand drawing and painting in the college, and so saved the home which she had inherited from her mother, and made by her work the income which preserved them in comfort. She kept her son in school and her daughter at her side, training her unusual gifts to the beautiful service of her own loved art, until she became her chief assistant.

When Clarence was eighteen, and Rhoda seventeen, she was suddenly stricken with a malignant fever, which in a few hours exhausted her strength, and took her away without so much as a parting word, leaving the children, with just the old homestead about which the city had grown, and Hannah, the servant and friend. They never thought of doing anything but to go right on living in the old way: Hannah with the care of the house, Rhoda with the classes in drawing and painting (she was elected to fill the place vacated by her mother's death), and Clarence—well, Clarence was still "only a boy," with not the slightest idea as to what he ought or could do. He was dangerously like his father, who would have wrecked home and happiness for them all had he lived long enough. Clarence had gifts, but had not yet discovered what to do with them. He was a winsome, affectionate fellow, always had hosts of friends, and had he been anchored to a real purpose in life, might have come to noble manhood.

He had an idea that he was taking care of Rhoda, but would have found it difficult to tell how he was doing it. It was her little purse that came out on all occasions. It was she who looked after the garden, the table, the wardrobe. She had stepped into the black dresses which her mother had left hanging in her closet; and Clarence still found hanging in his closet, and folded in his old-fashioned dresser, the garments that came in the semi-annual box that had been coming ever since his mother's misfortunes began; sent by an old friend of hers who had a son one year older than he. He literally was fed and clothed as were the grasses of the field, with no thought or care of his own. And who shall blame him? He had never been taught self-reliance; hence the latent manliness of his nature was all undeveloped, and likely to remain so.

The world has its uses for an aimless boy, and so had taken Clarence Langhorn into training. The result was a constant odor of tobacco in the dainty home, often mingled with that of strong drink. These brought fear and anguish to poor Rhoda, and made Hannah slam the doors, and rattle the kitchen furniture, and at last a bullet sent through Clarence's hip by a drunken comrade in a saloon row brought him home to be taken care of and coaxed into living. There were days and nights of watching and anxiety for Hannah and Rhoda, shared by friends old and new; chief among whom was Will Horton, who came and went with the informality of a life-long acquaintance, and was welcome, although his was the newest friendship of them all.

Unusual demands were made upon the slender income these days. But in one thing there was a compensation which could not be ignored. Rhoda was a Y, wore her white ribbon always in sight, and so intelligent and true was she in her position, that so long as Clarence was kept in by his wound, he could get nothing that would spoil his breath, or poison the atmosphere of his room, or cause his sister to shrink from his approach. They had always kissed each other morning and night at least; Rhoda did not like kisses flavored with tobacco or alcohol, and now she had them sweet and fresh, at least from moral taint. A bullet wound was not a desirable thing to have come into the family,—besides it was expensive, but, after all, a half drunken brother was worse.

Rhoda left her classes to her assistants, and took an order for some Easter cards, in which kind of work she especially excelled—for a bazar which the Y's had planned.

The sitting room of the old home, with the southeastern exposure, had been "the studio" ever since she could remember. Here she worked with her brush and pencil, while she cared for her brother, who had lain in the little room on the north, until his couch was rolled out into the brightness as related.

"There, Rho! how's that?"

"I should feel like saying, elegant—if you were not so egotistical. Suppose I should say it would not do at all; what then?"

"You'd have to look different if I believed it," said Clarence. "I know when you're pleased, so does Will; wish you'd always look at me as you do at him, and at that card."

Rhoda blushed a little, but ignoring his banter answered: "Clardy, dear, always give me as good reason as you have in this, and I will. It is lovely! really I did not know you could design so exquisitely. I shall get on famously. How fortunate that you groaned."

"That I stopped Chubb Straub's bullet? That I was in that saloon row? Rho, I'm afraid you have not appreciated your benefactors."

The tone was so light and merry as to almost nullify the sarcasm of the words; but Rhoda felt both tone and words and answered gravely: "How can you, Clardy? when you know how I feel about it. It is no joke to me. I don't see how you can wish, yourself, to speak about it so."

"Well, I shouldn't have groaned if I hadn't been shut up here and nailed to this old bed; and I shouldn't have been in bed but for the bullet; shouldn't have had the bullet in me if I hadn't been where the row was; and that was in Mape's saloon. So don't you see how you got your Easter card printer? I say, things do come queer in this world, though!"

"Well, Clardy," answered Rhoda with a little stammer in her voice, "if you would go into the saloon, I am thankful for even the bullet that took you out of it and sent you to me! I should be thankful for anything that would keep you out of it forever, and keep you just as sweet and clean as you are to-day. You are always so nice when you have to stay with me."

Rhoda Langhorn, do you know what "anything" means? If you did, would you unsay it?

THE PRESENT STATUS OF SOCIAL PURITY.

BY AARON M. POWELL.

One natural outcome of the demoralizing high license method of dealing with the iniquitous drink traffic is increased moral confusion concerning the social evil. In Omaha, where the high license theory was first applied, and the liquor license fee is a thousand dollars, the municipal authorities, without the warrant of state law, have, in effect, adopted a high license scheme for social vice, in the form of a monthly tax, with immunity from arrest and imprisonment, for prostitute women, from which they derive a revenue for the city of about two thousand dollars a month, or twenty-four thousand dollars a year. Other municipalities in Nebraska, at Duluth, Minnesota, and elsewhere are announced as doing substantially the same thing. In Baltimore, within a few months, a grand jury, which made an official recommendation of high license for the liquor traffic, made also an official recommendation, most offensive in character, of license, with police and medical supervision, for prostitution. Basing their action upon the assumed necessity of vice, they say: "The social evil has had careful consideration, and we recommend that it be licensed and put under medical supervision and control." Voicing the gospel of despair, they add: "We, however, regard the evil as unavoidable. It will exist while the world lasts. Hence we wish to see it licensed and properly controlled;" and they further add the appalling statement that: "Statisticians affirm that more than forty per cent of all the young men growing up in large cities are unfit for the most sacred relations of life." The Legislature of Maryland has under consideration a so-called high license measure for the regulation of the liquor traffic; it remains to be seen what action, if any, it will take with respect to the additional recommendation of license, with medical supervision and control, for the regulation of the social evil.

More recently still, a Michigan medical journal, the Medical Age, of Detroit, has announced itself an advocate of licensed prostitution, and declared that "a license law presents the only definite and satisfactory solution of the social problem." Affirming also the immoral heresy of the necessity of vice, it continues: "If, then, prostitution must exist as it ever has done, and certainly ever will do, so long as the human race is endowed with normal passions and instincts, is it not full time the inevitable in the situation is accepted, and measures adopted to keep within the bounds demanded by the public weal—measures looking to mitigation by restriction, such as will lessen the present influences in fostering crime and spreading the most loathsome of diseases?" The one American experiment of licensed prostitution, such as the Medical Age advocates, adopted by St. Louis in 1870, continued for four years and then abolished, demonstrated what might have been anticipated, that the attempt to legalize and regulate what ought not to exist, served only to aggravate the evil, to increase prostitution, clandestine and otherwise, and to increase the loathsome and distressing diseases incident thereto.

The root of the regulation theory, as adopted by the Baltimore grand jury, advocated by the Medical Age, and applied in the Old World system of state-regulated vice, is the false dual standard of morality, one for women and another for men. Chastity is demanded of women in general, but, for the demands of lustful men, it is assumed that "prostitution must exist," that "it will exist while the world lasts." If vice is a "necessity" for men there must, of course, be a victim class of women. The gentlemen of the Baltimore grand jury, and the conductors of the Medical Age, would, however, scarcely consent that their own wives and daughters should be among those thus assigned by their own regulation theory, to the service of sensuality. But if there be licensed prostitution, it means that somebody's daughters must and will be set apart for the unholy sacrifice upon the altar of lust.

In Europe a mighty moral contest is in progress for the abolition of state regulation of vice. Seeking the overthrow of what is, practically, a most cruel and odious system of slavery for women, it has been fitly designated by Mrs. Butler and others, the "New Abolitionist" movement. It has already abolished the infamous Contagious Diseases Acts, as applied to women, in sundry military districts in Great Britain and her Crown Colonies; it has been partially successful in Italy and Switzerland, and is making gratifying progress in France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Norway, and other countries of Continental Europe. This European revolt against woman's compulsory enslavement to vice is led by a woman of rarest qualities of mind and heart, Mrs. Josephine Butler, with the coöperation of noble men and women in the different countries. An immoral system of organized and legalized vice, which the Old World is thus preparing to abolish, it would be, indeed, a great shame for America, standing upon the threshold of the twentieth century, now to undertake to adopt.

Though, ostensibly, we do not have licensed prostitution, we do have in all our large cities a great deal of tolerated vice, with the semi-official recognition and connivance of the municipal authorities. It demands continually fresh victims, it gives rise to a cruel traffic in young girls and dependent women, it is supplied through systematic abduction, seduction and "mysterious disappearances" of young girls, and its ramifications extend to foreign countries. Not many months ago there were landed from a single ship at the port of San Francisco, forty Chinese girls, imported from one of the poorer districts of China, and, there is good reason to believe, to be sold for immoral purposes on the Pacific Coast. Add to this the numerous and increasing assaults by vicious men upon unprotected women and girls, and the great inequality and injustice of the statutes of most of the states, with reference to criminal offences against women and girls, and the reluctance of many Legislatures, composed exclusively of men, to raise the legal age of protection for girlhood from the old common law period of ten and twelve years, and the reasons for an effective social purity crusade in this country become painfully obvious and urgent.

The last decade has witnessed a gratifying growth of popular interest in the cause of social purity on this side of the Atlantic. The periodic efforts of American regulationists in sundry localities to introduce here the system of licensed vice have been thwarted; the echoes of Mr. Stead's astounding revelation, heard around the world, concerning the need of better legal protection for young girls, made here a profound impression upon many thoughtful men and women; the labors of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and especially the eloquent and effective appeals of its president, Miss Willard, and the influence of women in the medical profession, with the introduction of White Cross organizations for men, and the action of various philanthropic associations and religious bodies, have all helped to awaken and greatly to extend popular interest in the general subject. There is, however, abundant need of continued and increased labor in this fundamentally important mission field.

In the state of Delaware, in cases of rape, the young girl of SEVEN YEARS is still held to be legally capable of consenting to her own ruin; in many states of the Union the legal "age of consent" is yet ten and twelve years. There is a flood-tide of improperly suggestive, impure literature; liberty of the press in this respect degenerates into license, and many who provide popular amusements pander scandalously to vice. Mrs. Booth, of the Salvation Army, in her recent brilliant and stirring book, "Beneath Two Flags," referring to her work and observation in the slums of New York, brings to the light a condition of degradation which is shocking and disgraceful in the extreme in a so-called Christian city. Above all, liquor saloons and tobacco shops, as centers of vulgarity and obscenity, tend continually to inflame and to "set on fire of hell" the passions of sensual men, and sometimes of evil-disposed women.

It should be the mission of all to help in every possible way, by voice, pen, literature, to dispel the wide-spread popular heresy of the necessity of vice, and to uphold an equal standard of morality for both men and women. To this end must public opinion be appealed to and enlightened. All hail the White Cross! which pledges men "to treat all women with respect, and endeavor to protect them from wrong and degradation." This pledge accepted and honorably kept by men, is the best possible safeguard for exposed girlhood and dependent womanhood. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God," is not a message for women only, but for all His children.

A STUDY OF THE POSITION OF PETER AND PAUL.

BY W. HOWATT GARDNER.

III.

"Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak: but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." I Cor. 14:34, 35.

"Let the women learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." I Tim. 2:11–14.

These passages are quoted from the authorized version; by them ecclesiastics have for past centuries forced silence upon woman in the church, even against the spirit of Christ, and the whole tenor of Scriptural teaching, and subsequent development of Christian truth. But, before we can believe that these passages are decisive and close the mouth of woman forever, we must know just what Paul said. Did he say what some exegetes affirm that he said? Has the real Paul, living and preaching in the whole spirit of Christ, been taught through the centuries, or has another Paul, like a marionette figure, moved before us, manipulated by fingers behind the scenes?

Before we proceed let us have the passages clearly before us. In the passage to the church at Corinth, the words, "They are commanded" are supplied by the translators. We note also that Paul supports his restriction by an appeal to "the law," in the words, "as also saith the law." What law does Paul mean? We search in vain in the Mosaic law for a direct command that woman shall be in subjection always, if Paul means the Mosaic law, though there is one instance of the subordination of woman which was permitted for the same reason that a bill for divorce was granted, because of the hardness of their hearts. Either Paul had reference to some law, or in accordance with his manner at times, he believed that his restriction must in some way be supported by law, though unable to say what special law. In this very letter he quoted nine times from the Mosaic law, why did he not do so at so important a point as this under consideration? Just here our translators have accommodatingly come forward to his assistance and refer us in the margin to the words of God spoken after the Fall, "Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." To be sure these words are in the Pentateuch, or "five volumed book," but not in the law of Moses. God spoke before Abraham's time, which was long before Moses' time, and Paul himself says that the law was not given until several hundred years after Abraham (Paul says 430 years, but his chronology is incorrect, it was much longer), (Gal. 3:17), and then was given "because of transgression, till the seed (Christ) should come to whom the promise was made."

But a noted commentator, on the first letter to the Corinthians, cautiously says that Paul "supports the prohibition by an appeal to a general law of the church of Christ . . . probably Gen. 3: 16." It may have been "a general law" of the church, for it certainly was not a law of Christ. If a law of the church, then, like many other rules of the church, it was man-made, and grew out of the customs and views of the times. If Paul meant the Mosaic law, it is probable that he had in mind some one of the divisions made by the rabbins, and as Paul himself had been brought up as a rabbi, he was familiar with these minuter divisions and rabbinical methods of teaching.

The rabbins divided the whole Mosaic law into six hundred and thirteen precepts; two hundred and forty-eight corresponding to the number of members of the human body, according to the anatomy of the rabbins, were affirmative precepts: three hundred and sixty-five corresponding to the number of days of the year, were negative precepts. From this correspondence it was held that if on each day each member of the body keeps an affirmative precept, and abstains from something prohibited by a negative precept, the whole law is kept. Of course all this impresses us as absurd, but let us note this, "women are subject to the negative precepts, or prohibitions only, and not to the affirmative precepts, or injunctions. This exception arises partly from their nature, and partly from their being subject to the authority of husbands." If Paul meant the Jewish law, he may have reference to some one of these rabbinical precepts, but in our Scriptures we do not find it.

Furthermore we note that Paul was not addressing Jews who would, of course, naturally have an interest in the law, but he is writing to a church largely composed of those gathered from pagan nations, who had no special knowledge or interest in the Mosaic law. Besides the incidental quotations, he clearly refers once in this letter to the Mosaic law, and plainly states that it is "the law of Moses," but this he uses simply as an illustration. It was not Paul's manner to preach the law, indeed a careful examination will show that Paul was continually battling against Judaizers who would enforce the law while Paul preached "Christ and Him crucified." "For I through the law," said Paul, "am dead to the law, that I might live unto God." Any absence of direct enforcement of the Mosaic law, where the spirit of Christ prevailed, was consistent in Paul. He himself claimed that the law was provisional. Since this is Paul's position, he would be inconsistent in enforcing some precept of a past law upon believers in Christ who had not interest in it. To what law, then, does Paul refer? May we not believe that Paul referred them to what was the law and custom of their own pagan nations? This they would at once understand, and Paul's position would be the same as that of Peter, who enforced submission for the sake of the cause in order that no eruption might arise between pagans and Christians. The Greek word for law means that which is received or established by custom or usage.

In the passage from first letter to Timothy, Paul bases his argument of women's subordination on the priority of Adam's creation, and the priority of Eve's sin. Adam was not deceived, but yet he sinned; Eve was deceived into sinning. Who, then, was really the greater transgressor: Adam, who sinned knowingly, or Eve, who was beguiled into it? If this passage teaches subordination by priority of creation, we simply note that Adam himself did not consider Eve as his subject, but welcomed her as one with himself, his co-partner and co-equal.

In order to understand the application of Paul's position, we must know to whom he wrote, his purpose in writing, and the condition of those to whom he wrote. His letter to Timothy was concerning the church at Ephesus, over which he had placed Timothy. He gives Timothy special instructions as to the position to be maintained during a state of disorder brought about by Judaizing teachers who sought to counteract Paul's influence, for the church at Ephesus was in a state similar to that in Corinth. The letter to the Corinthians, he tells us at the outset, was addressed "unto the church of God which is at Corinth."

What, then, was the general condition of the women of these churches? If we know this, light will be thrown upon Paul's reasons for enjoining silence and submission. We must look through Paul's glasses if we would know how Paul viewed the situation. Through all the historic ages, not only among the Greeks and Romans, but also among other peoples, woman's position was most abject. The birth of a daughter was considered unfortunate. In some places it was held that women had no souls, as it is still in Mohammedan teaching. She was doomed to be a slave, a drudge for her husband's comfort and pleasure. In India, Turkey, China, Old Palestine and Ancient Egypt, as well as cultured (?) Greece and powerful Rome, it was considered a cardinal virtue to keep woman in abject silence. "For a woman silence, sobriety and in-doors are an adornment," said Euripides, the Athenian poet.

Whedon quotes in his New Testament commentary, Callistratus, the model of Demosthenes, as saying, "The ornament of trees is foliage; of sheep, wool; of horses, the mane; of man, the beard; of women, silence." Schœttgen said, "Women were allowed in rabbinical schools, but only to hear, and never to speak or to ask a question." Rabbis, for most trivial reasons, degraded women by enforced ignorance and then despised them for it. When Paul forbade women speaking or asking questions except of their husbands, was he not following out the rule of the rabbinical school in which he received his education as a rabbi? From all the testimony which past history has for us, would we not expect that from these centuries of subjection there would arise disorderly characteristics of the sex leading to confusion and excitability in the religious assemblies of the early church? In fact, the same conditions were manifest in the fourth century of the Christian era. Whedon also quotes Chrysostom, the great preacher of Constantinople, who was much annoyed by the noise of the women, "There is apt to be great noise among them, much clamor and talking, and nowhere so much as in this place; they may all be seen here talking more than in the market, or at the bath. For, as if they came hither for recreation, they are all engaged in conversing upon unprofitable subjects; thus all is confusion, and they seem not to understand that unless they are quiet they cannot learn anything that is useful, for, when our discourse strains against the talking, and no one minds what is said, what good can it do them?"

The command to silence would be very proper to such as has been described, but to think of applying the same restriction to the devout, cultured women of our day is simply abominable, and could Paul be among us, he would certainly marvel at the stupidity of those who would enforce injunctions which he was compelled to enforce upon the disorderly women at Corinth.

We must remember that those to whom Paul wrote these restrictions were gathered largely from pagan nations, bringing with them much of pagan customs and the results of pagan training. These customs must be gradually banished by the steady development of Christian truth, yet restriction in regard to woman's teaching must be sufficient to avoid a clash between pagan law and the gospel of Christ, so that all things may "be done decently and in order." Missionaries to-day have to meet difficulties similar to those of Paul, in that, while they preach the principles of Christianity, they have to make temporary concessions to the customs of a people.

A WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONGRESS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

[The following responses to our symposium on temperance in the World's Fair, which appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 20, came too late for insertion in that number, but are too good to miss publication, so we give them place here.—ED.]

FROM MARY A. LIVERMORE.

I think it very desirable that there should be held a "World's Temperance Congress" during the World's Fair. But it also seems to me that there should be a Congress of Temperance Women in addition to this. Our work in many ways is different from that of men, and some matters that we shall accentuate they may not think so important. The ballot in the hands of women as a temperance measure, for instance. It might be arranged—this World's Congress of Temperance Women—as a section of the World's Temperance Congress, instead of being a separate affair. That would be better, and would put temperance work before the public in better shape—would unify the work, which is very desirable. As to topics of papers and addresses, I shall have to think very carefully before expressing an opinion, for the papers and addresses should be of unexceptionable worth, and entirely apropos to the present condition of the world and its needs.

FROM HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.

You ask what part, in my opinion, temperance should have in the program of the approaching World's Fair. To this I would reply, emphatically, that I think temperance ought to have just as large a part in the program as temperance workers can secure. No more important question can, in my opinion, be brought before the multitudes assembled there, and certainly none concerning which there is so much ignorance and prejudice combined, needing to be enlightened. I should warmly advocate the holding of a World's Temperance Congress during the progress of the Fair, and would urge especially the pressing of the admirable plan of organization and of work adopted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as I consider these the best adapted of any I have ever known to grapple with the unutterable evils of the drink traffic. In this way the cause of women will be advanced as well as the cause of temperance. I would also strongly advocate a full representation and exhibition of the work of women all over the world.

FROM MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

I do certainly think that it would be most desirable to hold a World's Temperance Congress at some time during the progress of the Fair. If it could be an International Congress that would bring before the world the present attitude and condition of every country represented, and if it could result in unity and similitude of effort to solve the liquor problem on the part of these countries it would be the grandest result that could be achieved by the Fair. There will surely be gathered from every country men and women who are representatives of the highest moral and social ideas of all countries. As the thought forces itself upon me in outline, it seems to me that a grand work might be done.

A HOLIER symbol still in seal and sign,
Sweet April took, of kingdom most divine,
When Christ ascended, in the time of birth
Of spring anemones, in Palestine.

WHEN wakes the violet, winter dies;
When sprout the elm-buds, spring is near.

AN ORGANIZER IN THE FAR WEST.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In the little town of Stevensville, Montana, I have found a model W. C. T. U. The valley is conspicuously beautiful, its outlines detailed by the grandest mountains. The pride of the basin is a delicate, pink flower, double, resembling the portulacca; an immortelle, because its name, bitter-root, is perpetuated in the name given to valley, mountain and river. This union, like that floweret, is God-planted, with its everlasting, beautifying, up-tending influence in the fertility between those ridges. There the voices of the gentlest women go upward in song, prayer, counsel, warning, entreaty and benediction to the ear of Him who hath made these rich pathways in the mountain clefts where heaven kisses the earth so near and the angelic choruses echo the temperance anthems.

Its president is a young English woman, Mrs. Parnell, wife of the Methodist clergyman, who has been in the United States but two years. The meetings are held weekly, so no one can forget the time. At each meeting the president reads a prepared program for the next, and thus the women are put on duty, and the sessions are methodically business-like. The devotional exercises, as well as the presiding at public meetings, are rotatary, and out of this training-school comes a working force prepared for all emergencies. The four walls of the Methodist church in which I spoke were decorated with grateful looking and grateful smelling evergreen. Flags were in profusion, and the National motto was conspicuous. Pots of blooming geraniums were cheering and refining, and a transparency bidding us "Welcome" introduced me to a congregation of friends. All this enthusiasm and these intelligent undertakings were explained when I learned that nearly every family was a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL.

Such embellishing of our tabernacles means hard work, but it brings its return, just as the brightness, beauty and hospitality the saloon-keeper puts within his saloon draws. If he will prostitute art and the beautiful to open the way for the development of the satanic, why shall not we the more use the same in the development of the divinest?

To add to this bit of jotting let me say that I have been many a mile and spoken many a word since I last wrote you. After turning away from my good friends in California, I proclaimed our gospel throughout the Willamette Valley and east of the Cascades, under the lead of loyal Anna R. Riggs, who must have been born in some "land of steady habits," since she so persistently goes forward in the organizing and strengthening of the lines in Oregon.

Lucy A. Switzer, whom I term "the incomparable" in faith and zest and executive rule, and who can shoot a bird on the wing every time, utilized a week and sent me to Walla Walla, Waitsbury, across the Columbia to Columbus, and over the mountains to Goldendale. You who live on level ground and beside railroads in the East, ought to get in double strokes "For God and Home and Native Land," but I doubt if you accomplish more than the brave ones out here.

Thence to "The Sound" for a month, that land where "every prospect pleases and only man is vile," and over which floats the National banner for increased membership, but where in that November time of rain and wind and heavy emigration, no desires or plans of Mrs. Shaffer, who has the stoutest courage in the smallest body of us all, could bring railroads and steamers to time. Fancy waiting in a steamship office at the wharf one night and a day for a steamer, with appointments falling behind in consequence, and you have an idea of concentrated agony.

Hop-growing is a leading industry in considerable sections of that region, and there is generated by it and left behind it a per cent of selfishness and depravity, a weakening of the moral life and of the interest in religious and reformative measures, always evinced when dollars are made from any business that leads directly or indirectly to the hurt instead of the good of humankind. But I had splendid audiences in a number of places there, and as elsewhere the walls of separation between righteousness and unrighteousness are building, and all men must soon choose whom they will serve.

I next went to Wyoming, which has proven that it has brains within its borders. Remarkable insight and outsight has been evinced in its almost perfect state constitution.

From there I flitted away to New Mexico, where I was charmed with our women. You cannot find greater refinement, intelligence, or loyalty than are found in our leaders there. The way was well opened and I had good audiences. Social receptions were exquisite in character, beginning with one in the parlors of the Territorial president, Mrs. M. C. Raynolds, at Las Vegas.

But, oh! the primitive Mexican element! We need not go outside of the United States for foreign missionary work. It speaks illy for "the power" that has had them in control for four hundred years, to find the great majority of them unable to read and write their own language, and in possession of no great stimulus or high motive, but content to sit the days away upon the sunny outside of the house and indulge in as much liquor and tobacco as they can get. I spoke in one purely Mexican town, composed wholly of the comfortable but unattractive-looking adobe houses. The one who served as interpreter upon the first night was a young man who sold liquor in his father's store, and on the second night I had the services of a well-educated Spanish lawyer from Colorado, whose breath was so redolent of liquor that I could scarcely stand beside him. I will venture those were the first temperance speeches they had ever made, and they must have felt like men impressed for the military. Think of a territorial statute requiring that all teachers of public schools must be able to read and write in order to draw public money! A legislature, three-fourths or more Mexicans, enacting such a law, shows the settled content in ignorance and the unprogressive spirit of a people held in thralldom by superstition and untruth. The climate is alluring and the mineral resources an attraction, and the incoming influence must be felt in time. The thanks of the nation are due those soulful ones who "hold the fort" down there for an uplift toward purity and enlightenment.

I stopped again in Wyoming upon my return, and addressed the same small audiences as before. Idaho gave me most generous hearing under the circumstances which made so against all business. Snow-blockades, rains, washouts and intense cold combined to defeat all work. An inexperienced individual can hardly measure the relief felt when, with a rotary snow-plow ahead, we steamed through hills of snow beyond a blockade which had imprisoned us in a rail car for three days and nights. Boise City, with its almost tropical climate, crowded its largest church four days and nights. Not many capital cities receive the word so gladly. There in the elegant home of Banker Moore and his charming wife and family I was left alone to comfort and my pen.

And so I journey on through storm and sunshine, thankful for the continuance of strength and the privilege of labor. HENRIETTA G. MOORE.

OUR SECOND ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARY IN CHINA.

Returning to Swatow I took passage that evening on the steamer bound to Bangkok via Singapore. I was the only white passenger. The captain was very kind when I said, "I am such a poor sailor, please try and give me a good room." At once he ordered the cabin boy to prepare his room, and I took up quarters in his large and beautiful cabin. The third day I made my appearance on deck and found I was the only passenger, so I went down to see what the steerage was like. To my great surprise I found between six and seven hundred Chinese, fourteen women and about a hundred children. The weather was very warm and they were not over-dressed, but it being Sunday I wanted very much to speak to them. I asked permission of the captain, who readily gave his consent, and I looked about for an interpreter, but to my dismay I could find no one who spoke English. I felt so drawn toward the women that I was bitterly disappointed that I could not tell them all there was in my heart to say, but they could not understand a word.

My stop at Singapore was quite unexpected both to myself and those who were looking for me later, so I took a carriage and went at once to the home of the president of the W. C. T. U. I found that Mrs. Oldham and her husband had gone on a vacation, but I was welcomed by the secretary and acting president, who were in the same house. I spent a delightful day with them, learning what they had done and planning for what could be done on my return. They drove me about the city, took me to all points of interest, and finished by going into some of the native stores.

Singapore is a place of rare beauty, situated on one end of an island, at the extremity of a peninsula, around which all traffic between England and China and Japan must pass; it has become a coaling station for the steamers, vessels and warships of the world. Located as it is, "over the equator," vegetation attains great size and flowers bloom the whole year. We almost imagine Moore had visited it when he describes the isle he was looking for,

"Where a leaf never dies on the still blooming bowers
And the bees banquet on through the whole year of flowers."

It is a place of great wealth as well as beauty, and many merchants have built elegant homes. The people seem to have gathered from the ends of the earth.

The union work has been carried on since Mrs. Leavitt's visit, but now they are very much in need of help, and I am hoping to spend some time there on my way to Australia.

At five o'clock in the evening we started for northern ports. The wind and the weather favored us, and four days' sail found our ship anchored at the mouth of the Meinam river waiting for a more favorable tide. Early in the morning we crossed the bar and steamed up the river to the city, about four hours' sail. The journey is delightful; on either hand the banks are lined with a dense growth of tropical foliage, the air is soft and balmy, ladened with the fragrance of ever-blooming flowers, while on the waters float boats of all sizes and shapes. Some distance up the river can be seen the fort, and near by, on a small island, is a beautiful temple erected to bring luck to the country, so at the very approach to the country we see the marks of heathendom.

About eleven o'clock we reach the city of Bangkok, where I am almost confused by the strange scenes. As soon as we anchored a gentleman came aboard to receive me, and I was driven to the farther end of the city. As we passed through the streets of this purely Oriental city, we saw some very strange sights, and again I felt shocked at the lack of clothing. The Siamese, both men and women, wear very little clothing, and other nationalities, save whites, dispense with every garment possible, while the children do not pretend to wear clothing. The street scenes were a perfect panorama, never twice alike. We passed Chinese, Indians, Siamese, in fact the lady driving counted and named fifteen nationalities. We saw large numbers of men wearing long yellow robes, draped in graceful folds about their bodies. I was told they were Buddhist priests, of which there are several thousands in the city. Every male, some time during his life, must become a priest for a number of years, during which time he is supposed to separate himself from his family and go to the priests' quarters in the temple grounds to live. They are supported by alms from the common people, and many thousands of able-bodied men are thus maintained in idleness.

Just imagine a city with a great net-work of water roads in place of streets. The chief thoroughfare is the river, and almost all travel is done by boat. Every one has his own boat; it would be quite impossible to get along without it. Of course this makes travel very slow, as the boats are rowed by the natives. It seems very strange to start out to shop, call or visit and be obliged to go on the water! From the main river in all directions have been cut canals, and all trade, traffic and travel is carried on on these water streets, and every kind of boat one could imagine, from the great war ships of his majesty, the King, to the canoe and floating raft of the natives, can be seen on these waters. The greater part of the native population live in floating houses. These line the banks of the Meinam river for a distance of some miles, and are mostly made of a framework of bamboo covered with long, heavy grass, waterproof, and built on rafters. Large posts are driven into the muddy bed of the river and to these the houses are fastened to keep them from floating with the tide.

The city might well be called a city of temples for there are many hundreds of temples scattered throughout its streets. Each temple is surrounded by very large grounds inclosed by a high fence, and beside the temple are scores of houses for the priests, shrines, preaching houses and pavilions for the use of worshipers, and one inclosure contains the house or rather the plot where the common people are cremated, also a place where the prisoners who die, and, in fact, all who die and are too poor to pay for cremation, are thrown to be devoured by the vultures.

Many of these grounds have a strange fascination about them. I visited one not long since; everything seemed falling to decay. Before the temple two large images of colossal size, placed there to guard the gateway, had fallen, the head was broken from one and the feet and hands from the other. I could but offer a prayer, "Even so may idolatry fall, never to rise again!" The gilding was falling from the walls of the temple, and the outside was covered with both moss and creepers. The sacred cow and white elephant of marble were nearly covered by a wild growth of jungle. The gates hung by one hinge, while the pillars of the pavilion supporting the tiled roof had broken and one end of the roof lopped down. All spoke of ruin and decay.

It was a wild and even weird scene, for, as the twilight shades gathered, the croak of the raven, the chatter of the magpie, and now and then the screech of the vulture in search of prey could be heard, and from a distant part came the echo of a click, click. We discovered in a far-off corner, some convicts who had been set to work sawing down trees and with every movement of the saw could be heard the clicking of the heavy chain. These were sentenced to heavy work for life and were chained at the ankles and chained together by the neck.

I am suffering from an attack of the fever that prevails through the East, and am obliged to rest for a brief time. I hope to be remembered especially by our sisters, that both my strength and faith may continue, to perform the very difficult task assigned me. JESSIE A. ACKERMAN.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

MATILDA B. CARSE.

Dear white-ribbon sister, brother, boy or girl: Have you a Temple mite-box on your table? If not, write to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, inclosing a two-cent stamp, and it will be promptly sent you on condition that you will drop into it a cent a day, or its equivalent, during the next twelve months. Mite-boxes in quantities will also be sent to unions for the cost of transportation.

Over one hundred thousand dollars have been pledged to the building fund of the Temple. About one quarter of this amount has been paid. Soon the sound of the hammer will be heard upon the great building, and a host of the friends of temperance from east and west, north and south, will be invited to take part in the grand ceremonial of laying the corner-stone. What a satisfaction it would be, if upon that occasion we could say, $100,000 has been paid in gifts, and that amount of the capital stock is actually owned by the W. C. T. U. This sum could be held now by us, if the friends who have promised, in the next two months would make a strenuous effort to redeem their pledges. And those who are intending to give, would confer a double favor by doing so at once. The capitalists who hold the stock would willingly surrender in our favor, if we could only raise the money ourselves, as these good men have only taken stock in order to help on the enterprise. They are not to get the full amount of profits made out of the building. All they are to receive on their investment is an annual dividend of five per cent; the balance of the income belongs to the W. C. T. U. Of the $600,000 capital stock subscribed, but $30,000 of it is held by us.

Will not the friends of temperance everywhere who favor the erection of this National building for our great organization, and who intend giving, but are waiting to see if it is an assured success, make it such by sending in their checks at once to our National treasurer, Miss Esther Pugh? The building is now an assured success, only we will come into the entire possession of it sooner if all friends will hasten the presentation of their gifts.

Let all unions and Loyal Temperance Legions send to us at once for autograph lists, if they desire to have their names placed under the corner-stone of the Temple. Each member of the W. C. T. U. pays twenty-five cents for placing her name on the list. The boys and girls of the Loyal Temperance Legion pay ten cents each. In return we send them a large parchment certificate with all the names they have sent us inscribed thereon. In one corner of it is a picture of the Temple, with a handsome inscription, stating that the names of the undersigned have gone down to posterity under the corner-stone of the Temple. When framed this makes a handsome picture to be hung in headquarters, and as the years go by it will increase in value.

If we had more such self-sacrificing spirits as Miss Lelia E. Johnson, of Plymouth, Ohio, soon would the entire capital stock of the Temple be owned by the W. C. T. U. Miss Johnson has just joined the Hundred Dollar Band. She writes: "Inclosed is a draft for $54.40 my first installment. I will send the rest before 1891. I am teaching here this year, and find plenty of hard work, but if in this way I can save aside from necessary expenses my hundred dollars for the Temple, I shall feel amply rewarded."

The mother of this noble daughter, Mrs. L. E. Johnson, also joins the Hundred Dollar Band. She says: "Inclosed is $25, the first installment of a hundred dollars which I promise to pay to the Temple before January, 1891. I hope I may have the pleasure of looking on that grand monument of woman's faith and work, the completed Temple; but if I should not, I will be glad to have my name written there in testimony of my loyalty to and faith in this work." We have still another addition to our Hundred Dollar Band, Mrs. Sarah H. Evans, of San Jose, California, who, with tender wifely love, desires that her name (Sarah) may be dropped and her husband's substituted. She says: "My husband being a good temperance man, I prefer having his name instead of mine inscribed on the tablet, so that if spared (he being seventy-five and I sixty-five) we may have the pleasure of seeing it when we visit the World's Fair in 1893."

Mrs. Mary H. Dickson, of Holdin, Mo., sends some beautiful fine white crocheted edging, five yards, narrow, ten cents a yard; three and one-half yards, two inches wide, twenty-five cents a yard. Miss Mary J. Buck, Worcester, Mass., donates six pretty Easter cards, tied with white ribbon, price twelve cents each; also ten booklets, "Souvenir W. C. T. U." (hand-painted), price fifty cents a copy. This dear white-ribboner says: "I have been an invalid for eight years, not able to walk but little, but I do want very much to add one stone to the Temperance Temple." Mrs. E. H. Hooker, Boston, Mass., sends a pretty crocheted tidy, price one dollar; Mrs. M. J. Lebbingwell, Warren, Ohio, sends a drape painted on cotton batting, price fifty cents. Four pairs baby socks have been received without name, price thirty cents a pair. A white-ribboner from Taunton, Mass., sends a pretty blue silk scarf painted in apple blossoms, price $1.25; Mrs. E. L. Comstock, Union Springs, N. Y., a crocheted sofa pillow cover in bright wools, price one dollar. Mrs. Anna B. Lane, Ford, Mo., a beautiful crocheted child's collar, price fifty cents. Two skeins of silk raised and wound by a girl of the Harrismuth, South Africa, W. C. T. U., has just been received from Mrs. Mary Gray, price fifty cents.

All money orders and checks for the Temple should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, National treasurer, and treasurer of the Temple fund. All information in regard to the Temperance Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres. Woman's Temperance Building Association, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Our Children.

A WELCOME TO SPRING.

BY ELEANOR W. F. BATES.

RIGHT robin, the king,
On a bough a-swing,
His delicate plumes wide fluttering,
Caroled and shouted to all the birds,
In the sweetest and gayest of music-words.
Then whistled his comrade, th oriole,
And sang with the strength of a happy soul;
The bluebird came with his warbling brothers,
The thrush, and the wren, and a host of others.
The flower-roots hidden beneath the sod,
Stirred and shot up a blossoming rod;
The violet languidly opened its eye,
The cloudlets paused as they floated by;
The crystalline dew-drops quivered again,
Eacn grass-blade hastened to hear the strain,
And the liquid notes of the birdling choir
Grew sweeter and louder and clearer and higher;
And mortals said, as they heard them sing,
"The birds are welcoming back the spring!"

AN EASTER CAROL.

BY ALICE PERRY.

It was the eve before Easter, and little Miss Prim had closed her millinery shop an hour later than usual. There were nearly twenty hats and bonnets to be sent home that evening, and the rest to be completed and delivered the following Monday to the more patient of her exacting customers.

When the last stitch was finally set, Miss Prim was very tired, and after locking the front door of the shop and putting her big Maltese cat to bed, she went to the tiny room at the back of the store, where there were a stove, a bed, some pictures on the walls, among them a worsted sampler Miss Prim had worked in her youth, a table, some chairs, and a book-case or two. Here the little milliner sewed, and slept, and cooked her meals, all in one small room. She took her candle and made a last cautious survey of her tiny domain, including a timorous peep under each individual article of furniture, from the mahogany four-poster in her bedroom, to the three-cornered footstool behind the shop counter, for Miss Prim lived in nightly dread of burglars. Satisfied, then, that no intruders were lurking about, she tied on her night-cap, said her prayers, and went to bed.

All was still in the front part of the store. The moon peeped in through the cracks in the window curtains, the little clock ticked in the corner, and Tommy, the cat, snored peacefully on his cushion.

Along one side of the room there ran a glass case, filled with feathers, birds, flowers, wings, gilt and silver pins and daggers, and ribbons of every width and hue. Upon the top of the case was perched a big stuffed owl, looking very wise and solemn, indeed. Miss Prim was extremely proud of him, and kept him on the case for ornament. He also served her as a sign of her millinery business. In the middle of the room stood a big hat tree, covered with hats and bonnets, allready trimmed, and back of it was a tall looking glass with an old-fashioned gilt frame. Miss Prim had been requested to sell this looking glass by a great many of her fashionable customers; but it had belonged to her own great-grandmother, and she would not have parted with it for the world.

Perched on one branching arm of the big tree was dear old Grandma Marsden's new spring bonnet of black Leghorn straw, with gray silk facing, curly black plumes and two tiny gray wings. A hat as big as a bandbox cover, brave with ribbon bows and a long ostrich feather, was to have made glad the heart of sweet Kitty Blossom on Easter morning; and on another branching arm hung a dainty brown turban with yellow velvet jonquils pinned on the front, that belonged to pretty, stylish Mrs. Forbes, who had meant to wear it to church the next morning. Its neighbor, a plain Quaker bonnet of silver gray satin, shrank away from it in disgust, and wished itself safe in the bandbox, on its way to the demure Quakeress, Miss Rachel Grey, who said "thee" and "thou" and always wore gray dresses and white muslin neckercniefs.

Besides these, a smaller stand pushed into one corner held a collection of winter chapeaux, marked "half-price," which had failed to attract customers the past season. Then there were hats and bonnets trimmed and untrimmed, grave and gay, for Miss Prim did a thriving business, and had nimble fingers as well as a nimble tongue.

But all was still now in the little store. The late evening shoppers had gone home, and the moon rose higher and higher, stealing in at the shop window, and making a bright patch of yellow light upon the narrow floor.

One—two—three—four—five—six—seven—eight—nine—ten—eleven—twelve—rang out in slow strokes, and then tick, tick, tick, went the clock again. The owl on the glass case which had sat starring at the moonbeams, suddenly flapped his wings, and crying, "Tu whit, tu whoo," flew off the case to perch on top of the hat tree. Instantly there began such a rustling and chirping from the small stand in the corner, such a fluttering of wings and tapping of bills against the sides of the glass case as transformed Miss Prim's millinery shop into an animated bird cage.

"Let us out! Let us out!" piped fifty small bird voices at once, while the wings on Grandma Marsden's Leghorn bonnet tried to fly to a striped gray and brown breast that trimmed the prettiest of the stand of winter hats, and a sparrow's head, perched on the top of a bonnet close alongside, chirped loudly in distress at the conflict going on between the other parts of its body. Everywhere heads were trying to reach wings, wings were endeavoring to join with tail feathers, and every moment the chirping grew louder and more piteous, for Miss Prim had sewed them all on with stout linen thread, and they could not move so much as a claw.

"Cut us off! Cut us off," cried all the heads and wings in small fine voices.

"I am tired of perching on this bonnet," complained a robin's red breast.

"My legs are cramped," said a blue jay crossly.

"The dreadful creature who owns this shop has sold my head and claws," said a yellow-breast mournfully.

"My wings are gone, and my brother's and sister's tail feathers are all on Mrs. Devastateur's winter bonnet," said a woodpecker's head, tapping sharply the hat tree with its long bill.

"I have lost my splendid tail," spoke a peacock's breast, vainly trying to peep into the mirror over its neighbor, a brown thrush's shoulder.

"Dear! dear!" sighed a poor little orange and green wren, gasping for breath, "I am sewed on this bonnet right through my windpipe. I'm afraid I shan't last much longer," and the wren shut her eyes, and folded her claws meekly.

"The idea of laying a bird out in such gay feathers," crowed a rooster's tail derisively. "Cock a doodle doo!"

Just then the midnight chimes began to ring from a neighboring church tower, and with one accord the birds stopped their clamoring to listen.

"Last Easter eve the chimes sounded close to my ear, as I was sitting on my old nest at the top of an ivy-covered steeple in England," cawed a jackdaw's wing, almost black in the face from being fastened too tightly upon a red felt turban.

"I wonder what has become of my wife and babies," sighed a missel thrush, pecking restlessly at a bunch of mistletoe berries, then wiping his bill in disgust.

"Oh, dear! oh, dear!" sighed all the other birds at this, being overcome by mournful recollections.

"Tu whit, tu whoo," hooted the owl, descending from his perch, and seizing Miss Prim's big shears. And then began such a clipping and snipping, that presently the room was full of breasts, wings and beaks, all flying together.

"I cannot find my tail," mourned a little cocksparrow, with a red breast, green head, and two yellow glass eyes.

"Nor I my left wing," complained a snow-bird hopping about upon one gilded leg.

"Oh!" shrieked a timid field thrush, clad in gold and purple, flying up on Kitty Blossom's broad-brimmed hat. "See the monster that kills and eats us! Fly for your lives!" and then ensued such a fluttering and chirping that it was a wonder Tommy did not wake up and catch them all.

But he was so busily dreaming of his Sunday dinner of tender chicken bones, that Mr. Cockatoo and Mr. Owl softly tied his forepaws and bound him to the cushion with yards of blue ribbon, while Cock Robin, in a coat of pea green, armed the other birds with the tiny steel pins and daggers in Miss Prim's glass case. And then all the birds piped a decorous three cheers. It was a wonder that Miss Prim didn't wake up, too.

"All join claws and sing our woes to the Easter hats and bonnets," said Mr. Owl wisely. "Flowers have kind hearts. They are our best friends. They will breathe abroad the tale of cruelty to us."

So a brown whip-poor-will's head, a pink and black bobolink, and a terra cotta sky-lark, were chosen for leading soloists, with a peacock blue wagtail, stationed on an old-fashioned tall crowned hat to beat the time; and all the birds in the room began to sing. Such a funny sight was surely never seen outside of fairy-land! The big gray owl led the chorus with the yellow snow-bird, and after them chimed in purple birds, and scarlet birds, mottled and striped birds, some with green heads, some with yellow, some hopping on one foot and some on two, while the humming birds buzzed so fast that they could hardly be seen, and the bobolink and whip-poor-will sang themselves hoarse with indignation. A beautiful bird of paradise alone remained with drooping head, upon the bonnet which it trimmed after it had been cut free. Some of the birds remarked upon the fact, when a sprightly jay exclaimed:

"Poor fellow! and no wonder. One of those terrible creatures who buy and wear us, when trying me on yesterday, bellowed into the ear of another, that nearly all his relatives were to be shot and made into a cloak before another winter season. It is enough to make any bird feel melancholy," and the jay, beginning to feel blue herself, warbled more vigorously than ever.

Mr. Magpie, who was dressed in his own glossy feathers, did not care to sing, as the influenza had left his voice husky, but had often longed to hop out of the stupid glass case where Miss Prim kept him, and search for his wings and tail. So he peeped into corners, and drawers, and boxes, and found flowers and laces and ribbons, Miss Prim's thimble, a spool of thread, and a silver teaspoon which she kept to take medicine in, out of a tall glass bottle labeled Rhubarb.

"Ah! ha!" said Mr. Magpie, "I'll look a little further; but first I must hide all these things." So he hopped along a dark passage, till by and by he came to a door with a red and white striped something hanging from the knob.

"This funny bag is just the thing," thought Mr. Magpie, chuckling. So he scrambled up on the door knob, and dropped the silver teaspoon carefully into the receptacle, and then brought, one by one, the thimble, the spool of thread, a piece of blue ribbon, and Miss Prim's false teeth, which he had found in a tumbler on one of the shelves. He was looking around for something more, when a fearful snore from Miss Prim herself nearly frightened him out of his wits, and he scuttled back into the glass case, where he sat cowering among a multitude of ugly-looking bugs and dragon flies, nor dared he venture forth again that night.

The midnight chimes had stopped ringing hours ago, and the stars in the frosty sky began to grow pale, for Easter morning was near.

"Tu whit, tu whoo," cried the owl, flying back to his perch on the glass case, and in a trice the little shop was silent again, the hats and bonnets hung the same as ever upon the mahogany tree, the clock ticked on in the corner, Tommy drowsed on his cushion, and the magpie stood in the same old corner stiff and stuffed.

It was seven o'clock before Miss Prim opened the door to her little back room, and saw her duster bag swinging on the knob, with a piece of blue ribbon hanging out at the top.

"The land alive!" she ejaculated, putting on her spectacles, and investigating the contents, as she poured them into her lap. "The—land—alive!" she repeated in slow amaze, and that was all Miss Prim could find to say.

When she entered the shop to give Tommy his breakfast, she found her big shears sticking up in the floor in front of the glass case.

"Well! this does beat all," said she again, picking them up. "Have thieves been breaking in, I should like to know?" and she looked through her spectacles at all the hats and bonnets, in a way that made several shake in their strings.

But not a head, breast, or wing, answered a word.

MAMMA'S HAND AND JESUS' HAND.

A dear little child of three years of age lay dying. Father, mother, physician, friends, had done all in their power to stay the hand of death, but in vain. The mother bent over him in speechless agony. How could she give him up—her beautiful boy, her darling, her treasure? How lonely the house would be without the little prattler!

But love could not keep him, and the last moments of life were ebbing away. All were watching in breathless suspense for the silent messenger. Suddenly the dear child gazed around him, placed one little hand in his mother's, and stretching the other one out as if clasping another, his lips moved, and these are the precious words he uttered:

"One hand is mamma's, and one hand is Jesus'."

And thus, protected with the care of his two best friends, he took the short step from one to the other.

Walking truly in His ways,
Then no trouble, cross, or death,
E'er shall silence faith and praise,
All things serve thee here beneath,
If thou love God."

GOOD DAY.

BY BENJ. F. TAYLOR.

(Written in an album.)

Good days are not fashioned of sunbeam and flower,
Of green, velvet field and fragrant south wind,
Of clouds that let go their anchors of shower,
And trail round the planet, till Jenny Lind
Songs seem ready to rise from the Easter of sod—
As if snowdrops sang air to the glory of God.

Though gloomy the valley, and rugged the hill,
You may have days delightful whenever you will;
Blow high, or blow low, set the wind as it may,
True duty well done, makes a sunshiny day.
Where heart, hand, and hope, work sweetly together,
I bid you good-day, whatever the weather.

Though the rude storms are blowing,
And the gray skies are snowing,
And the Mays and the Junes are all faded and past,
Let this truth in the blossom embroider your sleeve,
The thoughts without guile are the lilies that last,
And I give you "good-day," evermore, Genevieve.

EASTER EGGS.

Aside from their use as food, eggs are connected with one of the great festivals of the Christian church

From the earliest ages, all nations have celebrated the awakening of nature at the vernal equinox, and the day we know as Easter may be considered a combination of these festivities with the Jewish Passover, but given a new significance by the risen Christ.

The word Easter may have been derived from the same root as east, and applied to this season of the year which was proverbially angry and stormy.* Another probable source of the word is Ostara or Eoestre, the name of an Anglo-Saxon goddess—corresponding to the Latin Aurora—whose festival occurred at this season.

The Saxons when converted to Christianity continued many of their customs at the spring festival—but instead of saying "Eoestre hath awakened," greeted each other with, "The Lord hath risen."

Until within a comparatively short time special services and observance of Easter were confined to the Catholic and Greek churches; now the festival is generally celebrated. An increase in the symbolic gifts at this season may be noticed, and many old customs are revived.

The most prevalent and characteristic custom of the Easter festival has always been the giving of eggs. Sometimes they were eaten, oftener kept as amulets, or used in playing games.

The pagan people at their new year feasts presented each other with eggs as a type of the new life of nature—which they colored to show their joy at the return of spring.

What wonder that with all the traditions and superstitions connected with the egg, that this custom was continued, even had it not been an appropriate emblem of the resurrection?

The early Christians continued this practice and colored the eggs red to symbolize the blood of their redemption.

St. Augustine recognized the egg as a type of hope. Marble eggs have been found in the tombs of saints and martyrs.

The contrast between the cold, lifeless egg and the warm downy chicken full of life and motion, may well have made the former an emblem of the endless life of the soul.

A German writer says:

"The egg as a symbol of the resurrection of Jesus, who broke forth from the grave as a chicken from the shell, has been from very ancient date an Easter gift with Christians."

. . . . . .

According to an old tradition, the bells went to Rome to be blessed at Easter time, and the eggs were dyed scarlet like the cardinal's cloak, to show that the bells had brought them back from Rome. Angels, too, were believed to descend with baskets of eggs for the faithful, and sometimes an evil egg found its way with the others with dire results.

. . . . . .

Easter eggs are usually boiled hard, the shells being stained with bright colors and variously decorated.

Boiling in dye gives any desired color to the shell. Madder or cochineal gives red, indigo with sulphuric acid, blue, onion skins a mottled yellow or brown if the boiling be long continued.

The prepared dyes are, however, more convenient. Variegated eggs are produced by wrapping them tightly with silk or print and in the boiling process, pattern and color will be transferred to the shell.

If, before boiling, letters, names or dates be written on the shell with grease, that part will not take the color, so white letters will appear on a bright ground.

To write on eggs already colored, dip a stick or pencil in strong vinegar or other acid.

Washing the shell with the white of a raw egg gives a good surface for drawing and painting.

The shells may be emptied and then painted or colored and used to hold small gifts.

The shells are first cleaned by washing in vinegar, then the eggs are pierced and a large needle is used to stir up the contents which are then blown out.

After decoration a ribbon is put through the shell or the holes are covered with bright paper.

Tiny cradles for the smallest of dolls can be made by breaking out one-quarter of the shell and adding pasteboard rockers.

Half-shells with handles of ribbon or paper make a pretty basket to hold a piece of jewelry.

For a vase glue a large button mold to the shell and paint the whole.

*Oster-monat, or month of the east wind, was the Saxon name for April.

THE WORLD'S WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE SABBATH.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

The World's Week of Prayer for the Sabbath should be filled with two kinds of petitions in its behalf—petitions to human government, as well as divine. They pray best who are busiest between their prayers in working with God on the answers. God's opportunity is man's extremity, not man's stinginess or laziness. It is profanity to say, "Thy kingdom come," and give nothing in money for foreign missions, or in labor for home missions. It is mockery to pray for better Sabbath laws, and do nothing to secure them or their enforcement. In some instances it is as much the duty of the people to petition for good laws, as for legislators to pass them.

At the suggestion of Miss Willard I "signal" to the Old Guard of reforms of which she is the Commander, some suggestions on petitioning:

1. Secure the coöperation of the ministers by personal calls upon them, which could be made most appropriately by the superintendent of Sabbath Observance in company with the president of the union in each place. The clergy as well as Congress need a lobby. Congressmen are so busy pressing the things that are pressed upon them, that any measure you are interested in is likely to be overlooked, unless you urge it by a personal call or letter. So the minister needs a missionary secretary to remind him of that cause, and some other prompter to remind him of the claims of temperance and the Sabbath. There are few ministers who, if they are personally reminded that the week beginning April 6, and including two Sabbaths, is the World's Week of Prayer for better Sabbath Observance, will not give at least one of the half-dozen regular services of that week to this topic, even if they do not think it best to hold special services. They should be reminded that the cause needs not only their plea but their people's verdict—a vote of indorsement on the National Sunday Rest Petition, perhaps also on some petition to the local officers to enforce the state laws, which ought to be printed on slips of paper or in the newspapers. Such a vote, taken in the Sunday evening service or in the prayer-meeting, should be by adults, counted, recorded under a petition heading, tested by the signature of the pastor, and forwarded to the Congressman, and in duplicate to one of the senators. If the pastor prefers to gather individual signatures, it is desirable that there should be a separate pencil and a separate petition for every pew, each with a written or printed heading upon it. Such a heading may be obtained from the Deborah of this battle for the Sabbath, Mrs. J. C. Bateham, Painesville, Ohio, if the place is near enough to get it in so short an interval. Otherwise, let petition headings be written or printed in the following, or similar, words:

(Duplicate for the House.)

To the United States Senate:

The undersigned organizations and adult residents (twenty-one years of age or more) of ———, hereby earnestly petition your honorable body to pass a bill, forbidding, in the United States mail and military service, and in interstate commerce, and in the District of Columbia and the territories, all Sunday traffic and work, except works of real necessity and mercy, and such private work by those who religiously and regularly observe another day of the week by abstaining from labor and business, as will neither interfere with the general rest nor with public worship.

[Individual signatures in their own handwriting, preceded by Mr. or Mrs. or Miss. Add more paper for individual signatures.] Name ———.

Occupation ———.

2. Let the officers of labor lodges be visited by a committee made up of persons having special adaptability for this work. As the ministers can be told that the petition has already been indorsed by the conferences and councils of nearly all the churches, so the Knights of Labor and Brotherhoods of Locomotive Engineers may be reminded that their National conventions have approved this petition, but that the local vote in the case of the labor organizations, as well as in the case of churches, is needed to confirm and strengthen the National action.

A Congressman will feel the petition of a local organization in his own district more than the action of the National body with which it is connected. Even though an organization may have indorsed the petition previous to last March, it is desirable that the indorsement should be renewed, as there is now a new Congress, with many new members.

3. Ask the merchants of your city not simply to allow a petition to be put into their offices and shops for signatures, but also to take a personal interest in securing indorsements from their customers. The petition should give in addition to the "name," the "occupation," that legislators may know what sort of people are petitioning. Unclassified petitions, which give no indication whether the signer is a liquor dealer or an honorable merchant, are of very little value. The quality of a petition is more influential than its quantity. It is not strange that the Seventh Day Adventists depreciate indorsements of organizations, since the only organizations, outside of their own churches, that will deliberately indorse a petition against Sunday laws are drinking clubs and infidel societies. When a legislator receives a single sheet of paper containing a Sunday Rest Petition that has been indorsed deliberately, after discussion, by the chief officers of the Knights of Labor, acting under instructions from their General Assembly, he knows that the measure is in the interest of workingmen. Individual signatures may approximate to like value by having the occupation given in all cases. When convenient it is well to have a whole petition devoted to one class, for instance, the officers and owners of railroads. A petition for the discontinuance of Sunday mails would be weighty, that was signed by farmers exclusively, since they are supposed to be unwilling to give up such a selfish convenience. Also a petition signed exclusively by mechanics and laborers, or by clerks.

If the entire W. C. T. U. should devote this special week to this special work, it would doubtless give such an impetus to this already strong movement, that it would soon achieve the long desired victory "For God, Home and Humanity."

THE NEW CREATURE.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The transformation of the human heart may be compared to the transformation of the wolfish into the doggish heart. The dog is nothing but a tamed wolf with hereditary dispositions toward behaving himself, and toward caressing his master rather than chewing him. But the old nature is still somewhere about. The dog bites on occasion, snarls often, and snaps when he is sufficiently stirred up. Take the horse; he trots along very well in harness as a rule, but see him when he jumps over the traces, takes the bit in his mouth, and shows his heels to the driver whom he was meekly obeying but a few minutes before. He is a wild horse still at heart. Take an apple tree; graft it with the cultivated scion; trim off its boughs, and let the sap go to this more regenerated spot. You will get some very nice pippins; but unless you keep the other branches trimmed they will bear crude and bitter fruit. The law of the new creature's life is herein illustrated. The new creature is from heaven, but is grafted on to the old creature that is of the earth, earthy. The whole study of the Christian's life is to subdue new realms and empires within his nature to the new, and to drive out that pagan thing, the old. This is not our business, but God's, and really the only thing we have to do, and the greatest thing possible to be conceived of by a free moral agent, is to have our will geared on to the great driving wheel of God's will, omnipotent by belts of faith and bands of prayer. Or to put it differently, Christ in us is the only hope of the glory of the transformed soul. The shell is in the sea, and the sea is in the shell; this is a good figure also of the work that is going on in a nature consciously submitted to the heavenly powers. The life of the Son of God must dwell in us, and "the faith of the Son of God" who doth so dwell is that vital force in us which makes us over new. Who knows what chemical equivalents there are in the world overhead and invisibly around us all; what neutralizers of evil, what oxygen and ozone of the eternal good? Let us study more and more the divine analogies of seen and unseen, "that we may grow thereby."

But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept.—I Cor. 15: 20.

If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above. —Col. 3: 1.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF EASTER.

Over and over again, as each year brings around the time of blossoming for the outward world, and this time of cheer and comfort and consolation for the inward world, our thoughts revert to the question of the true significance of Easter. It is interesting to note how, in the changes of years, the sentiment with regard to Lenten and Easter observances has changed. Time was, when a large portion of the Christian world would have looked upon any marked observance of Lent as a relic of Popery, and while we gazed with interest upon Easter ceremonies, we nevertheless regarded them as spectacular and unnecessary. Little by little, we have crept away from that Puritanical severity of attitude, and have come to feel the propriety of Lenten observances as we f l the propriety of praying the old year out and the new year in. Little by little, we have come to welcome the flowers on the altar, the choral services that fill the air with rejoicing, and the outward symbol and sign of our gladness in the great fact that Christ has risen from the dead.

To Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian, as well as to Episcopalian, the Lenten season has come to be holy time, and the Easter tide a period of grateful rejoicing. It is not for most of us to turn away from our vocations and to go into sacred and solitary retreat, though every honest soul must have seasons corresponding to that solemn period of seclusion. We have, or we ought to have, times when we can say to the world's gayeties and fashions and work and cares, "Wait awhile; my soul seeks some high mountain apart, where it may commune with itself and God." We all come, or should come, to the place where we can say with Whittier:

"Stand still, my soul, in the silent dark,
I would question thee;
Alone in the shadow, drear and stark,
With God and me."

There are times when we ought to say to the greatest things that come into our outward lives, "Stand back; there is something even greater that has its claim upon these hours;" times when even the little things (which are, after all, those which cheat us of our priceless time) are for the moment overswept by something that is of far more import to the life that is and the life that is to come.

The daily existence holds too much pressure and haste and rush for all of us. Alas for the soul that never knows these times of solemn pause in which we may search for our true selves! There is more than one sense in which a soul may be lost; it can be lost in a way that simply means that it cannot find itself. All life becomes so outward and artificial, so overlaid with engagements and so-called duties and work and pleasure, that, from morn till night, or from one week's end to another, it never pauses to stand face to face with itself and God.

The general trend of the existence may be toward right, but the habit of constant reference to the King of righteousness for guidance at every step of the way becomes abandoned. We may move on in the same way in which we have been going, but we cease to be consciously led. Our road may lead Godward, but we no longer are watching for the Master's footsteps in the track.

Hence, we need Lent; we need our forty days, and some of us a good deal more; we need to recognize our mountains of temptation, and to be able to discern the voice of Satan in the pleadings of our own soul for indulgence and ease; we need to stop long enough to call our sins sins, and our iniquities iniquities, instead of labeling them "tendencies" and "misleadings."

In one form or other the human soul needs its Lenten season, and if we do not make it for ourselves, God, in kindness, sometimes makes it for us by leading us into the desert of sorrow or of sickness. Happy is the soul that, out of such seasons of introspection and of sincere repentance for evil, comes to the Easter tide that is full of the one thing that can give a sad spirit succor—the consciousness of the living and loving Christ. To many of us the Saviour is a crucified Saviour, and nothing more; a Christ hidden out of sight, and buried so deep under the crust of our own absorbing selfhood, under our indulgence of self-will and sin, that resurrection seems impossible.

Easter should mean the coming forth from that grave and the entering into a new kingdom, set up within our hearts. At the Easter tide all vagueness, and unreality, and mistiness with regard to the personality and the power of a living, regnant Ruler in a soul should pass away into child-like obedience, into the constant presence and confiding comradeship of Christ. The soul will surely enter into this rest that receives Christ as its living Lord. Only to the extent that we are able to do this is He alive to anyone of us; only to the extent that He is living within us will our lives blossom and bear fruit; only to the extent that He is living within us shall we be of living strength and comfort and help to any other human soul. Still we have Emmanuel dwelling among us; and the only Bethany to which He can be invited is the innermost heart of the Marthas, the Marys, the Johns, and the Peters of our time. The chosen field for His miracle work is that by which He avails Himself of the hearts, and the hands, and the time, and the life of those in whom He dwells.

If, as Christians, we recognized the fact that His method of working on earth is through His children, and through them only, how they would rise up at this Easter tide, and roll away every stone of pride and sin and sit waiting by the gate of the tomb in which we have enshrined Him, begging Him to come forth into living activity in our own lives.

More and more we see that on each succeeding Easter He comes to a larger kingdom than has ever been His before. When we think of all the good that is being done in the world, whether ostensibly in His name or not, and remember that every fibre of this good is only the evidence of His life and love in individual souls, we can but see that He is a moving and living force in the hearts of the children of men. Think how the heart of womanhood is reaching out to succor and care for neglected and forlorn childhood. Think how health is giving itself to the comfort and care of sickness. Think how knowledge is swiftly invading the realm of ignorance. Think how light is penetrating darkness everywhere. Think how war is yielding to the principles of peace. Think of the brotherly and sisterly good-will all over the world in plans for the general welfare of humanity, and remember that all these efforts, large and small, are so many witnesses and indications that the Lord is risen, and Easter takes on to us a significance glorious beyond words.

We are not to bring the dead Lord to life again; we are only to recognize that He is alive and here, and in that recognition "to have life and to have it more abundantly."

WOMEN IN THE M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE.

At the Methodist Social Union held in the Palmer House, March 29, Miss Willard, Dr. M. P. Hatfield and Rev. E. G. Updyke were the speakers. We give below the substance of Miss Willard's brief address which is on a current theme of wider interest than the bounds of her denomination. It will be remembered that she with four other ladies was duly elected to the General Conference of 1888 and yet was not allowed to take her seat.

As a contribution to the agitation for woman's larger influence within the boundary of the great church which adds more than two new church edifices to its numbers each day in the United States alone, contains one hundred conferences and has enlisted twelve thousand ministers and over two millions of members, this brief address has special significance. Miss Willard's topic was, "Do the Next Thing."

Why should we not do the last? Because Methodists face the future, not the past; they believe in to-day rather than yesterday, and in to-morrow as the red-letter day of all the calendar; they repudiate the idea of "laying again the foundation of dead works," and rejoice in the purpose of "going on unto perfection." So they do the next thing and not the last. And what is the "next" according to my notion? Why I would have the church I love rise to the level of the new state of Wyoming!—that is all. To my mind that is the next, the needful, the necessary thing. It was a breezy debate they had in Congress on Wednesday last when Hon. E. B. Taylor, of Ohio, declared that "to put a good woman in the United States Senate might help it some." Is it not possible that to put a Methodist woman—they are all good!—in that Senate of our church which we call the General Conference, would help it, not only "some" but to the very summit and summation of its possibilities?

That spirit had worked in the deep heart of manhood making it willing to relinquish powers hitherto unshared, that rarest act of those who have authority. It was Christ's gospel, with its teaching that not political force but spiritual power is the final factor for good in government; it was Thy gentleness, O Lord, that made them great. And should not Methodist men throughout the nation be as far-seeing and magnanimous as the Christians of Wyoming? In that new state, as it will be in a few days, for everybody knows the Senate will concur in the World's Fair and the bill to admit the Wyoming "fair," men have made women voters on what basis? Not that of expedience, not upon a technicality, not in any of those evasive and shuffling ways that are used to disguise reasons that diplomatists do not choose to declare, but upon the broad, high ground of justice and the nature of things. I think it is Montaigne who, when asked why he loved the man who was his closest friend replied, "Because it is he, because it is I." We all believe this to be the only basis of an alliance that shall endure and bless.

So in the church founded by Susanna Wesley's son John, and set to music by her son Charles, we women of right ought to be admitted as one half its undivided integers, simply because we are that half; because we are ourselves and you are yourselves, my brethren, or reduced to the simplest terms, "Because it is he, because it is I."

Methodist women have done good and not evil to their dear old mother church all the days of their lives. They have shared equally the brunt of every emergency, and flinched in the face of no hardship. More heroic annals than they have given us in the itinerant's home, and on the missionary field, do not exist. They have proved their power to originate and conduct great enterprises; they are lacking in no gift or grace that has prepared their brothers for leadership in Zion. Then let the men of Christendom's most generous-minded church lead the grand divisions in Christ's army, and keep pace with the progress of the state that gleams to-night like a gem amid its mountains of snow; let our watchword be, "Methodism for Methodists;" men and women hand in hand, lay aside every weight and let in the lay women. When I was yonder in Cheyenne, Wyoming's capital, where swinging bells and booming cannon last night voiced the rejoicing of the freest commonwealth upon the globe, they told me how it came about that woman's ballot was incorporated in their territorial law. "Who would be free himself must strike the blow," finds fresh illustration here. One of the chief legislative officers stated to me that his mother urged the justice and value of this measure so strongly upon him that he could do no other than urge it with might and main upon his associate law-makers. Here is matter for reflection, sister Methodists! Suppose the relations of men to our General Conference hung trembling in the balance, should we witness the dignified apathy apparent, but not real, at present manifest? How was it in the grand reunion that preceded 1868 with its great controversy on the question of lay delegates? The welkin rang with argument in those stirring, war-like days. And whose vote turned the scale in favor of justice? Woman's; she saves others, herself she will not save. It is the mother-hearted instinct every time. And so I call upon you, my brothers, to represent us; to bid us welcome to your highest council; to summon to the front God's gracious army of reserves; that when you form in line of battle against our common enemy, the saloon, the gambling house, the haunt of shame, still shall walk beside you the women of the church militant, sweet and serious, and clad in the garments of power.

THE Central W. C. T. U., of Chicago, is, without doubt, the most notable union in the world. From its methods the keynote has been caught throughout the nation. Practically, its first President was Miss Willard, who here studied the effect of different plans, and then as corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U. sent them broadcast by means of letters, documents and her book entitled "Hints and Helps," our first hand-book of methods, published in 1875. It was the first local union in the world to have headquarters of its own and to establish a daily gospel meeting; the first to send out an address to women pleading for the banishment of wine from New Year's tables—a reform already rendered practically complete. It was the first to seek a column in the local press for W. C. T. U. news; to introduce scientific temperance text books (those of Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson) to the notice of teachers, and to seek for the adoption of a temperance lesson in the Sunday-schools, Miss Lucia Kimball being among its original members and devoting herself to this department from the beginning. Its heroic annals in going before the common council of Chicago asking for the enforcement of the law against open saloons upon the Sabbath day and being well-nigh mobbed within the court house walls, will never be forgotten. But in the light of present achievements, those were the days of small things. There was a beautiful and gifted woman who stood close beside our National President in those difficult days and whose first financial work in the white ribbon movement was trudging through the winter's cold along the stony streets and begging one hundred business men to give ten dollars each to constitute Miss Willard's salary. Rev. Dr. J. O. Peck, now missionary secretary of the M. E. church, promised to be the one hundredth man, and with this encouragement Mrs. Matilda B. Carse started on her first venture in dollars and cents. Sixteen years have passed, and what is the record of the local union whose President Mrs. Carse has been for fifteen years?

We take it as "boiled down" in the summary of Miss Helen L. Hood, the corresponding secretary, and as we said last week, the power behind the throne in all that this W. C. T. U. has wrought. She says: "Our union carries on two missions in which nightly meetings are held; two day nurseries and kindergartens; two Sunday-schools; an Industrial school; mission for women; Free Medical Dispensary; lodging house for men; restaurant; committee work; press, Bohemian and police station.

"The records for 1889 show that 15,000 children have been cared for in the day nurseries and kindergartens during the past twelve months; 37,000 persons have been in attendance at the mission; 1,651 patients have received treatment at the dispensary; 206 visits have been made by doctors. The Sunday-school has enrolled 8,000 children, and the Anchorage Mission has sheltered 4,000 women; homes have been found for 500; packages of clothing have been given to 1,020 needy families, and over 1,000 meals; 52,540 men have been lodged at the Inn; $40,000 have passed through treasurer's hands."

The program of the annual meeting was like a cross section out of the bleeding, broken heart of Chicago's forgotten and forlorn ones. It was not talk about "doing good," "following the Master," etc., it was the thing itself. One could see the faces of hungry children, hear the prayers of desolate wives, and see the fair, repentant faces of women whom society calls "outcast," as that blessed program unfolded its infinite pathos and immortal hope. As Miss Willard justly said, "There is nothing so dramatic, so poetic, romantic and tragic, as the temperance reform."

In it are the pain and passion of

"The great humanity that beats
Its life along the stony streets."

Here Talmage could find material for a more moving sermon than he has ever preached; here Tolstoi might match any book he has written from pages of reality; here Robert Browning would have gathered the living colors of the heart to furnish forth anew his magic palette, and Mrs. Browning rewritten her "Cry of the Human" to a minor key more sad than that of old. For you, white ribbon women of Chicago, have dropped the plummet line of your sisterly love into the depths of human pain and passion, not that you might portray them upon canvas or weave them into melodies "as sad as earth, as sweet as heaven," but rather that with hands pure as a child's, and tender as a mother's, you might cast in a branch of healing from God's own tree of life that bloomed on Calvary.

MRS. FRANCES BARNES, National superintendent of young woman's work for the W. C. T. U., has been appointed by the World's W. C. T. U., as well as the New York, delegate to the British Woman's Temperance Association Convention to be held in London in the month of May. Mrs. Barnes is a Quaker by birth, rearing, and present affiliations, and one of the best types of that blessed communion. When a young married woman in Chicago, where her husband, Willis A. Barnes, was a lawyer, she came to a meeting of the local union over which Miss Willard presided, and with winsome words and ways offered her services. She was at once promoted to a position of responsibility in connection with the Chicago work, and has gone straight forward conquering and to conquer, until there is not a more beloved or helpful superintendent among the forty on the National list. Mrs. Barnes and her husband have now lived in New York City for years, and she has there developed a work unique and beautiful. She has organized groups of cash boys from the up-town dry-goods stores, opened reading rooms for them, and secured young men and women to teach and interest them in all good things. Then she has organized other groups of young people of the well-to-do class, whose specialty it is to care for these sensible forms of charitable endeavor. Besides she holds drawing-room meetings in many of the largest parlors in New York City, where, under the auspices of the Y. W. C. T. U., the most distinguished speakers present different views of the temperance and other reforms. Mrs. Barnes is a member of the central council of the King's Daughters, is a delightful speaker, and has unusual talent in writing, both prose and verse.

EVERY W. C. T. U. woman should provide herself with Annual Leaflets, which are furnished at National Headquarters, for cost of postage, and an enrolling tablet from either the National or her state. Thus equipped she is ready for an enrollment campaign. The Annual Leaflet gives the best possible epitome of the work of the W. C. T. U. and of the avenues it affords for the exercise of every gift and grace bestowed on woman, and with this before her no one can resist giving her name for membership. Even if her hands are already full she can give her name and the weight of influence this carries, and with it the fee, thus she is entitled to wear the talismanic white ribbon. A doubled number on our lists is the watchword for 1890. Our increase year by year more than justifies this expectation, and no woman now on our books is released from the responsibility of bringing at least two others. Our army must number half a million this year. See if God is not calling you to just this service.

THE New Republic, prohibition organ, in Nebraska, is being overlooked in the urgent claims of other and excellent papers for circulation in the great campaign that is now on; can we not apply some of our funds right there in the state to meet the needs of local workers? If our constituency knew the heroic struggle of a few true hearts to keep that paper going, they would forward their gifts to Mr. H. W. Hardy, Lincoln, Neb., the "Abe Lincoln" of our Nebraska work. So shrewd is he, so kind and so indomitable, that when the liquor men put a coffin on his door step to indicate his fate if he continued to prosecute them, he calmly took it to the store, sold it for seven dollars, and gave the money to the W. C. T. U. Mr. Hardy, who has been ill all winter with rheumatism, edits the paper from his sick room, and his wife, former President of the State W. C. T. U., aids him in every way she can. Help that man and woman to carry that load and you have mightily helped prohibition in Nebraska.

TO THE active member of the W. C. T. U. every week is "self-denial week," but every union has its passive members, its retiring members, who have never learned that earnestness to the point of self-forgetfulness is the true modesty, and that the double extract of pride and selfishness is in the spirit which refuses to do needed work, because it cannot do it well enough to win applause. To these and the others, who have "no time" for Christ's word, though they want to bear His name, we commend these words of Ballington Booths:

"We cannot become aware of the evil influences which are paralyzing God's church and driving thousands further from the cross without realizing deeply the growing need of more self-sacrifice. Selfishness is gradually narrowing the hearts who should like Christ be filled with compassion. Avarice is piling up, where the moth and rust doth corrupt, the silver and the gold which should be cast into God's treasury. Worldly-mindedness is decorating the cross with wreaths of flowers, and standing it in some little ornamental niche instead of carrying it on up Calvary to victory. Man-pleasing is making many a one burn incense at the shrine of worldliness who would do better to choose the martyr's death than thus sell the conscience and put on the Christ-light."

READERS of the series of articles upon working girls' societies, recently concluded in THE UNION SIGNAL, will be interested in the convention to be held in New York on April 15, 16 and 17. Boston, Philadelphia and Brooklyn Associations will coöperate. The stated object of these organizations among busy women and girls is "to secure by coöperation, means of self-improvement, opportunities for social intercourse, and the development of higher, nobler aims." All persons interested in the movement are heartily invited to attend the sessions. We hope there will be an equally hearty response, not only from those who are wage-workers, but from those whom love has relieved of the necessity for daily toil during fixed hours, at fixed wages. Tickets of admission and programs can be obtained from Miss Virginia Potter, 262 Madison Avenue, New York City.

THE W. C. T. U. is profoundly interested in the campaign for woman's ballot now being carried on in South Dakota. Prohibition is in the Constitution and only needs to be backed up by a large constituency in order to become the greatest success ever witnessed along the line of outlawing the saloon. Our speakers will go to the brave, young state and render all the help they can. But we must also furnish money, and Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, of La Fayette, Indiana, has undertaken to raise $1,000 for the National W. C. T. U. for this purpose. She has already secured about $400 of this sum, and we hope our friends who believe in prohibition by woman's ballot will contribute generously. Mrs. H. M. Barker, president of the Dakota W. C. T. U., will have this money placed in her hands for use. Address Mrs. Gougar at La Fayette, Ind.

SENATOR BLAIR has introduced his Educational Bill again to the Senate, diminishing the amount of money called for from seventy to sixty millions. It is thought this can pass and still not interfere with plans for reducing the revenue. Now let every white-ribboner bestir herself—writing letters on behalf of our local unions to the senators of the respective states and urging the adoption of this bill. Let us set at work and in this difficult emergency having done all, stand. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt is in Washington to forward the new movement and will wisely direct our forces as heretofore. Mrs. Bittenbender will also work unceasingly for the measure.

The octopus grip of the lottery interest in New Orleans is illustrated by the fact that when our brave and valiant W. C. T. U. defender, Rev. Sam Jones, spoke out in his sledge-hammer fashion against the lottery on its native heath, right in the heart of New Orleans, the papers from that day would have none of him, and though wont to report at length his sermons, dropped him like a hot potato, a thing practically unparalleled in his experience. Beyond our power to express is the purpose and prayer of our hearts as women devoted to the cause of "God and Home and Native Land," to help overthrow that abomination of desolation, the Lottery of Louisiana.

The result of these meetings will be, not additional burdens, but adding new workers. Many persons who will not attend the union meetings in a hall will gladly accept an invitation to the home, if conveyed by a dainty card or note, and with surroundings as bright as flowers, music, recitations and bright talk from some earnest speaker can make them. Herr Bebel, the present leader of the Socialist party in the Reichstag, German Legislature, is the author of a noble book entitled "Woman in the Past, the Present, and the Future," one of the most progressive works on the woman question that has appeared. He is a man of about fifty years of age, with short dark beard, auburn hair, and a delicate, rather prepossessing appearance. When not fighting the cause of the Socialists, he goes back to his trade as a wood turner. He has for years been the bete noire of Bismarck, and has been frequently imprisoned for his utterances against the government. No one could by any possibility be a friend of Bismarck who believed in the emancipation of woman, for the man of blood and iron has little cognizance of forces that are chiefly spiritual.

ON DUTY.

The Still Hour.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 13, 1890.

BY REV. C. C. HARRAH.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

(Luke 7:1–35; Acts 13–18.)

Sunday, 13; Luke 7:1–35. Verse 9, The first heathen who experiences the miraculous power of the Saviour, gives the highest example of faith. This example shows us that true faith springs from humility, is joined with love, and aims for and seeks to appropriate what is highest. Verse 15, Here is an intimation of what our Lord will do for us in that blessed, heavenly land. The child shall be delivered to his mother; and the work of death in separating those who love each other, and love the Lord, shall be destroyed, and tears shall be turned into smiles, and weeping into joy.

Monday, 14; Acts 13. Verse 2, The providences of God and our inward convictions mark out for us duties and lines of work, which we cannot innocently neglect. The most humble service which is required of us is honorable and worthy of being performed. Verse 10, One blow after another may be needed to tear the mask from the deceiver's face and expose to him the true state of his heart. Verse 52, True believers are not shaken by afflictions, but are sustained by God's grace and are filled with joy.

Tuesday, 15; Acts 14. Verse 6, We should not always submit to shame and disgrace; but there are times when to attempt self-justification and to resist, is folly. We must learn to distinguish which course will most of all promote the honor of God. Verse 19, How fickle the world is, praising at one time (verse 11) and ready to kill at another! Verse 22, Some think to make their way to heaven through scenes of levity and the indulgences of worldliness; but neither Christ nor any one of His beloved saints, that we know of, got there by that way.

Wednesday, 16; Acts 15. Verse 1, It is wrong to exalt the forms and rites of religion so as to detract from the honor and dignity of Christ himself. Our Lord's redemptive work, and a living communion with Him, is the only ground and way of salvation. Verse 2, Sometimes with great firmness and plainness of speech we are required to stand for the truth. Verse 31, His short epistle gave to the disciples great joy. How much more should we rejoice, who have the many and helpful epistles of the New Testament.

Thursday, 17; Acts 16. Verse 1, Here at Lystra, where the apostle had been almost killed (chapter 14: 19), he was now, as trophies of his sufferings, permitted to find a number of faithful disciples, and among them his own Timothy. Verse 2, The testimonies which a worthy young man receives for his goodness and fidelity often have a great influence in determining his future career and success. A bad name is a poor thing for a young man to start with in life. Verse 13, This was the beginning of the great work of the gospel in Europe. It began with a few women, who were in the habit of holding a prayer meeting.

Friday, 18; Acts 17. Verse 4, We must be patient, if in our work we do not see immediate or great results. The blessings attending the efforts of the best teachers and workers have been gradually developed. Verse 6, It is a blessed thing where the people are awakened and disturbed by the truth which leads to salvation. Verse 12, The women are mentioned first probably because they were the first to receive the gospel, and the men were influenced by them.

Saturday, 19; Acts 18. Verse 3, Every boy among the Jews learned a trade. There is a poor prospect before one who grows up in indolence and without knowing how to do anything. Paul was accustomed to support himself by working at his trade. It is evidence of a weak and unworthy mind to be ashamed of manual labor. Verse 21, Paul was always heroic in pursuing his prescribed course, but he was equally prompt and humble in submitting to the will of God. Like a lamb he obeyed the voice of the Lord; but in his contest with the world he was like a lion.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(A Good Prayer Meeting. Acts 1:13, 14.)

The meeting spoken of in the text, in the upper room in Jerusalem, is an example of those gatherings for prayer which have always been common among the worshipers of God. Some of the points to be kept in mind, in order to have a good prayer meeting, are:

1. Keep the meeting in mind, go to it in the spirit of prayer, and make it a prayer meeting. There are many things which those present and which the community need, and it should be a time of earnest communion with God and of sincere petitions for His blessings.

2. A spirit of communion and helpfulness on the part of those present helps greatly to make a good prayer meeting. There is a blessed relief from the things that worry and the troubles that distress, by the social help, the greetings and the conference, and all feel when they go away from such a meeting that it was good to be there.

3. A good prayer meeting is a place of such communion with Christ and such interest in each other, that there will be a free expression of interest and desire to lead the unsaved to Christ. The prayers, the exhortations and the songs will be awakening and helpful.

4. Make much of God's Word. His promises are a sure ground of confidence. We cannot rely upon the signs about us in ordering our prayers, but we can rely on God's promises. Direct the meeting into the current of God's purposes and promises.

News from the Field.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

GLEANINGS.

White-ribboners everywhere have reason to feel gratified with the legislation secured this winter at the hands of the first South Dakota Assembly just adjourned. Almost every measure for which the department of legislation and petitions finally thought it best to work was secured; and although it required patience and vigilance to secure some of these, it was not so much because the members were opposed as because the time was so limited, so much to do, and every member had bills of his own that he desired to push.

The laws secured are as follows: First in importance is the prohibition bill. It is a splendid bill, even after all its amendments, and although the penalties for violation in some cases are not as heavy as in the bill passed by North Dakota, it is still an iron-clad bill and one that will delight the hearts of all law-abiding people.

The bill seemed absolutely faultless as it came from the hands of the Rev. William Fielder, president of the State Enforcement League, but it was fought inch by inch by the liquor men, from the day it was introduced until the final vote. The "emergency clause" came in for its share of determined and desperate opposition, but was carried in the Senate with only five dissenting votes, and in the House by ninety-nine to twenty-one, and the law will go into effect May 1 instead of July 1. The pen used by the Governor in signing the bill has gone into the custody of the State Historical Society.

The bill to prevent the circulation of obscene pictures and literature, specifically includes The National Police Gazette, The Illustrated Police News, and The New York Illustrated News. It passed the Senate without a nay vote, and the House almost unanimously, and was signed by the Governor.

A bill to prevent the sale of tobacco to minors under sixteen had practically no opposition, and the scientific temperance instruction bill went through without amendment as it came from the hands of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, National superintendent of this department. This bill would never have become a law this year had it not been for constant watchfulness by the representatives of the W. C. T. U. legislative department at Pierre, or it would have gone through shorn of the only penalty—forfeiture of public money—that amounts to anything. It came to a final vote on the last day of the session, and was signed by the Governor after adjournment.

The "age of consent" was raised from fourteen to sixteen with little opposition, only three votes opposed in the Senate. Mrs. Barker, state president, was asked to address the judiciary committee on this bill, and with the writer, was very courteously received by the committee, and given a respectful hearing. The question was presented by Mrs. Barker in a chaste, dignified, and convincing manner, and the bill was unanimously reported favorably and is now a law.

A bill providing that the state board of charities and corrections should be composed in part of women, passed the House, but was defeated in the Senate, and the matter was compromised by introducing and passing another bill providing for an "investigating committee" of three women, whose duty will be to visit all the state charitable and penal institutions and report any abuse and make suggestions to the board, but who will be without a vote. Dakota women are, however, perverse enough to think that the state institutions would be better served if two or three women had been put squarely on the board, and that the investigating committee had been composed of men.

The department of franchise is being vigorously pushed in the third district, Mrs. Emma Smith De Voe, of Huron, having been in the field since the first of December almost constantly. She makes a thorough precinct canvass in every county, organizes a union wherever one can be sustained, sees that a superintendent of franchise is appointed for every union, and organizes a suffrage club composed of men and women in every precinct, closing with a county suffrage convention in every county.

Mrs. DeVoe is at present writing, at work in Spink county, where as usual, her labors are attended with the most gratifying success. Churches are opened to her Sundays as well as week days, and the most hearty coöperation given by both ministers and people. The most intelligent and influential in both town and country are fast rallying to the standard of "justice and equality before the law."

This district is indebted to Miss Susan B. Anthony for the splendid gift of one hundred dollars with which to help carry on this work. In order to make a thorough precinct canvass of the district before the June school election, at which all women may vote under the constitution of the new state, two or three more workers will be put in the field. Mrs. L. L. Jager, of St. Lawrence, South Dakota, will begin work at once, and Mrs. Alice M. A. Pickler will return from Washington, and take the field about April 1.

Through the generosity of the proprietors of the Woman's Tribune, Woman's Journal and other friends of suffrage, an immense amount of literature has been sent into the state and especially into the third district where the precinct canvass and enrollment have furnished the names, but the needs will increase until the election next November. No literature accomplishes as much as the weekly suffrage paper that comes regularly, and friends everywhere who desire to help the cause and can only do so to the extent of a dollar or two, can do no better than to send the Woman's Tribune or Woman's Journal to some one in Dakota for a year.

The foreign literature prepared and sent out by Mrs. Grubb, of Kansas, National superintendent of foreign work, is also very important, and help is needed to translate, print and send out enough to meet the demand.

The annual meeting of the third district will occur June 3-5, at Faulkton. Mrs. Pickler, Mrs. Barker, and Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, of Indiana, will be present, and probably another suffrage speaker from the National Equal Suffrage Association.

Mrs. F. M. Swift, corresponding secretary of the state W. C. T. U., who has recently sustained the loss of her mother by death, will have the sincerest sympathy of all her co-workers in her great bereavement. May she trust "Him who is our refuge and strength; a very present help in trouble." PHILENA EVERETT JOHNSON,

MRS. HARPER'S WORK.

The temperance union of Beaufort was organized in 1886, and has held its own during this period of four years, and although only a speck in the galaxy of stars forming our National W. C. T. U., yet it can point with thankfulness to its prosperous Band of Hope under Mrs. Christensen's superintendency, numbering over one hundred members. Beaufort, as every one knows, is in the "Black county," and it has been a matter of conscience and self-reproach that we have done nothing for the colored people.

Miss Laura Towne and Miss Murray, two great apostles of education to the colored people of St. Helena Island, have their rousing temperance meetings where the colored temperance workers make a rally five hundred strong; but in Beaufort, the best and most devoted women cannot carry the majorities, as they do in St. Helena. There the greater number, perhaps, of the temperance societies, is formed of graduates of the Penn school, and who ever heard of deserting an Alma Mater? So when the Penn school, the mother of a dozen other schools, unfurled the banner of temperance and reform, a host gathered under its folds.

A year ago, the attempt was made in Beaufort, by Mrs. Neblett, of Greenville, S. C., to organize or enlist members for a colored temperance union. She spoke in two of the colored churches here; her addresses were strong and forcible, and her kindly manner and evident interest in the colored people inspired enough sympathy in the cause for sixty-seven men and women to give in their names. But Mrs. Neblett's visit was near the Southern summer time, and nothing can be done here in the way of holding public meetings after the thermometer stands at ninety degrees. That is a signal to adjourn.

Therefore, as we have never heard of any harvest, we fear that the good seed was scorched, but after all nothing good can be lost spiritually or physically, and Mrs. Neblett's addresses no doubt prepared the ground for some of her hearers at least to be ready to receive and welcome the later sowing. Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, of Philadelphia, who has been working in Tennessee, Georgia and South Carolina ever since the middle of November, speaking sometimes three or four times a day, and working constantly without more than one or two days' rest at a time, arrived here February 17, and has been steadily at work ever since. Through the instrumentality of some of the ladies of the W. C. T. U. her coming was made known to the colored ministers, some of whom had heard and enjoyed her addresses on a previous visit many years ago. So she was cordially invited to speak in all the colored churches here, the two Methodist, the two Baptist, and in the College chapel, a large hall connected with the Beaufort Free School. In some of the churches she has spoken twice; in all, she has had good audiences and unwavering attention. Of course it is unnecessary to tell THE UNION SIGNAL that Mrs. Harper is a remarkable speaker. With something of Miss Willard's quietness of manner and gentleness of voice, Mrs. Harper speaks smoothly and fluently, illustrating by apt story or jest any point she wishes to make. She does not repeat herself, and exhibits considerable diversity in her manner of presenting the cause to which she is devoting her life. At one of the meetings she exhibited Sewall's charts of the stomach, and the effects of alcohol upon it. At the close of every lecture, she made an appeal to the men and women to enlist and form a temperance society; but she was especially careful to refrain from urging them to sign the pledge, although it was repeated to them, and they were asked to do so. Under the auspices of her work, a temperance club has been formed among the women, and a few men have given their names and promised to join.

She has also visited St. Helena, Lady's Island, and Port Royal on our own island, five miles south of Beaufort. Besides this, at the special request of Miss E. H. Botume, a mother in Israel among the colored race, and the head and founder of the Whitney School now flourishing in its twenty-seventh year, under the shadow of the great oaks near Charles Fork (dating back to 1562) at the request of Miss Botume, Mrs. Harper spoke in her schoolhouse on Sunday, March 2, to the Sunday-school, also under the care of Miss Botume and her devoted assistant, Miss Clements. Miss Botume's zeal for the welfare of her colored people has no rest nor change; rather, it seems to grow with her years as if she were following the Master's precept, "Work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." The same might be said, we doubt not, of hundreds of other self-consecrated educators and uplifters of humanity. A noble cause enlists noble characters. Mrs. Harper is still with us, and although very weary from her much speaking is continuing her work. We wish that she might spend a month longer in our midst so as to help the colored temperance club to get thoroughly under way, and perhaps indicate to them lines of work.

As we look over the field for colored temperance work, it is at first a disheartening prospect. Thirty temperance workers against a town full of drinkers, and alas! many drunkards, but my dear father's watchword has always been, "Confide in Domino," and we cannot have a better for our cause. He who has said that with faith we could remove mountains, will make the grain of mustard seed grow into a great tree for the good of our town, if we do our part. God grant that the colored men and women of Beaufort may water and cherish the good seed now sown, so that a wide-spreading reform may be established in our midst. But men and women must work together, or there can be no complete success.

" 'Af and 'af is not a whole, sir,
But two 'alves make it perfect quite."

A MEMBER OF THE W. C. T. U.

MICHIGAN.

GOOD WORDS FROM PULPIT AND PEW.

Sunday, March 9, was a red-letter day for the W. C. T. U. of Vermontville, Mich. By previous arrangement with the pastors of the only two churches, the Congregational pastor, Rev. A. O. Cossar, preached in the M. E. church to a crowded house, composed of both congregations. His theme was "Reform," and his text, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal till the whole was leavened." He closed his plea for prohibition of the liquor traffic by repeating the old story of the man and his wife pulling at a rope thrown over their house by opposite ends at first and afterwards at the same end, the husband going round the house and taking hold with his wife. To the husband's statemen of the moral that it was evident they should never accomplish the purpose of life unless they pulled together, the quick-witted wife replied, "Yes, but you see I did not pull with you, but you pulled with me." The speaker recommended his hearers to "pull with the women" in this work for temperance.

The evening service was conducted in the Congregational church, just across the street, and consisted of music, recitations, essays and short talks by members of the W. C. T. U. and members of the two congregations, the Rev. Thomas, of the M. E. church taking the lead. The subject for the evening was "Nebraska."

The meetings were a great success in calling attention to the work of the W. C. T. U. and the necessity of action to save Nebraska from the curse of license. A collection was taken for the work in that state.

On the Wednesday evening following, the W. C. T. U. and an appreciative audience were entertained till a late hour by Mrs. d'Arcambal, superintendent of prison work for this state, giving a vivid picture of life in prison and out of prison drawn from her own experiences in this line of work. There is a prospect of increased numbers and quickened activity as the result of these meetings.

A WORKER.

GOOD WORK.

A Demorest gold medal contest was held March 3, in the Fremont Avenue M. E. Church, Bay City. The subjects of the recitations were, "Our National Curse," "Home Versus Saloon," "The New Declaration of Independence," "Patriotic Prohibition," "The Voice of the Dram Shop," "What the Constitution Guarantees," "A National Prohibition Party our Only Deliverer," and "Young America's War-cry." To exemplify the patriotism more fully, two large schoolhouse flags were draped in graceful folds back of the speakers, and in the center a handsomely framed picture of Frances E. Willard, beneath which were the initials of the W. C. T. U. and the Y's; above all the legends, "From Contest to Conquest," and in orange on black, "Long Live Demorest." Beautiful palms adorned the rostrum. Five young men and three young ladies from fourteen to twenty years old were the contestants, each wearing their well-earned silver medals, and it would be almost impossible to render the recitations more perfectly than did they. The music was of a high order, aside from the Beebe orchestra, who played in their best strain; the solos and duets sung were lovely. The medal was awarded to Robert King, who proudly wears the trophy of a closely fought battle. Many went away, although ten cents admission was charged. The programs were printed by the W. T. P. A., the cut of the medal being made for the occasion.

We have had nine silver and one gold medal contests since the middle of July, and who dares say that we have not made prohibition sentiment? Working men say, "I would not miss attending a contest if it cost a dollar." Others would rather go than to an opera. Many men say they see prohibition and license in a very different light than before they heard these arguments. Yet there are some pious people saying it is only a species of gambling, more harmful than dancing or card-playing. We have not yet learned how these people vote, however I venture to say not for prohibition.

GOOD WORK AT THREE OAKS.

Two years ago the unions of Berrien county met in Three Oaks and effected a county organization. Mary Allen West had promised to come and address us the last evening. She, with her friend, Emily A. Kellogg, of the Kindergarten Magazine, missed the train and did not arrive till midnight. The large congregation that had assembled to hear Miss West, after listening to impromptu addresses by the citizens, dispersed. It seemed as if Miss West's opportunity was lost. But she tarried with friends at the parsonage over Sabbath, and on Sunday evening spoke to a fair audience on the evangelistic work of the W. C. T. U. Her earnest presence and words won the young ladies, and finally this winter, with the aid of our state superintendent of Y work, Mrs. Law, an organization was formed. Under the auspices of the Y and the W. C. T. U., a free reading room has been established. At the opening, March 12, the ladies gave a reception which was largely attended by interested friends. A lunch was served, music was furnished, and spirited addresses were made by one of our prominent merchants, Hon. T. L. McKie, by Rev. M. M. Martin, Dr. T. Pardee and E. K. Warren, inventor and manufacturer of featherbone. Strong, earnest words were said in favor of the reading room. The idea was presented that "out of the heart are the issues of life," and that "as a man thinketh so is he." The responsibility resting upon citizens of supplying a community with agencies productive of right thought and its concomitant, virtuous action, was emphasized.

We all rejoice at this new force for raising aims and ideals, projected into our village and county circles. The saloon will move off as intelligence increases.

The success of this movement is largely due to the active interest taken in it by Mr. Warren, the proprietor of the factories, which have brought many young people to the village. Mrs. Warren is a leading spirit in the Y, thoroughly in sympathy with every effort helpful to her native town. Would that all factory owners would manifest a like interest in the welfare of their employés.

Mary Allen West's noble book, "The Care and Culture of Childhood," one copy of which found its way among us and was eagerly read by a few earnest mothers, was the silent but powerful influence that finally resulted in the organization of a mothers' meeting.

Long ago the wise man strove to persuade men to listen to wisdom, to accept her as a sister whose counsel would lead in the way of righteousness; to see her in an aureole of light standing on the top of high places, by the gates of the city, by the highways of trade, by all the habitations of men, ever patiently seeking to win earth's pilgrims to hear her and "find life." The W. C. T. U. has for many years patiently and persistently voiced the call of wisdom "in an age on ages telling."

LIVINGSTON COUNTY CONVENTION.

The semi-annual convention of the W. C. T. U. met in the Presbyterian church in Dansville, March 4 and 5, and a program of unusual interest was mainly carried out.

The meeting opened with a Bible reading by Mrs. A. L. Pease, of Dansville. Mrs. A. E. Rice, president of Genesee county, who has for years been among the educators of our county, was with us during the entire meeting, and gave a paper of rare excellence on "Social Purity." Mrs. E. M. Parmelee's beautiful address of welcome, Miss Minerva Davis' retrospective response, Mrs. Dr. Kate Jackson's paper on "Health and Heredity," Mrs. J. F. White's on "Scientific Temperance Instruction," and Mrs. J. H. White's answer to the query, "Is the W. C. T. U. an Evangelizing Agency?" were all adapted to the times, and listened to with marked interest. A paper on "Narcotics," by Mrs. Dr. Venable, was requested for publication, because time did not admit of its reading. A consecration service was like a camping place in the weary march. Mrs. N. B. Congdon's plea for state and National papers, and the question-box on mothers' meetings and social purity, by Mrs. H. P. Lyon, were interesting and needed features of the meeting.

The resolutions adopted characterized a march forward. Mrs. L. S. Rounds, president of Illinois union, gave one of her thrilling speeches, and helped on the work in many ways. Her strong, invincible arguments for the destruction of the liquor traffic sank deep into many hearts.

Mrs. L. P. Davies, Livingston's president for the fifth year, is said to be a matchless presiding officer, and her smiling face and happy thoughts threw a glow over all the proceedings.

Elegant lunches were provided, and March pansies blossomed at every plate.

Not a note of discord was heard. Pastors, editors and many citizens vied with each other to make the meeting a success. All was inspiring and instructive, and the Holy Spirit was an abiding presence.

ORANGE COUNTY CONVENTION.

The semi-annual convention of the Orange county W. C. T. U. met in Montgomery March 12 and 13. Threatening clouds above and deepening mud beneath were without effect upon the dauntless white-ribboners, for they came in larger numbers than ever before; fifty-three voting members, besides a good representation of visitors, were present.

Artistic hands had decorated the platform of the Presbyterian Church in which we met, with blooming potted plants, while from the pulpit was suspended the banner of the entertaining union. Mrs. Clark sounded the keynote of the whole convention, when, in the opening sentence of her admirable address of welcome she said, "In His name we greet you."

An interesting discussion by county superintendents, with suggestions from each in her special department, brought out many helpful thoughts. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman conducted the question box, and was especially pleasing in her witty answers, making particularly plain the position of the National W. C. T. U. in regard to politics. The evening meeting was finely attended. Mrs. Rev. E. O. Moffett, of Pine Bush, recited "A Voice from the Poor-house," with great acceptance. Mrs. Hoffman gave her eloquent and convincing address, "Modern Idolatry."

Among the interesting features of Thursday's program was a paper by Mrs. Young, of Cornwall, subject, "Crusade Gleanings." Mrs. C. C. Shaffer, delegate to the Chicago National Convention, gave interesting notes of that meeting.

Mrs. F. W. Miller, of Newburgh, conducted a song service, and a trio of young women from the same city delighted the audience with their excellent singing. Mrs. M. G. Underhill, of Poughkeepsie, ably represented the department of health, giving a practical talk on that important subject. Resolutions were passed, urging that special attention be given to the departments of mothers' meetings and parlor meetings, soldiers and sailors, young women's work and juvenile work.

The convention closed with an impressive consecration service led by Mrs. H. M. Isaac, of Cornwall.

NEW MEXICO.

AN EARNEST APPEAL.

I am five hundred miles from my home, in the extreme southern part of the territory, in the interest of evangelistic and prison work. The Lord has, and is, greatly blessing my efforts to raise the fallen and save souls. The results of the first week were two conversions in jail, and six signatures to the pledge; outside the jail, five conversions and eleven signatures to the pledge; but the object of this letter is not to tell of my work, but to ask for help.

Last November I went to Chicago and other eastern cities, for the purpose of securing donations of second-hand books for our territorial penitentiary: I received all the encouragement I could have desired, but so far I have received only two shipments of books; one from Mrs. Lewis, Missouri's state superintendent of evangelistic and prison work, and one from Mrs. W. W. Howard and other good ladies of Cameron, Mo.

I write this to ask the good women who so kindly pledged their help, to please send us their donations as soon as possible; and also to ask the assistance of any and all who can help us in this enterprise, for I assure you as our territory is new, and we have no aid from the government for such purposes, we are in great need of the assistance and coöperation of our friends in the east, and unless we can get it, the great masses must and will remain in ignorance, bondage and crime; and so I write to ask all who take, or feel an interest in the elevation of humanity, to make up boxes or barrels of books in their unions, churches or societies, and send them to the address given below, the freight being pre-paid; but taking a collection in union, church or society, or by any means or methods the workers may think best to employ.

The class of books (bound) needed are Bibles, hymnals, religious and temperance, with biographies of good men and women, histories, and in fact any books that a true mother would want to put into the hands of her boy to cultivate and mold a noble character.

Now, dear friends, please respond to this "Macedonian cry" for help, as liberally and speedily as possible. Eternity alone can reveal the good that may result from this "seed sowing."

Those sending boxes or barrels of books will please send them to

MRS. MARY TEATS,
Santa Fe, New Mexico.

FIRST DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The fourth annual convention of the first district was held in London, March 5–7. A heavy snow, the first of the season, deterred some of the frailer delegates from attending, but in spite of this, the attendance was good.

Our welcome was all that white-ribboners could wish, or white-ribboners could give. The reports from the several unions though not in all respects all that could be desired, yet did credit to the persistent faith of the earnest women here and there engaged in the work.

The annual address of the president, Mrs. Sara R. Boreing, was full of practical points, some of which will be put into practice the coming year. A half hour each morning was given to Bible readings, conducted by Mrs. Dodge. Papers were presented on such practical subjects as, "The Medicine Chest," "Bending the Twig," "The Fourth Commandment," etc., which were discussed in a manner to show that some of our women are giving earnest thought to these things.

The first evening was given to welcomes and responses, which were given and received in a manner befitting Christian co-laborers. The second and third evenings were occupied by Mrs. Dodge and Mrs. J. K. Henry, of Versailles, respectively. Mrs. Henry gave a note with no uncertain sound, on the subject of "Universal Franchise." A male quartette rendered valuable assistance during the convention with some beautiful songs.

Among the list of good resolutions was found one expressing loyalty to the National organization, and another pledging ourselves to wear the white ribbon always and everywhere.

At the close, according to our custom, a circle was formed and, hand in hand, we sang,

"God be with you till we meet again," and Mrs. Myers, of Williamsburg, offered prayer. We then separated, stronger for another year's work.

ILLINOIS.

HENRY COUNTY CONVENTION.

This was held at Kewanee, February 17 and 18, at the Protestant Methodist Church. Devotional exercises were led by Mrs. H. T. Lay. Mrs. D. H. Alvis was elected secretary pro tem. Special rules for procedure read: Address of welcome by Mrs. M. C. Pratt; singing, "Nearer My God to Thee;" remarks from Rev. J. W. Haney, in the way of ministers' welcome. He made a thrilling speech, although confined to about five minutes.

Response to address of welcome by Mrs. Alford, of Atkinson, who made a few very interesting remarks. Singing, "I Am Thine, O Lord." Secretary read greeting from Mrs. J. Mingle, of Amboy, who was unavoidably detained at home. Rev. M. B. Baker, pastor of the Protestant Methodist church, then welcomed the convention to his church, and made an earnest appeal against the use of stimulants as a medicine. Rev. Mr. Richards, pastor of the Protestant Methodist church at Streator, made a voluntary speech. Adjourned.

Monday evening Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge delivered a lecture in Library Hall, which was listened to with breathless interest by a large audience. A collection was taken amounting to twenty-two dollars.

Tuesday morning at 9:30 the convention opened with singing and devotional exercises, led by Mrs. Stitt, of Woodhull. Minutes read and accepted. Mrs. Woodbridge was introduced to the audience and made a few remarks. Committees were then appointed, and reports were called for, representing the various organizations in the county.

County treasurer's report read and accepted. A solo was rendered by Mrs. Love, of Orion. A paper was read on "Are We Growing?" by Mrs. H. T. Miller, of Geneseo. Mrs. Woodbridge continued the above topic in an easy, off-hand and instructive manner. She also gave us a pathetic account of the history of Miss Jennie Casseday, superintendent of the National flower mission department, asking for the prayers of the convention for her especially at this time, as she is now sick and less able to do work than formerly. Mr. Alford discussed further the same topic, and acknowledged that we were rapidly increasing, yet showed that whisky and tobacco cost us three times as much as flour, and that Atkinson (his home) was not by any means exempt from the curse. It was then moved that we send a message of sympathy to Miss Jennie Casseday. Rev. J. Moore, of the Presbyterian church, gave us an encouraging address, followed by a prayer by Mrs. Woodbridge, and then the meeting adjourned.

Tuesday afternoon at 1:30 the executive meeting was first on the program. One of the most interesting features was a plan given by Mrs. Woodbridge for holding the members in the union. Simply see that the officials are prepared to interest. Devotionals led by Mrs. Jennie O. Mussey. Minutes read and approved, also a communication read from Mrs. Grace Burgess. Miss Lulu Barnes, of Orion, gave a recitation entitled "The Drinking House Over the Way." Everyone present was melted to tears. Miss Willard's book, "Glimpses of Fifty Years," was introduced by Miss Gaston. Rev. Parker was called on for an expression. He believes a man must be reformed spiritually before he is saved from the appetite of drink. Rev. Parry, of Annawan, gave a very interesting speech, encouraging the ladies to go forward. Next was the president's annual report, which was a satisfactory one, full of hope for the future.

Earnest resolutions were passed by the members of the convention reconsecrating themselves to the entire overthrow of the liquor traffic and the preservation of the Sabbath; reaffirms former expressions of loyalty to the National W. C. T. U., and pledging it hearty support, also love and loyalty to the National president; expressing full belief in scientific temperance instruction for the children and youth of the land and hailing with joy the passage of the bill enforcing this, also a cordial vote of thanks for all courtesies received.

Tuesday evening Mrs. M. C. Pratt opened with a promise service, after which short addresses were listened to from Mrs. Bigelow, of Galva, Mrs. Farrell, of Woodhull, and Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. J. A. Widney, of Woodhull; secretary, Miss Jennie O. Mussey, of Atkinson; treasurer, Mrs. Lippincott.

The convention was conducted in a sweet Christian spirit, and we have reason to believe that it has been a truly profitable one. Adjourned to meet at Atkinson next year. WHITE RIBBONER.

WORK AT ALPHA.

Two contests for Demorest silver medals have been held by the I. O. G. T. of Alpha, and arrangements are being made for a third. The first contest was held January 31, in the Baptist church. First medal was awarded to Bird Knox. The second contest was held February 22, in the M. E. church, and medal awarded to Flora Newton. Besides the recitations they had vocal and instrumental music.

This contest work is being entered upon with great zeal and interest by the younger members of the lodge. We think this excellent work in the educational line for the young. The children of to-day will be the men and women of the future, and may God help them to be true to themselves, to God, and home and native land.

W. C. T. U.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry is conducting successful meetings at Aurora. She will, during March and April, visit other parts of the state.

Miss Mary Cowan and Miss Mary Mahon are visiting several of the Southern districts and doing splendid work. Mrs. Kepley, president of Effingham county, writes of the help they have been in her county in evangelistic and young woman's work.

Miss Clara Parrish, organizer of the fifteenth district, has been doing good service during the winter, and reports a number of new organizations as the result.

The sixteenth district convention of Illinois was held at Newton, March 12, and had a profitable session. Mrs. Shepler, district president, remained in Newton for two days and held three public meetings, addressing large and attentive audiences. Eight members were added to the local union.

A good W. C. T. U. brother-in-law writes from Troy Grove as follows: "Many thanks for the great pleasure conferred on this community while listening to the 'silver chimes' of temperance rung out so bravely by the gentle and motherly lady, Mrs. R. A. Emmons, of Chicago. She gave us four services, including other winsome talk to the Loyal Temperance Legion. Several said, 'I wish she was our preacher.' She captivated all hearts, 'even though the doses were strong and bitter she administered. Send her back.'" H. L. H.

ADDITIONAL ILLINOIS NOTES.

At an elegant banquet of the Quincy bar recently, no wine was served; a new departure. In the past some of its brightest ornaments have gone down into the maelstrom of strong drink.

Griggsville, Ill., has the honor of the first "flag entertainment." Mrs. M. Yates McMahan, county president, reports: "We had only to name the plan," which was heartily indorsed and carried out by the board and teachers. Now, who next? Nothing like it to arouse enthusiasm, and teach true patriotism to our future citizens, and affords a grand opportunity for laying a broad and deep temperance foundation.

Rev. Jordan has come and gone, like the "cyclone" that he is, and has left his track behind him, with the unanimous verdict in Quincy, "A noble worker, a Christian gentleman, offending none, making friends wherever he goes, and accomplishing much good."

IRENE H. SMITH.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE North Capitol W. C. T. U. of Washington, D. C., numbers forty-one members. Mrs. Maggie B. Platt has recently organized two new unions in the city. The Frances E. Willard union has between thirty and forty members, and is doing earnest and enthusiastic work. In one of these new societies a Loyal Temperance Legion was organized which now numbers sixty-five.

ON February 13, the Second W. C. T. U. in Van Wert, O., was organized by L. O. F. Austin, county president. The meeting was held in the African M. E. church, and composed of ladies from both colored churches. President, Mrs. J. A. Hughes; secretary, Mrs. A. T. Nickols; treasurer, Mrs. Anna Tyler.

MRS. SUSAN S. FESSENDEN, of Boston, will soon go to Virginia and South Carolina, to speak concerning the work of the W. C. T. U.

MISS ANNA GORDON organized a Loyal Temperance Legion of sixty members at the Half Orphan Asylum, Chicago, March 20.

MRS. S. M. I. HENRY, National evangelist, is holding very acceptable evangelistic meetings at Aurora, Ill., from which place she goes to Mt. Vernon.

THE Training School of Asheville, N. C., meets July 23 and 24, and perhaps a few days more. Misses Willard and Gordon will be in attendance, and probably Miss Elizabeth J. Scovel.

MRS. L. H. WASHINGTON, National organizer, has formed a W. C. T. U. in Port Jervis, N. Y., and is the first president of the first union ever organized there. Soon after the formation of the society, Mrs. Hoffman spoke, and the two meetings are pronounced a great success, the collections aggregating nearly sixty dollars.

A DEMOREST medal contest was held in the presence of a large audience at the rink in Plano, Ill., March 19, supervised by Miss M. M. Phillips, sister of Miss Rose Phillips. The judges were Rev. J. W. Richards, E. L. Henning, banker, and Professor C. C. Duffy. The contestants were Milly Grey, Annie Lyons, Minnie Swift, Della Towne, Marbry Henning, Georgie Seaton, Harry Henning and Arthur Packard. All the contestants acquitted themselves wonderfully well, reflecting much credit upon Miss Phillips, who trained them for the work. The prize was awarded to Miss Anna Lyons, her subject being, "A Voice from the Poorhouse."

MRS. ELLEN A. BLAIR, National organizer and chalk-talker, has recently lost her son Burdett, and is herself quite ill from over care and anxiety. This great bereavement and illness will explain Mrs. Blair's inability to answer her correspondents.

THE following comes from Chama, New Mexico: "Miss Wilson, state lecturer and organizer of Colorado, gave the 'Carnival of Nations' here a few evenings ago, assisted by local talent. This is full of bright dialogues and pretty tableaux, containing also many 'hits' for prohibition, suffrage and moral reform. Miss Wilson is the author of the 'Carnival' as arranged for this occasion. While lecturing here the saloon-keepers made up a purse of ten dollars for an old saloon habitue, 'Major' Powers, to answer Miss Wilson's arguments. He and a number of comrades accordingly went to one of her lectures, but were silenced by the temperance truths presented, and no one attempted to ridicule or reply as had been planned."

MISS ANNIE GREEN, president of the Y of Philadelphia, made a speech before the Y of Trenton, N. J., recently in Library Hall. The young ladies declare that her speech was "a gem and given with great earnestness." The prospect is that Miss Green will go on and on and be a leader in words and deeds among the young people.

THE W. C. T. U. of Plainwell, Michigan, recently adopted appropriate resolutions upon the death of a faithful, self-sacrificing member, Mrs. Rhoda A. Williams, who died March 6, aged eighty years. "She hath done what she could."

TRUMBULL county, Ohio, has held twenty-two Demorest contests, and six more will be held during April. At the county convention of the W. C. T. U., April 30, the second gold medal contest will take place. The interest in this most practical work is increasing.

MISS WILLARD writes: "Mr. George Blaiklock, of Australia, who has very high recommendations from white ribboners and others in Australia, is coming to America soon, and hopes to reach San Francisco about May 17. He is an admirable speaker, and says he hopes to give three or four lectures in the centers he visits, the meetings to be organized by a united committee of the ministers, the W. C. T. U. and the Y. M. C. A., the expenses of the meetings to be met by collections. The last night of the series he gives a popular lecture entitled 'The Lights and Shadows of London Life.' A charge is made for admission, the proceeds of this night remunerating the lecturer. Friends in California and all along the line are invited to take notice of this."

THE W. C. T. U. of Randolph, Nebraska, and of the state, have sustained a severe loss in the death of Mrs. Carrie Beach Whitham, an active and zealous worker, and president of both town and county W. C. T. U. She died on February 14, after a lingering illness, patiently borne, passing away in the fullness of Christian peace. She was universally admired and respected by all who knew her, and beautiful tributes were paid to her worth, both at the services held in her Nebraska home and at her childhood home in Del Rey, Illinois, whither the body was brought for interment. The text chosen by Mrs. Whitman was, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

THE colored women of Evanston, Ill., have organized a W. C. T. U. among themselves, which they call the Willard Union. The First W. C. T. U. made overtures to them to have representation in their union in the shape of vice-presidents from each of the two colored churches, similar to the representation from each of the white churches. The colored women, however, preferred to organize a union among themselves, and were assisted to do so by Mrs. Allen Vane and others, who met an audience of two hundred colored women in their own church for this purpose. Miss Willard has promised to give an address in one of the colored churches for them during the year. It is believed that this effort on behalf of temperance made among themselves and of their own motion, will result in much good. Much of the valuable temperance literature sent to Miss Willard from all parts of the world, will be turned over to this new union for circulation.

MRS. WILLIAM C. SIBLEY, president of the Georgia W. C. T. U., has done excellent service by an article from her ready pen, entitled "Under Which Flag?" There is no uncertain sound in what she writes as to the flag that will rally white-ribboners in the South. She says there will be no going back so far as Georgia is concerned, as to the stand already taken. "We hope to pass through all our battles by just quietly holding our position. We are not easily frightened. In May we hold our state convention and are to be addressed by Mrs. Clara Hoffman. Mrs. F. E. Harper, lecturer for the department of work among the colored people, has been doing admirably. She is certainly a very bright woman and can do a great deal for the temperance cause and social purity among her people. A W. C. T. U. woman who went to hear her speak was delighted with her, and wished that everybody in Augusta could have heard her also. The cause would rapidly spread here if our prominent and capable public workers would come to us more frequently and stay longer. Nevertheless it is growing, day by day."

NOTICES.

The sixth annual convention of the Holt county, Mo., W. C. T. U., will be held at Maitland, April 22 and 23. Geo. W. Bain will deliver the evening address on the 22, and a Demorest gold medal contest will be held on the 23d. Miss Lillian Wood, district president, will also be with us. A cordial invitation is extended to all friends of temperance. BELLE COLLISON, Pres.,

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

OUR GERMAN PAPER.

It is probably not known to many of our unions that our paper, Der Deutsch Amerikaner, is carried on at the cost of much effort and sacrifice on the part of those who are keeping it up. A number of the subscriptions have expired, and it is now essential that work should be done in its behalf. Too much cannot be said as to its importance. It is an instrumentality that cannot be overestimated. The necessity of educating and keeping alive the principles which it advocates among our German people is one of the great obligations upon us.

If each local union will make a special effort to secure even a few subscribers, the good work can go on effectively. The task of giving early attention to this will be slight, and will result in great good. Unless some effort is made there is danger that this much-needed paper must be given up.

FRANCHISE.

DEAR SUPERINTENDENTS OF FRANCHISE:—I have waited until my resignation was accepted by the General Officers, before sending you my farewell word of thanks and love. I am deeply grateful to you one and all, for the kindness and trust you have always manifested toward me, and for the assistance you have given in our work. Knowing as I do your unselfish loyalty to women and their highest interests, it will need no word of mine to urge you to press onward for the full enfranchisement of women, as we all feel it is the one way out of this wilderness of intemperance and crime.

As soon as you come to know the gifted and earnest woman who has been appointed as my successor, you will be thankful if from the beginning of her work you give her your hearty coöperation. I shall ever remember with gratitude your kind words of encouragement, and though no longer associated with you as your superintendent, I will always remain your sister and a loyal member of the W. C. T. U. ANNA H. SHAW.

An Honorable Calling.

In all ages, the profession of medicine has been held in honor. Each of the other learned professions is more or less dependent upon this one. The lawyer must be versed in Medical Jurisprudence, and the clergyman must know "to minister to a mind diseased." And just now the writers of fiction seem to be encroaching upon the doctors' "preserves." With slight alterations or additions, for example, a few illustrations, many a modern novel might be made to do service as a medical work. However, doctors' lives are not all sunshine. They must expect many disappointments. The search for the elusive bullet, though, apparently, equally fascinating, is often not more successful than that for the North Pole. Science has enabled them to determine just where it is, but, alas, they can not reach it. Then they are obliged to depend upon the charity of editors and publishers for advertising, heir "Ethics" not allowing them to pay for it. And worst of all, the chronic cases, baffling and setting at naught their skill. This is sad for the doctors, but let us not waste our sympathy upon them, let us rather point out a way of escape to the patients given over by them. This is found in the Compound Oxygen Treatment of DRS. STARKEY & PALEN. Being inhaled, it is absorbed into the blood, and distributed over the whole body, imparting new strength and vigor, and assisting nature. Over one thousand physicians are using it in their practice. You will find testimonials from these, as well as from great numbers of patients, besides, a full account of Compound Oxygen, in our Treatise of 200 pages; a carefully written work, the result of years of study and experience. Sent free. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Phildelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

A Step Up.

Already many of the Loyal Temperance Legions find themselves in the condition that often surprises fathers and mothers—the children are grown up before they know it. Those pupils who have gone through the Temperance Lesson Manuals are now ready for lessons of the Senior Grade, and that they have not been forgotten is proved by the new series just begun. These Lessons will appear first as Supplements issued once in two months with The Young Crusader, each number of the paper containing notes on the same in Marching Orders.

No more timely theme than that of government could have been chosen, and the writer, Mrs. George Archibald, knows how to make the story of our country and its laws interesting and profitable. Send for sample copy of The Young Crusader for March 7, and you will surely wish the lessons for your older scholars.

HEALTH PAMPHLET

SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF EVERY FAMILY.

BECAUSE—IT ACTS RADICALLY, BUT GENTLY;
" IT DOES NOT EMACIATE BEFORE BUILDING UP;
" IT REQUIRES LESS TIME THAN OTHER MEANS,
" IT SUCCEEDS WHEN OTHER TREATMENTS FAIL;
" IT IS SIMPLE AND EASY OF APPLICATION;
" IT DOES NOT REQUIRE SEMI-STARVATION;
" IT RELIEVES THE PERSON IMMEDIATELY;
" IT IS INCAPABLE OF DOING INJURY;
" ITS COMPLETE COST FOR A LIFETIME IS ONLY THE PRICE OF A CONSULTATION.

Why Superior to Drug Medication?

BECAUSE—IT SAVES EXPENSE;
" IT REMOVES RISK OF CARELESS PRESCRIBING;
" IT RESTORES THE SICK TO HEALTH SPEEDILY;
" IT SAVES LIFE WHEN DRUGS HAVE FAILED;
" IT LENGTHENS LIFE FOR VALUABLE WORK;
" IT HINDERS CASES OF DRUG POISONING;
" IT DOES NOT COMPLICATE DISEASE;
" IT IS NOT NAUSEOUS;
" IT ENABLES ONE TO DO MORE FOR THOSE WE LOVE;
" IT PRESERVES HEALTH IN THOSE WHO ARE WELL;

"My Heart Made Glad."

Captain Charles Goodall of the California Steamship Navigation Company, says of Miss Willard's book, "Glimpses of Fifty Years": "Have just had time to take in these 'Glimpses' and found them very interesting. I have done the fifty years in about fourteen days off and on. I find in thinking over the interesting persons I have met in my life-time, that the author of this book is the most famous of those now living. I think the advent, the development, and the fifty years' march in life a great deal more practically useful and interesting than the whimsical yarns in Bellamy's book. He, poor man, even in the year 2000, could not conceive a better plan to solve difficult problems than to discuss them at the dinner table over wine and cigars after the ladies had retired! In the case of the 'Glimpses' the ladies remain, and solve the problems without wine and cigars, or the gentlemen to drink and smoke them. While reading this book my pains have been lightened, my mind edified, and my heart made glad that still there are women who, like the Master, go about doing good."

The Gold Thimble

proves a most attractive premium. Get us three new subscribers, send in their names with $3, and claim the thimble. Unless you state size wanted number eight will be sent. It gives great satisfaction, so does THE UNION SIGNAL, so there's every reason why thimbles and papers should meander everywhere!

The offer that is so generous, namely, you see three friends and obtain $1 from each for a year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, send the names and the money to us with a request that your own subscription be extended a year for doing the work and

Less House-Cleaning More Health
Less Annoyance More Comfort

Such is the experience of women who use Pearline for house-cleaning, and the degree of health and comfort is largely due to the way they use it. Directions for saving labor on every package. Delicate women can clean house by its aid; children will be a help, and husbands will never know the work is going on—out of the way, and they will be ignorant of it. It is bosh to say that Pearline hurts the clothing, the paint or the hands. Numbers of people clean their teeth with it; many babes have been washed with it from their birth; the most delicate of laces and linens have been subjected to the severest of tests. Everything washable, and everybody who must do this work, is benefitted by reason of the use of Pyle's Pearline. It's the modern soap. You'll know it and use it sooner or later. Your grocer keeps the goods.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous. 164 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Publisher's Notes.

A Letter from Miss Willard.

Miss West's new manual, entitled "The School of Methods" is one of our especially helpful publications. It comes just when we need it most, for there is a mighty stirring of women's hearts in these days. Local unions are being formed more generally than at any previous date; "the membership Crusade" is in full sweep, and no question comes to me so often through the Question Box that accompanies all my meetings with the women, as the following: "How can a local W. C. T. U. do the best work?" Miss West's book tells just how. She is blessed with an assorted brain; was a teacher twenty years; a county superintendent nine years; president of a local union two years; district president three years; state president four years. She knows whereof she affirms and can write "T. and P." (tried and proved) after every method she sets forth. If this book of hers could be made the basis of a "neighborhood conference" in which several local unions joined forces, or of a county convention, district convention, state convention or Summer Training School, vastly more advantage would come of these gatherings than when bright speeches are made but definite results are minus. Let me urgently call upon every local president in the National and World's W. C. T. U. to send 25 cts. for this book and by it train herself and coadjutors in the best methods of white ribbon work.

Frances E. Willard.

A BEAUTIFUL undertaking is that of the "Letter Guild," recently started among the factory girls in Birmingham, England, and composed of both working girls and women of leisure, with the desire on the part of the latter to be helpful to the former in their various experiences of life. "Each lady who joins pledges herself to write one letter each month to the girl assigned to her, in a plain and simple style, on subjects likely to interest girls, as for instance: Work, friendship, home life, worries, rainy days, etc. The girls are persuaded to answer these, and so popular has the society become that the number of girl members far exceeds the lady writers." All expenses for postage and stationery are paid by the dues of members.

THE New York City Mission Society is doing a public service in opening a large bath on Center Market Place, in the midst of the most densely populated portion of the metropolis. Public baths are already located on the rivers on each side of the city, but they are of little use to the people of the interior; are open only in summer, and are uninviting at best. The new bath has a tank twenty-two by sixty feet, with a capacity of sixty thousand gallons, and is to be open the year round, the water being warmed in winter. A nominal fee of five cents will be charged to meet the running expenses.

A RECENT meeting in New York City of the Alumnæ Association of Rutgers Female College, was addressed by Dr. Jessie B. Woodside, who for three years has been at Futtehgurh, India, working under various foreign missionary societies for the establishment of hospitals and dispensaries for the treatment of Indian women. Dr. Woodside says that most women in India are entirely without medical assistance, since by the customs of that country no high-caste woman, however ill, can be treated by a male physician without losing caste. On one occasion, a low-caste woman who had been bitten and badly lacerated by a mad jackal, walked sixteen miles, carrying her children, to the Allahabad hospital. Upon her recovery the fame of the women doctors spread abroad so that during the year they treated 3,300 patients and recorded 13,000 visits. The Allahabad hospital was founded on a contribution from a Brahmin whose son had been successfully treated by a woman physician.

"Talk is cheap." So runs the old saying. But after all, is it? Frivolous or malicious talk is well known to produce infinite trouble, and good, kindly talk is valued in proportion to the benefit it gives to the listeners. Books are, of course, a necessity as educators. Lectures, music, pictures and physical exercise all count in the system of cultivation which is so universally regarded as essential in these times, but the influence of the conversation which is constantly going on about us for good or evil, cannot be overestimated. Impressions that will last a lifetime are made upon young minds by a few careless words, and good conversation is a source of pleasure and profit to every one. This has always been fully appreciated. When printing presses were new, and books were scarce, and when newspapers were few and far between, conversation was held to be an art, and subjects for good conversation were eagerly sought. Nowadays, there is an enormous choice of good subjects, and they are appreciated, too, as the success of the Practical Talks in the Working Girls' Clubs all over the country has shown. It has been said that these talks have aroused more interest than almost anything else in the way of improvement and study that has been tried. Cooking, sewing, millinery, the care of the hands, complexion, hair and teeth, everything and anything which has a useful bearing upon the ways and means of daily life, have been made the subject of these five ten or fifteen minute talks, and they leave lasting impressions, too. Some of the talks among good housekeepers have been about our Flavoring Powders, and all have expressed themselves as pleased with them. The preference among those who have used them is for the Powders instead of the liquid Extracts. If your grocer does not sell them, and will not order a supply of them, send us 50 cents, and we will mail you a 1-ounce bottle each of the 1-ounce Lemon and Vanilla to try. Also satin packets powdered perfumes, sent by mail on receipt of 30 cents.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Law and Order Society of St. Paul has united with the Prohibitionists, and put a full ticket in the field.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the World's Fair held in Chicago, April 4, forty-five directors were elected.

The King of Hawaii has been invited to appoint delegates to represent his island kingdom in the Pan-American Conference.

Five train loads of portable houses have been ordered from Chicago to Salt Lake City, to meet the immediate demand for dwellings accompanying the "Gentile boom."

Three hundred and ten liquor licenses have been granted in Pittsburg, Pa., as against one hundred and twenty-three a year ago. How long before high license there will prove restrictive to the point of extermination?

Local option as a substitute for prohibition, was defeated in the Iowa Legislature by a vote of fifty-one to forty-nine. It is rumored that anti-Prohibition Republicans will put a separate ticket in the field in the next campaign.

Prominent citizens of Burlington, Iowa, have notified the managers of the Narrow Gauge Railroad that the first move of the road to carry passengers to the Sunday ball game, will be immediately followed by suit for an injunction.

Mormon elders are undaunted by the late defeat in Salt Lake. They declare it is only the fulfillment of prophecy, made sixty years ago. "I heard Hiram Smith predict the present situation when he was on trial before Judge King," said Elder Jacob Gates. "There is no need to be discouraged."

The old Greeley homestead, built by Horace Greeley in 1851, and since his death owned by his only surviving child, was destroyed by fire last week. Miss Greeley was absent when the fire broke out, but neighbors rescued the marble bust of her father, and the only existing picture of her mother. The great journalist's secretary was saved, and most of his library.

The ever-vigilant "liquor interest" is represented in the New York Legislature by a bill providing for an amendment to the existing statute, which will make it unlawful for the agent of any society or for any sheriff or city officer to enter a saloon, and call for a drink during hours when saloons are required by law to be closed. The object is to place difficulties in the way of enforcing the excise laws.

The Pan-American Conference has declared for an international, American, monetary union, established upon the basis of an international coin of uniform weight and fineness, to be used in all the countries represented. To perfect the arrangement of such union, the president of the United States is requested to invite a Commission composed of delegates from the several countries, to meet in Washington within a year after the adjournment of the present conference. They will decide upon the quantity and kind of currency, the value of the international silver coin, and its relation to gold. This is a practical step toward the object sought in this conference—a closer union between the countries of the Western Continent.

GOVERNOR HILL, of New York, has again misapplied the power of veto vested in him. Failing to kill the Sexton bill by the proposition to refer it to the Court of Appeals, he refused his signature. It was modeled upon the Australian ballot system, and had the approval of honest men in all parties. In rum-ridden New York "the freeman's ballot" lives only in ancient history and modern song. The cause of good government has no greater need than efficient safeguards about the ballot box. We wish the Legislature of the Empire state might prove stronger than its Governor.

THE discussion in the House upon the Chinese Enumeration Bill has some points worthy the attention of the Iowa Assembly, while considering the demands of the late anti-saloon, anti-prohibition, Republican conference. It was stated that as many Chinamen get into this country now as before the Scott Exclusion Act went into effect, but no member gave as a reason for the fact that "prohibition always works that way." No whereases explaining the failure of exclusion to exclude were offered as preliminary to a motion in favor of licensing Celestial immigration. According to Representative Clunie there is an arrangement in British Columbia similar to that by which brothels exist in Omaha. He says: "I have been in Victoria, where they are permitted to land upon payment to the British Government of $50 a head, and I have ascertained that Victoria gets the $50 and we get the Chinamen." That is the way with illicit license whether it be fee, fine or "fleece." In how many homes could it be said: "The city gets the revenue, we get the ruined son or daughter?" On the contrary more rigorous penalties were attached to the exclusion laws. Arrest, conviction, imprisonment or deportation are recommended to "teach them not to set at defiance the laws of the United States." A lesson which Congress, individually and collectively, seems willing to teach when the pupil is penniless and ballotless. Before abolishing prohibition, suppose Iowa try a penalty of five years' imprisonment, or deportation, in case of foreigners, to teach them not to set at defiance the laws of the state.

THE Congressional Committee has introduced a bill to provide for the long prayed for Commission of Inquiry on the alcoholic liquor traffic. It reports its reasons for such recommendation. Reference is made to the work accomplished by a similar commission in England, where the results warranted further investigation. In France, also, the interest awakened by such a commission prompted the government to push the investigation farther. "A large and respectable class of citizens, basing their assertions upon observation and reports, made unofficially, charges upon the traffic in alcoholic liquors four-fifths of all the crime committed, three-fourths of the pauperism, and the incapacities, mental and physical, which cripple or hamper a half million persons in their efforts toward self-support, while it does no good to any one. On the other hand, these accusations are denied, as the hallucinations of fanatics. Therefore," says the report, "let there be an official investigation and let the truth be made known." A minority report was also presented by Representative Quinn, of New York. He says that although the bill provides against the members of the Commission belonging to the same political party, they may all be prohibitionists. In his opinion there is nothing to be known about the liquor traffic which is not already known, and it is a profitless quest in any case, since Congress has no power over the traffic in the states and cannot carry out its recommendations. He has no doubt that this bill originated outside of Congress, with some parties whose real purpose is selfish. He thinks the bill is intended to infringe upon individual rights, and is un-American in character. To demagogue politicians nothing looks so "un-American" as legislation which interferes with the right of foreigners to sell intoxicating liquors in America.

MISS WILLARD has received an earnest letter from Rev. Alfred McClure, 1407 Locust street, Philadelphia, who is at the head of the movement to petition the Czar on behalf of the patriots who are held as political prisoners. The coöperation of the W. C. T. U. is sought and will certainly be given to this enterprise. It aims to present to the Russian Czar a monster petition signed by Americans, calling his attention to the reported cruelties practiced on helpless men and women under what is known as the Siberian exile system. It is hoped that his attention, so personally and pointedly invoked, may lead to a reformation of that system, and correction of its inhuman abuses. Diplomatists and ex-ministers versed in Russian affairs have been consulted as to the form of the petition, and it shows the work of careful, conservative men, appealing from the standpoint of contact, of common interest, and of historic friendship between the two countries. If this moral movement prove unavailing, then the friends of humanity must take counsel together for further effort. Civilized nations cannot longer be deaf to the tales of barbaric cruelty, which come from the Siberian prisons, bringing with them the proof of their authenticity. Autocratic denial by Russian court journals may satisfy the Russian nobility, but it does not suffice for the American nobility of mind and sympathy. One of these newspaper tissues, purporting to explain the massacre of political exiles in Yakutsk, appeared in the New York Tribune during the winter. In the April Century, George Kennan lifts it on the point of his lance, shakes it out before the world and shows it to be riddled with inconsistencies—to use the mildest term possible. Mr. Kennan is in possession of eight separate accounts of the horrible outrage, several from persons whom he personally knows, and knows to be reliable; there being no possibility of collusion or communication between the writers, they yet agree in all essential points, and corroborate the statement of the London Times, which called forth the first mention of the affair in Russian newspapers. "The government apparently dared not submit to its own people even its own version of the facts," says Mr. Kennan The truth is that one-half the political exiles in Yakutsk were sent there upon the simple order of the Minister of the Interior, without trial, because there was not proof enough against them to secure their conviction even in a Russian court. Several of those included in the massacre were young girls, ordered across that polar wilderness in winter, accompanied by a guard to prevent their escape, and dependent upon the half-civilized Yakut drivers, at widely separated stations for food and transportation. When they sent a respectful petition to Governor Ostashkin for food and equipage for the journey, the answer was a company of Cossacks who, with their bayonets and the butt-end of their guns, attempted to drive them from the house where they had gathered to await the Governor's reply. A few of them offered resistance, and the butchery began. Six were killed, nine severely wounded and all brutally beaten. One young woman was bayoneted to death. The survivors of the massacre, court-martialed without counsel, were all found guilty. Three were hanged, four women and ten men were condemned to penal servitude for life. Three men and two women were sent to the mines for fifteen years, and four boys and girls were sentenced to penal servitude for ten years. One of the doomed men managed shortly before his execution to send a note to a comrade, which read, "Make our deaths count for something—write all this to Kennan." The man who has traveled to such noble purpose says: "The appeal to me shall not be in vain."

A HARROWING feature is that these brutal visitations of tyranny come upon the cultured and thinking classes. Russia has been ambitious to compete with other European nations in universities and educational institutions. She has made a mistake fatal to her present form of government. It is too late now to close her schools, as has been done in Moscow, and last week in St. Petersburg. On the morning of April 2, two hundred students were battering at the barred doors of the university; and three hundred at the Institution of Technology. The youth have pushed their heads above the choke damp of absolutism and are breathing the air of the nineteenth century, an atmosphere charged with ideas of human brotherhood—and sisterhood! The Minister of Public Instruction in St. Petersburg has received and refused the recently prepared petition of the university students, asking for reduction of entrance fees, for the unrestricted admission of Jews, and the equality of male and female students. They would have their alma mater know no difference as to Jew or Greek, bond or free, male or female. Three hundred of them assembled to form in procession and march to the Ministry of Public Instruction, but were dispersed by the police, one hundred and seventy-five being arrested. Three hundred students from the Technological Institute, besides a larger number from the Academy of Medicine, and pupils of the School of Forestry, are under arrest for taking part in "seditious" meetings. Let Russia get ready for an earthquake when these bright young men are sent underground to think, while they work out their sentence in the mines. No wonder the cable brings this brief, electric message: "The Czar has fits!"

SEE THE WILD WATERFALL.

BY J. E. RANKIN, LL.D.

See the wild waterfall,
Issuing from its prison hall,
  Parting white like wool;
Fed by the fleecy clouds,
Downward, headlong, how it crowds,
  Filling the black pool.

Hark to its backward shout,
Now that it is fairly out,
  Capture fast eluding;
How it laughs and leaps about,
Now its foes are put to rout,
  Everywhere intruding.

Plunging heedless how it goes,
From the region of the snows,
  Pale-green as a beryl;
Always full of pranks and play,
As though life were holiday,
  Conscious of no peril.

How it curls its silver locks,
In and out the craggy rocks,
  All the air a-tremble;
It can dance and it can sing,
It can fly as if on wing,
  But cannot dissemble.

How it rolls the pebbles round,
In its lap which it has found,
  Leaps the high cascade;
Cradled 'neath the dark fir-trees,
Youth and manhood where it please,
  Never doubting or afraid.

Now the stars are flashing in it,
Now the glad eyes of the linnet,
  Now the spectral trout;
To its talk and laughter listen,
See it downward glide and glisten,
  Turn and turn about.

Take life's message down with thee,
Through the meadows to the sea,
  Oh, thou gift of heaven;
Give God's creatures double drink,
Of His love teach them to think,
  Washed, made white, and shriven.

RHODA'S EASTER CARDS.

BY ERS. S. M. I. HENRY.

CHAPTER II.

During many days that followed while his wound was healing, Clarence and Rhoda Langhorn worked together on the Easter cards. Every card must have the floral design, the legend "HE IS RISEN, ALLELUIA," some text of Scripture, or verse, and be finished off with the little white satin bow.

Clarence found real delight in inventing new styles of lettering, and was very happy in his task. Sometimes he was tempted to some freaks of profane witticism, but was restrained by the fact that such indulgence would ruin work that was worth money to Rhoda.

"He is Risen, Alleluia."

"Christ is Risen, Alleluia."

"The Lord is Risen, Alleluia."

How his pen toyed with the glorious truth, and uttered over and over the note of joy, until at last wherever he looked, and when he closed his eyes, he could see the words that yet were only words to him. Words twisted out of knotted branches or graceful vines, with birds and butterflies poising here and there; words in old Gothic, in German, quaint English, in all sorts of texts that a fertile imagination and graceful pen could invent; yet only words to him, while to Rhoda and all the world they meant so much.

At last the cards were finished and sold—for the bazar had closed. Clarence and Rhoda had rejoiced together, not only over their beauty, but over the money they brought to them, and to the Y's as well, and as they were talking it over Rhoda said:

"Now, Clardy, suppose while our hand is in, we just each make one for the other; a memento of these happy days; just such as we would like to have come true, and let us agree that every Easter, as long as we live, we will do the same thing. We may not always be together——"

"Why! What! is Will Horton going to——?"

"Now you stop, Clardy! Will Horton is nothing to me," Rhoda's voice was almost angry, "and, besides that, he has gone away. Don't ever again talk about him, Clardy, that's a good boy."

"All right; when you look that way I stop. But that anything you know may happen and keep me here with you."

"Well, let us promise, whether we are together or not, that we will make an Easter card for each other every year; just our own idea, you know."

"If I'd put my own idea into some of those, Rho," laughed Clarence, "my! wouldn't you have been surprised?"

"No, Clarence Langhorn, I don't believe you would do anything with this holy Easter and the name of the risen Lord whom I love so much, that would not give me pleasure. You are not half so bad as you try to make out."

Clarence looked into her sweet eyes and saw that she had spoken out of the real hope and trust of her heart, so he answered, "All right, Rho, I'll agree."

Clarence had been getting about on a crutch for the last week before Easter, and on Easter morning was able to go with his sister to the early service at the chapel near their home.

The music, the flowers, the birds, the beauty, all pleased him; but the worshipful joy he could not understand. He was amused at Rhoda's devotional rapture;—and was only restrained from some overt act, by the knowledge that she would be hurt if he did not deport himself with decorum, at least. He examined all the decorations with critical eye, and before the service was over had mentally rearranged every wreath, rewritten and rehung every motto and text. He was also exercised over the card which he had made for Rhoda, and which he had in his breast pocket, and which according to program was to be exchanged for hers upon their return home, before breakfast.

He was ashamed of its very proper character. The actual production of his artistic pen was so different from the ideas of his brain. That, however, would have broken Rhoda's heart, or at least have spoiled her Easter, so he had to keep it in the secret of his own thought to read over while he produced something that was so "far-fetched," imported from a world with which he had nothing in common, that it was a wonder to him. How he came to do such a very appropriate thing he did not know. As soon as they entered the house on their return, Clarence began fumbling in his pocket and said:

"Now hurry up that game of cards, Rho—here's mine! I'm glad to get rid of it; it makes me tired!"

"Tired?"

"Yes, tired."

Rhoda had taken ners from a little drawer and handed it to him. He had opened it, and stood looking at it, while yet he was too much interested in noting how his own was received to take in the meaning of the exquisite design of roses and lilies of the valley,—nor had he any sense by which to detect the heart throbs that pulsated in every word of text and verse. This was what Rhoda had written for him:

"The Lord is risen indeed."

"The Master is come and calleth for thee."

"He is risen, alleluia!
  And His life and strength divine,
For thy wounded nature's healing,
  My dear love, are thine, are thine."

Clarence just saw these words with a sweeping glance as he looked up at an exclamation from Rhoda. Surprise and joy were in her face and she cried:

"O you darling!— I really did not ex——that is, you see I did not know what a lovely thing you would get up all by yourself. This is perfectly lovely!"

What was it? Only this: Clarence had made a happy combination of some parts of the first four verses of the third chapter of Colossians, so that it read,

"He is risen!
If ye are risen with Christ,
Your life is hid with Christ in God,
And ye shall also appear with Him
  In glory.
  Alleluia!"

Clarence felt his cheeks burn. His pleasure in that he had made Rhoda glad was more than evenly matched by his shame at being caught in so "saintly" an attitude, and the result was a very peculiar expression of countenance.

Rhoda detected it and asked, "Why, what's the matter, Clardy? You look as if —that is—" she paused, puzzled and troubled.

"Well, how do I look? Sneaking? that's the way I feel—and I tell you I'm going to get out of this. I'll send you an Easter card next year that will fix this one all right, see if I don't."

"What do you mean, Clardy?"

"I'm a wretched hypocrite—I didn't mean a thing by that," pointing at the card contemptuously. "It's all bosh!"

Rhoda's cheeks flushed and then paled, her eyes glowed with rising spirit for a second, and she said, "I don't know, Clardy Langhorn, what you mean by bosh, but this is not that, and you did mean something."

"Well, you seem to know; will you kindly tell me what I did mean?"

"You meant to give me pleasure; a real Easter token, to put away and keep always among my treasures; and you shan't spoil it now."

"Rho! you are right. I did mean that, but that was all, and yet it would seem to mean so much besides."

"Well, it is a success as far as you intended, and for all the ever so much more that it ought to mean besides, and will some time—"

"Breakfast!"

"Ah there, Hannah; I like the sound of thy gentle voice. Come, Rho, I'm awfully hungry." Clarence emphasized his remark by taking Rhoda by the arm and hastening her to the table in a style that would have been deemed hardly in accord with the orthodox idea of Sabbath deportment. Hannah smiled and frowned at him as she laid the breakfast.

"Eggs forever! As I live I had forgotten the distinctive features of the day. Those horrid cards had put everything else out of mind."

"What kind of cards, Clardy?" asked Rhoda, soberly. "And do you only think of Easter as a day for Hannah's fancy eggs?"

"Let's drop the subject, sis, at least everything but the eggs," rejoined Clarence, while he proceeded to select a brilliant carbuncle, exclaiming, "Magnificent! Nobody ever finds such Easter eggs as Han. Say, Han, what do you feed the hens on to produce such a nest of rainbow fruit? I shall have to make you promise to send me a box of eggs for Easter with Rho's Easter cards when I go away."

"Yes, when you go away?" said Hannah.

"All right; you remember."

Hannah promised again and withdrew, leaving the two alone.

"Hannah doesn't believe I'm going," remarked Clarence, "but I am, Rho."

"Going? What do you mean?"

"Going away. I've been wondering just how I should get the news out, but now it is done. I am not going to stay here any longer."

"Clardy!"

"Just hold on, Rho. I expected you'd say that, but my mind is made up. Don't you suppose I've heard what folks say about your supporting me? I heard that doctor and old Mrs. Lomis talking about it one night when I was awful bad, and I wished the bullet had gone higher. Of course I didn't really wish that, after all, but I did make up my mind I was going to find something to do—and—"

"But you needn't go away for that; you can find something here; you can help me—"

"Help you! Make Easter cards for a living? He is risen, alleluia! risen, risen, prison, frisen, trisen, crisen! No, Rho, excuse me, please. I feel as if I were half a lunatic now. I can't see anything but old English, or Gothic, or German text, and those senseless words. Don't look that way if you can help it, Rho. I am not an Easterite. I can't feel about such things as you do. I'm bound to disappoint you, and—I—am — going—away. Those texts make me wild; sometimes they make me mad. I am glad I could help you, if it was any help; but, honestly, if I can't forget those things pretty soon I shall wish I had never heard of Easter."

"But, Clardy!" Rhoda had turned from her breakfast heart-sick, and come to his side. She was standing with her hand on his shoulder, "What can you do away from me? from home? and Hannah?"

"Now, that's just it, Rho; that's what drives me off—you all think I can't live without you, and what you earn and do—and—"

"I don't think that, Clardy; but everybody must have a home. And what can I do without you? We are all there is, just you and me; we two for each other."

Clarence choked a little, but threw his head back, and retorted in a tone of banter, "Oh, you'll get along, Rho; Will Horton'll look after you. And I tell you I won't have folks say again that you are taking care of me, and—"

"O! Clardy —"

"Now stop! I won't have a fuss. I'll go before I eat my breakfast if you take on. I did not intend to rush off; but I won't hang around to be cried over, so now!"

You know what Rhoda did. How she swallowed hard a minute, then went back to her place at the table, and all through that sad Easter day tried to weave a net about her brother that would hold him to his home. But she found that she must fail to keep him. He would go . . .

Given one little old-fashioned hair trunk (it had the letters C. L., the father's initials in brass nail heads on the end); the contents of an old house, that had always been a real home nest; one Hannah; one Rhoda; one little purse, and you have no trouble in finding out how Clarence Langhorn went away.

One letter came, then months of silence. Rhoda was becoming alarmed and desperate, because her loving letter, sent to the address he had given her, brought no reply from Clarence. She was for a time restrained by pride from writing to the postmaster; but was at last upon the point of doing so when her fears were relieved by a long, bright, charming letter. This was the history of the first year; long intervals of suspense, then the letter, such as, it seemed to Rhoda, no one but Clarence could write. Only in one thing she was always disappointed; he said nothing about himself, or what he was doing. It seemed wholly in vain that, in her letters she begged him to just give her one word that would enable her to rest about him. Did he have work? And what? Did he have a comfortable boarding place? pleasant people? friends? and good food? was he entirely well? To these inquiries not one word of reply—except in the most general terms. The nearest he came to a specific answer was in these words: "In answer to your many questions, I will say that everything is lovely, and the goose hangs high." Rhoda laughed, with the tears running down her cheeks, and sobs choking her. "Oh, what a boy!" was all she could say.

Advertisers want to know what paper pays best. Mention The U

As the year drew toward Easter, Rhoda began to formulate her love, and faith, and tender brooding anxieties upon the card which was to be the fulfillment of her part of their contract.

She refused to recognize, in her own mind, a doubt that had persisted in whispering to her that Clarence would not remember the day. When Easter came and passed without so much as a letter, she thought she was very much disappointed, but she was not; she was anxious—sick with fears, but not disappointed. She would have been disappointed into such joy of her brother as she had never known, if she had received an Easter card from him that day.

After this, the months grew on and on into years. Rhoda tried to conceal even from Hannah the fact that no new letters came. Her brother's honor was a tender, naked nerve in her heart, her love its only shelter.

"What do you hear from Clarence?" was a question often asked, and she would answer, truly, "He seemed very happy in his last letter. He writes such lovely letters," or something to that effect.

It was a kind of balsam to her wounded heart to say this, even if his last letter was so old and worn with much handling that it would hardly hold together. She kept her promise as the Easters came and went, but the sweet fruit of her love-hallowed art dropped into the abyss which had swallowed up the name and address of her idol.

The work of her brush, displayed in the windows up town, caused lovers of the sweet and dainty in art to pause in passing, but the rarest, choicest things she did never reached the public eye—these were sacred to the holy, sisterly love that inspired them, and only God knew what became of them.

POVERTY AND VICE.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

There are few sayings which have been more thoroughly perverted from what we may believe to have been their original significance than the words constantly quoted; "The poor ye have always with you." Generations of strenuous acting out the theory that the salvation of the rich is to be bought by copious alms-giving to the poor has culminated in crystallization, and through the amber of charity we see the pestiferous life within, no less offensive because shut from direct contact by this fair product of nature and art.

We accept poverty as inevitable for our first premise, and proceed to frame a second no less disastrous in its effects, viz., that poverty, save where positive crime is associated with it, is, in some sort, a virtue, and thus a surer passport to heaven than any held by the prosperous. For this conviction we are indebted among others to Mrs. Hannah More and her school, which for this generation has found voice in "Ministering Children," and other popular stories for young and old, all intensifying the conviction just mentioned, that virtue is easier for the poor than for the rich. The immortal shepherd of Salisbury Plain, for example: who can forget the glow of sympathy with which we read long ago the words in which is chronicled his soul-felt satisfaction that salt had been given for his potatoes when the potatoes of myriads more deserving were saltless. Analyze the story and hundreds of its kind, and for each and all is the lesson in contentment very beautiful for the rich to gaze upon, but vicious to the core in its effect for both. Only out of wants and ever-increasing wants can progress be born, and it was the death of progress that spoke in every word of the gospel preached by this school.

Granted at once that there are certain conditions in life in which it may be counted in great degree true that poverty and virtue are close neighbors if not synonyms. But they are conditions very remote from anything we must deal with in our crowded cities and towns. Long ago, a world-weary but very worldly-wise old king wrote from his watch-tower in Jerusalem, "The destruction of the poor is their poverty."

Each one of us to whom the interior of a Fourth Ward tenement house has become familiar, knows how literally true that is, and what actual destruction of moral fibre is in the fact of having been born into such atmosphere. There are moral microbes no less than the physical ones with which we have lately been contending. Their entrance is no less insidious and no less certain, and their action infinitely more fatal than "la grippe" and its effects

Take the life that must be lived from hour to hour in one of these tenements, where the least competent and thus most wretchedly paid laborers of many orders are massed. Two rooms are comparatively luxurious. For many there is but one, and in this one, there may be not only the family proper, but lodgers who take their stipulated share of the floor, and thus add to the family income. Old and young, every relation of life; every fact that is bound up with mere bodily existence and its demands, is practically promiscuous. Baby eyes see,—baby ears hear from the beginning of conscious existence, all the foulness born of dirt, over-crowding, want and privation of every nature. Lust in its lowest phase:—the animal want of creatures not yet evolved from the animal, is the chief form of satisfaction known, and with it is foulness which Zola himself might hesitate to depict. It cannot be said to be deliberate choice. It is rather the inevitable result of abominable conditions, and the miracle is that any virtue of any order can remain.

Taking the next phase where two or more rooms are possible, there is still small margin for the decencies. Personal cleanliness is well nigh impossible; there is no space for what to us are the essentials of the simplest living. The child of the ordinary family under these conditions fares a trifle better than the order next below, but only a trifle. The poison is in the air. Every stairway and hall—even every shadowy place in the narrow streets has its revelation for the young eyes, and its hideous words for the young ears. One cannot exaggerate the picture. On the contrary, only individual experience can take in its full loathsomeness, and realize the life inevitable for thousands.

Out of this beastliness what shall be born? What but beastliness? We are not responsible, we say, yet we allow this hot-bed of all iniquity to spread its bounds and yield its natural fruit as it will. So long as these conditions remain untouched; so long as herding is, in the nature of the present order, inevitable, so long as the underlying facts of natural life are ignored and untaught, so long the Society for the Prevention of Vice will continue to lop branches and leave the roots untouched. Nor, indeed, have we much right to touch them till we are ready to admit that if all that feeds brain and spirit is denied, instinct and flesh will have its way.

With a thousand resources, a thousand methods of enjoyment and growth, man knows no stronger master than this passion. How, then, when resources are unknown, and growth, in any life they have learned to live, well-nigh impossible, shall we judge them, or wail over the morals of the poor? It speaks much for human nature that even here one may find clean souls untouched by the filth of their surroundings. But what right have we to subject any soul to such test, or to judge, if weaker ones cease to struggle, and yield to their environment? Ages have already passed since the evolution of the animal into the human began, and the human struggles still, and must unceasingly struggle against the pull backward and downward.

Civilized as we count ourselves, vast as is the gulf between us and the beginnings of man's history, there are yet barbarisms that reproduce it, and beyond all is this life of the slums in this nineteenth century. No matter what battle may be fought, such poverty, with its attendant helplessness, must mean vice, nor can this fact alter till its farther existence is rendered impossible.

With methods to this end there is no room to deal here. Those who read this are all workers, and workers of long experience, who know what terror lurks in this darkness, and what powers of evil must be fought. All I would do now is to emphasize this one fact: That vice is the natural air of the slums, the natural accompaniment of extreme poverty. By every law known to the development of man, it must remain so till slums become impossible, and larger ideals have been made the portion of those held to-day in chains, not to be broken save by that larger wisdom known as yet chiefly to the dreamers.

"I looked beyond the world for truth and beauty; Sought, found and did my duty."

"The common problem, yours, mine, every one's,
Is—not to fancy what were fair in life,
Provided it could be,—but finding first
What may be, then find how to make it fair
Up to our means." —Robert Browning.

A STUDY OF THE POSITION OF PETER AND PAUL.

BY W. HOWATT GARDNER.

IV.

Did Paul enforce absolute silence upon women in all religious gatherings of his day? If so, then Paul was against Paul, and also Peter's interpretation of the prophecy of Joel, "But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams." Surely, if women prophesied as Paul tells us they did, they must have employed speech. "Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoreth his head. But every woman praying or prophesying with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head."

This passage in this letter to the Corinthians clearly states that women, equally with men, prophesied. If they did not prophesy but were kept in silence, it was absurd for Paul to say anything about women prophesying. What is meant by prophesying? To prophesy means something more than to foretell a future event. We speak of Elijah, Isaiah and Jeremiah as prophets, but they were prophets in that they were preachers; Elijah against the idolatry of Israel, Isaiah preached redemption to God's people, Jeremiah has been termed "the unterrified preacher of righteousness to a sin-smitten people." He has been likened to Cassandra, the Trojan prophetess. As Professor Harper of Yale says of the prophet, "He is a man of his time fighting the sins of his age." Paul speaks of the gifts of the church in their order, in this letter to the Corinthians, as "first, apostles, secondarily, prophets, thirdly, teachers." We note that the office of prophet was placed above that of teacher, yet some women prophesied, though forbidden to teach. It is needless to write of the women prophets of the Old Testament, Miriam, Deborah, Hannah, Huldah, and the wife of Isaiah, a true helper to him in his work. In the New Testament we find "Anna a prophetess," the "four daughters" of Philip, the evangelist. What a help these daughters must have been to their father! Probably the prophetesses of Paul's time were from the Jewish women who were in advance of their pagan sisters in the knowledge of God.

Considering the fact that the Scripture and Philology make no distinction in the function of prophecy as exercised by both sexes, we can assert that it did not exist. What was the office of the prophet? Liddell and Scott's Lexicon defines it as belonging to "an interpreter of Scripture, a preacher." Robinson says, "A class of instructors, or preachers, next in rank to the apostles." Thayer says a prophet is "a man filled with the spirit of God, who, by God's authority and command, in words of weight pleads the cause of God and urges the salvation of men." Etymologically the word prophet is from pro and phemi, to speak for another. The feminine form prophetis indicates difference in gender but not in service. The verb from which it comes means by Liddell and Scott, "To expound publicly, to preach." Robinson's New Testament Lexicon: "To exhort, reprove, threaten, under divine influence, as ambassadors, or interpreters of His (God's) will." We see at once that the place of the prophetess was next to the apostles, as interpreter, preacher. Hackett's edition of Smith's Bible Dictionary says, "The prophets of the New Testament were supernaturally illuminated expounders and preachers." Webster defines "to preach" as meaning, "To pronounce a public discourse on a religious subject."

The prophetess in her office differs nothing from the prophet, so that those who hold that the prophetess preached in private have this to prove against the philological, Scriptural and English understanding of "to preach." "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation and comfort, ... but he that prophesieth edifieth the church." In view of the facts that women prophesied, we note that such women did not preach to a meeting for "women only," but "unto men" (anthropois), persons, and her preaching must have been "to edification." That she was not silent in such service goes without saying.

On the office of prophecy the words of Conybeare and Howson may well be considered: "It is needless to remark that, in the Scriptural sense of the term, a prophet does not mean a foreteller of future events, but a revealer of God's will to man, though the latter sense may (and sometimes does) include the former. So the gift of prophecy was that charism which enabled its possessor to utter, with the authority of inspiration, divine strains of warning, exhortation, encouragement or rebuke, and to teach and enforce the truths of Christianity with supernatural energy and effect. The diffusion among the members of the church of this prophetical inspiration was a circumstance which is mentioned by St. Peter as distinctive of the gospel dispensation; in fact, we find that in the family of Philip the evangelist alone there were four daughters who exercised this gift, and the general possession of it is in like manner implied by the directions of St. Paul to the Corinthians. The latter apostle describes the marvelous effect of the inspired addresses thus spoken. He looks upon the gift of prophecy as one of the great instruments for the conversion of unbelievers."

While there were women who exercised the superior office of prophetess, women in general were not permitted by Paul to exercise the inferior office of teacher. Is this Paul's position? The Greek word for teacher, didaskalos, is considered by scholars as equivalent to katechetes, a catechist teacher, who dictated to the learner matter which was repeated. The teacher in the New Testament is considered as corresponding with the rabbi in the Jewish Church. The method of the rabbis was the same as the Socratic method of teaching, by asking and answering questions. We find Jesus, when a boy twelve years old, "sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them and asking them questions." The Biblical Encyclopedia of McClintock and Strong, states that it "may be that he (Paul) refers to the nature of the office of the Jewish doctors, meaning well-informed persons to whom inquiring Christian converts might have recourse for removing their doubts and difficulties concerning Christian observances. . . . Such a gift could not but be very serviceable in that infant state of the church." When we remember that Paul was brought up a rabbi, a "Hebrew of the Hebrews, brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, thoroughly learned in the Jew's religion," we may well believe that his early training affected his method, in that he naturally appropriated what he believed to be good in the rabbinical method of teaching.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

BY MARY ALLEN WEST.

The object for which this institution was founded is the practical demonstration of temperance principles in the administration of medicine and the inculcation of temperance truth in medical education. This is the work it is doing—a work, as declared by leading physicians, which is the very keystone of the arch of temperance. It only needs a grand rally of temperance forces to its support, to enable this hospital to become a felt power in medical science and practice.

A new board of trustees has lately been elected, consisting of Mrs. Judge Baker, Evanston, president; Mrs. Calista Bigelow, Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Mrs. S. B. Wilkins, Mrs. C. B. Loveless and Mary Allen West. They have secured a full medical staff of physicians pledged to exclude alcohol as an active remedial agent, to assist in the demonstration of our foundation principle and in building up the hospital.

An honorary medical staff is also arranged for, consisting of temperance physicians throughout the country who will, each quarter, report to the house physician of the hospital, results of non-alcoholic treatment in their own practice, use their influence to send patients to the hospital, and in all practical ways interest the medical profession and the public in the principle the hospital is designed to demonstrate. Temperance people throughout the country will aid the cause greatly by securing for this honorary staff, physicians for whom they can vouch, and reporting their names to the house physician at the hospital. Through this staff, as well as from the records of the hospital, will be collected valuable data which will always be open to the profession. Both the honorary and the hospital staff are urged to write up cases for medical and temperance journals, that thus the public may be educated.

The present hospital staff consists of Dr. C. G. Davis, Dr. Jessie B. Brown, Dr. C. B. Read, Dr. G. W. Whitfield, allopathic; Dr. Catharine J. Wells, Dr. B. V. Cushman and Dr. J. B. S. King, homeopathic. The resident physician is Dr. L. M. Owsley.

The Clara Barton Training School for nurses has been carefully reorganized, and a thorough course of study and lectures arranged; it can now furnish to outside patients a limited number of efficient nurses.

The hospital is delightfully situated, and through the generosity of its W. C. T. U. friends, every room is furnished in a comfortable, homelike way. No pleasanter place, nor one in which better care will be received, can be found for those unfortunate enough to be sick. The success attending its treatment has been phenomenal; during the past six months some cures have been effected in cases of typhoid fever and the morphine habit which fully demonstrate the efficacy of non-alcoholic medication. When these results are widely known, we feel sure that the hospital will be filled with patients, and thus a double good will be effected, cures will be wrought and a grand principle established.

What is now needed for complete success? First, that every room in the hospital be filled with patients. This is required both to furnish opportunity to demonstrate our principle, and to put the institution on a self-supporting basis. No beds have been endowed for this year, and the hospital is thus left dependent for support upon the weekly receipts from patients. It is greatly to be desired that generous-hearted friends will endow beds, thus enabling us to take in the many charity patients always seeking admission. A very large proportion of charity cases have been treated here, but, in our present straightened condition, we cannot in justice continue to receive them. We must be just before we are generous, pay our debts before we confer benefactions.

We are in debt, not so deeply as in previous years, but still in debt. For the past sixteen months we have made no appeal for aid, and have consequently received very little. Some of our good friends have generously remembered us, preëminent among these is Ferdinand Schumacher, of Ohio, who, since its foundation, has furnished the hospital with all the flour, oatmeal, and other cereal products it has used. Now the time has come to make an appeal; ours is now an "emergency case"; we need money at once to pay our indebtedness, and to place the hospital before the public in such a position that it will command patronage to make it self-sustaining. Five dollars received during the next month will count for more than ten dollars six months hence.

We are especially anxious to secure a large membership in the hospital association, thus at once providing a fund and securing a constituency who shall be actively interested in the hospital. The conditions of membership are signing the total abstinence pledge, paying an initiation fee of five dollars, and thereafter an annual fee of one dollar. Are there not at least a thousand temperance men and women in this nation who wish to become members of this association, or, if already members, to continue their membership by the payment of annual dues? Let them send their names and money at once to Mrs. J. B. Payne, 3230 Groveland Ave., Chicago, treasurer, and let each one act as a recruiting agent to secure membership among his friends. Those whom the Lord hath so blessed that they can give bountifully, are provided for in our by-laws by a provision making honorary members by the payment of ten dollars, and life patrons by the payment of $100.

We also appreciate the power of the littles. Should every man and woman who really believes in the principle we are demonstrating send one dollar, our financial burdens would be lifted, and a bright future would open before the hospital. Will you not do it?

OUR INVALID FRIEND'S MESSAGE.

MY DEAR FRIENDS:—The many kind inquiries which have come from far and near concerning my safety in the awful storm of last Thursday night have made the whole land seem akin, and has brought out the blessing side of the dire calamity which has, in God's own Providence, befallen our beloved city. I am confident that you all know that I would gladly reply by personal letter to each loving message, but it is not possible now as the sufferings caused by the ravages of the cyclone have added very greatly to our local Flower Mission work, and my heart and hands, time and strength, are fully occupied for the hourly needs.

It is not in the power of my pen to describe the awful experiences of that night, nor the agonies attendant upon it for the bereaved, the suffering and the helpless; but the lessons we have learned as individuals, and as a people, are good. "Who can teach like God?" "Great things doeth He which we cannot understand." But out of the whirlwind "The voice of the Lord is full of majesty" saying unto us "Be still and know that I am God," and I trust we can answer even in the midst of our sorrow, "This God is our God forever and ever." He will be our Guide even unto death." Whilst the storm was very severe in our part of the city we were not in the track of the cyclone and all of our loved ones were mercifully preserved from bodily harm. The marvel with us all is that so few lives were lost, and our hearts are filled with grateful praise that the storm did not burst upon us at a later, or an earlier hour. Our Department secretary, Miss Ferguson, for whom some of you have kindly inquired, was out of Louisville and knew nothing of our disaster until the morning papers carried the news to Elizabethtown. May God grant to your Flower Mission superintendent a new consecration for the summer's work, and to all of us deeper longings to "serve our generation by the will of God," before we fall on sleep.

With grateful thanks for your tender solicitude for me and mine, most sincerely your friend and sister,

Louisville, Ky., April 4. JENNIE CASSEDAY.

A SIGNAL TEMPERANCE VICTORY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Another temperance victory has been achieved in the capital of our nation! March 29, in the House of Representatives, a most notable debate took place upon an "Amendment" to the Army Appropriation bill, or rather upon a certain clause which proposed to appropriate the sum of $100,000 to establish the system of canteens in the army in place of the post-trader's stores, in order to supply the troops at moderate prices, with such articles as may be deemed necessary for their use, entertainment and comfort, as well as to afford them the requisite facilities for gymnastic exercises, billiards and other games.

The line of argument used by the committee for introducing the system was that the trader's store has outgrown its usefulness since the army does not now, as formerly, occupy isolated localities, and that the old system tended to impoverish and debauch the soldiers, while on the contrary, the canteen will improve the discipline of the command by keeping the men within the garrison, thus reducing the number of cases of drunkenness and trials by court martial.

The advocates of the system say that where it has been tried, temperance has been promoted. The commanding officer of a post may set apart for the canteen any suitable room connecting it with the library or reading room if need be, and while the sale of ardent spirits is strictly prohibited, "wines and light beer are permitted to be sold therein." Your National superintendent of soldiers and sailors, realizing the importance of taking immediate action to defeat such a pernicious bill, prepared the following Amendment, "Provided, That no alcoholic liquors, including beer and wine, shall be supplied to the enlisted men in any canteen, or in any room or building at any garrison or military post."

Desiring to express the views of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union on the subject of fermented beverages, a memorial was prepared and addressed to the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, in which a strong protest is made against the fallacious idea that the use of fermented liquors is a minor evil, or, as its advocates declare, a promoter of temperance. I quote from the memorial:

We are in sympathy with explorers into truth, who protest against the notion that beer is harmless and a desirable substitute for the more concentrated liquors.

We indorse the views of life insurance officials, who declare "that in this country and climate its use is an evil only less than the use of whisky, if less on the whole, and that its effect is only longer delayed—not so immediately and obviously bad, but peculiarly deceptive and thoroughly destructive in the end."

We would respectfully call your attention to the fact that in states where prohibitory laws have been passed the fermented beverages are included.

Believing, as we do, that the provision of rooms for literary and social purposes and amusements are necessary, as a means of ameliorating the hardships of a soldier's life, we do not object to the system entirely, and would favor a large appropriation to establish it. But we do most earnestly oppose the introduction of harmful beverages into the canteen, and respectfully pray your honorable body to adopt an amendment to the bill, which shall provide "that no alcoholic liquors, including beer and wine, shall be supplied to the enlisted men in any canteen, or in any room or building, at any garrison or military post."

Washington, D. C., March 28, 1890.

This is signed by the ladies who have given me helpful and wise counsel and support, and without whose assistance, I wish to acknowledge, as I firmly believe, the measure would not have carried as it did, in the Committee of the Whole, by a majority of sixty-two to forty-one against the amendment. To the Hon. Elijah A. Morse, of Massachusetts, is due the thanks of all temperance people. Through his courtesy the amendment was offered and arguments adduced in its support. He was followed by that most earnest champion and defender of the faith, Hon. I. A. Pickler, delegate from South Dakota, and others. Mr. Kerr, of Iowa, argued forcibly in a short and telling speech against all intoxicating beverages. The opponents, under the leadership of F. B. Spinola, a member from New York, endeavored by undignified ridicule, unsupported by any sound argument, to bring the cause into contempt. Slurs and raillery, provoking laughter among those who flocked around him like a swarm of bees, fell from the lips of a man whose sting was directed against the "women of the land, with their foolish whims," and "the gentleman from Massachusetts," but "let him laugh who wins," so our friend Mr. Morse could well afford to shake hands, as he did most cordially, with Mr. Spinola! It was a most exciting scene—and marvelous, that no other subject introduced in the halls of Congress arouses so much enthusiasm as the cause to which we are devoted.

Advertisers want to know what paper ... Mention The

The Petitions praying Congress to suppress the sale of alcoholic liquors in Military and Naval Institutions—and which have been in circulation for two or three years past by the Department of Soldiers and Sailors, I do not doubt, have stirred up a vast amount of sentiment through the country, which has culminated so favorably for us. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the district has aided me in the arduous work of preparing and putting them in shape. The signatures numbering between nine and ten thousand were of great value, because so many represented the Grand Army Posts and officers among the veterans.

The state of New York exhibited the largest amount of labor, and members from at least half of the congressional districts of the Empire state had the names of their constituency put before them asking for prohibitory legislation. Old comrades from the Soldiers' Homes in Virginia sent in a roll with nearly four hundred names; from Missouri came a roll forty feet long; from Kansas, New Jersey, Connecticut, Illinois and Maine, the people thus expressed themselves in favor of righteous legislation. I take the opportunity now, to thank my sisters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union everywhere who have labored with me to this end. Let us take for our motto, "Rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in everything give thanks."

Yours for further conquest,

SARAH A. MCCLEES, Nat. Supt.

APRIL MAGAZINES.

The magazines join with the calendar in declaring that spring has come, though the weather is a belated winter. But Easter flowers bloom on magazine pages, and baseball and other outdoor sports are there breezily set forth. For example, THE COSMOPOLITAN gives "The Enchanted Base Ball," a Cinderella-like romance, with the national game as a background, which ends in this orthodox fashion: "Three weeks after the events recorded above, our hero was united to his charming Violet Veronica. As Caramel's professional earnings (he was the champion short-stop of the world) represent a yearly income of several millions, the young couple are doing very nicely indeed." While this story will afford an hour's amusement, there is much in the magazine of deeper interest. As Miss Bisland was sent around the world by THE COSMOPOLITAN, we naturally look to its pages for an account of her famous trip; this April number gives its first stage, illustrated by Blum from photographs. Professor Marquand tells of Princeton University; Frank G. Carpenter of "The Land of the White Elephant"; M. Riccardo Nobili of the "Académie Julian"; Poultney Bigelow of "The Fighting Forces of Germany"; Edward Everett Hale, in "Social Problems," discusses poverty in Brazil; Murat Halstead reviews Current Events, a department he will henceforth conduct in this magazine.

Price $2.40 per annum. The Cosmopolitan Publishing Co., New York City.

THE CHAUTAUQUAN for April takes us with the Archæological Club to Italy; gives us the first installment of Bella Stillman's "Life in Modern Italy," also Bartoli's "Italian Literature," Part II of "Roman Morals," Prof. Myers' "Politics of Mediæval Italy," and an impartial paper on Savonarola, by Arle Bates. These articles have bearing on the Chautauqua readings for the month, but the number is rich in miscellaneous papers, making it of interest to those—if there are such—who feel no interest in C. L. S. C. Robert Ellis Thompson, of the Seybert Commission for the investigation of Modern Spiritualism, gives a valuable "Study of Spiritualism"; Elizabeth Robins Pennell begins a charming tour, "From Cathedral to Cathedral"; Mrs. Carl Barns gives just the facts needed by those who are honestly seeking to know the results of the higher education of women, in "What our College Women are doing"; Arabella B. Buckley continues her series on "Moral Teachings of Science;" Hezekiah Butterworth writes appreciatively of "Newspaper Poets"; closing with this capital advice to those just trying their wings in poetic flight:

1. Send to the press only the poems that you have lived and that have come to you as inspirations.

2. Keep such poems a year and rewrite them many times before publishing.

3. Never think of the poetic faculty as a trade or means of earning money.

4. So live that your inspirations will grow.

In the April ATLANTIC, Oliver Wendell Holmes has these cruel things to say about the artistic pretensions of Boston's public monuments:

"It must be remembered that I and the other Teacups, in common with the rest of our fellow-citizens, have had our sensibilities greatly worked upon, our patrotism chilled, our local pride outraged by the monstrosities which have been allowed to deform our beautiful public grounds. We have to be very careful in conducting a visitor, say from his marble-fronted hotel to the city hall. Keep pretty straight along after entering the garden,—you will not care to inspect the little figure of the military gentleman to your right. Yes, the Cochituate water is drinkable, but I think I would not turn aside to visit that small fabric which makes believe it is a temple, and is a weak-eyed fountain feebly weeping over its own insignificance. About that other stone misfortune, cruelly reminding us of the "Boston Massacre," we will not discourse; it is not imposing, and is rarely spoken of.

"What a mortification to the inhabitants of a city with some hereditary and contemporary claims to cultivation; which has noble edifices, grand libraries, educational institutions of the highest grade, an art gallery filled with the finest models and rich in paintings and statuary,—a stately city that stretches both arms across the Charles to clasp the hands of Harvard, her twin sister, each lending lustre to the other like double stars,—what a pity that she should be so disfigured by crude attempts to adorn her and commemorate her past that her most loving children blush for her artificial deformities amidst the wealth of her natural beauties! One hardly knows which to groan over most sadly,—the tearing down of old monuments, the shelling of the Parthenon, the overthrow of the pillared temples of Rome, and in a humbler way the destruction of the old Hancock house, or the erection of monuments which are to be a perpetual eye-sore to ourselves and our descendants."

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. Price $1.00 a year.

This magazine, noted for having the largest subscription list of any of its kind, is holding its own under its new editorial management. Mrs. Knapp still conducts its department of Practical Housekeeping. Mrs. Whitney's story, "Ascutney Street," of which Part IV is in the April number, goes on with sustained interest. Caroline Field's story, "Gold Grey" ends with a halo from heaven around its closing; while Phillida contains suggestions we should very much dislike our daughters to hear. We have studied this magazine carefully to discover its secret of success, and this is what it seems to be—its wonderful variety, thus catering to all tastes. This one number contains articles of forty different authors, some of them little known, others of world-wide reputation, and they discuss all topics, and discuss them tersely, very few articles occupying a column. Thus the busiest woman can pick up this paper, sure of finding something short enough to read in her brief leisure moment. We cannot say as much for the "make up" of the paper as for its literary character; advertisements appearing on nearly every page mar its symmetry and often break the continuity of its articles. Nor is the engraving on its cover up to the standard of its other illustrations; instead of "bright, jocund April" as we are told the figure represents, we see a woman who reminds us of Hagar in the Wilderness, as painted by the old masters.

In the HOMILETIC REVIEW the pendulum swings to quite the other extreme from that it occupied in the Home Journal. Here everything is solid, substantial, weighty. Its four sections, that of Reviews, of Sermons, of Exegesis and the Editorial section are each so well conducted and packed so full of valuable matter that we do not see how any young pastor can afford to do without it. This number gives valuable suggestions for Easter sermons. The "Stone Rolled Away," brings a precious Easter message; our Christ did not sink in death, He mastered death in the resurrection; He will master all our fears and be our deliverer, even from the tomb, however securely it is sealed. Go on in the way of faith and love, as did the holy women, and for you every stone shall be rolled away. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 Astor Place, New York. $3 per year, $2.50 to clergymen if paid in advance.

CHRISTIAN THOUGHT is another magazine of great value to all who would keep abreast of the best thought of the century. Its papers are always able, scholarly and impartial. The number for April contains one from a layman, Austin Abbot, Esq., on "The Uses of Retaliation in the Mosaic Law," that clears up some dark points. President J. E. Rankin's lecture on "Men of Literary Genius and Christianity," is given in full. Rev. George C. Yeisley discusses "The Uses of Imagination in Historical Science." Dr. Richard Wheateley gives an exhaustive paper on "The Philosophy of Christian Theology," and other articles of like value make up this number. Published by Wilbur B. Ketchum, 13 Cooper Union, New York City.

The most noticeable article in THE STATESMAN for March is a discussion of the tariff by Walter Thomas Mills. Here is one sentence which gives the situation in a nutshell: "Under the present system, where an industry is weak enough to need protection, it is not strong enough to get it; when it is strong enough to get it, it is usually strong enough to do without it." Send to the Thorne Publishing Company for this wide-awake magazine. $2.00 per year.

BRIGHT BITS FOR READINGS IN MISSIONARY CIRCLES comes from Mrs. M. S. Budlang, Rockford, Ill. It consists of poems, stories, Bible Readings, essays, etc., on missionary subjects, suitable for reading in missionary circles; it represents the gleanings of years among magazines, newspapers and private letters. Price forty cents, and the proceeds are to be divided between the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, and the Deaconesses Home, Chicago.

With it comes an exercise for missionary meetings somewhat on the plan of the game of Authors. It is arranged from a leaflet written by Dr. William Ashmore of the Baptist Mission, Swatow, China. Eighteen persons take part in this exercise; one locates the place mentioned on the map, another writes the figures given on a blackboard, and sixteen persons, each representing a province of China, read the life of the author when called for by the leader. The title of this exercise is "China's Millions." It can be procured by sending a dime to Mrs. A. L. Calder, 114 Dearborn Ave., Chicago.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

MATILDA B. CARSE.

Dear white-ribbon sister, brother, boy or girl: Have you a Temple mite-box on your table? If not, write to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, inclosing a two-cent stamp, and it will be promptly sent you on condition that you will drop into it a cent a day, or its equivalent, during the next twelve months. Mite-boxes in quantities will also be sent to unions for the cost of transportation.

What a transformation will take place in the history of earth, when read in the light of heaven. That which men laud as great, noble and generous, in that pure light will sink out of sight, because the motive which influenced the deed was ignoble. And that which here seems to us of but little account—hardly worth mentioning—will there stand forth luminous, unfolding into noble proportions. It is the love which prompts the deed that makes it valuable in God's sight. We feel that there is that going into the building of our Temple which is far beyond the value of gold or precious stones. It is the loving and self-denying gifts of those who have little to give. Through a mist of tears we often read the letters that come to us. Here is an extract from one: "I hope no other mother will have an offering as sacred as I have had—the pieces off my beautiful dead boy's eyes, and the change found in his pocket. Where else could I put them but into the mite-box?" Another mother, Mrs. Johnston, of Midway, Pa., sends $1, which belonged to her little son, Alvan D. Johnston, ten years old, who died December 6. She thinks the money too sacred to be used for anything but the Temple. Alvan was a true hero. His physician thought he might prolong his life by the use of whisky. When Alvan heard what they were going to give him, although he knew he must die, he said in a firm voice, "No, doctor, I cannot take that," and bravely held to his word. "Thus, with a clear mind and pure lips, our loved one went home to God." So writes the president of the Midway Union, Miss Anna E. Campbell.

Another sacred gift of $1.85, the contents of a mite-box, has come to us—sacred, because the loving, faithful hand that dropped the daily penny into the box has become immortal. Lydia Lemon, of Rehoboth, Ind., fell asleep in Jesus, January 11, in her thirty-sixth year, so writes her father, Mr. John S. Lemon. He speaks of the great interest she took in the W. C. T. U. work, "especially in the building of the wonderful Temple." Another aged saint and noble white-ribboner, Mrs. Mary Williams Chappell, Elk Mound, Wis., died January 9, in her eighty-fourth year. Her daughter, Mrs. Frick, sends a dollar in memoriam.

A mother in Israel, a most devoted white-ribboner, Mrs. Lucina E. Clark Johnson, of Delaware, Ohio, was called, March 4, into the presence of the King, to receive the reward of those who faithfully serve him. She died, after a short illness, at the home of her youngest son in Portland, Ore., where she had been stopping during the winter. Although over seventy she was full of active Christian work, and was a leading member of the W. C. T. U. She was greatly interested in the building of the Temple. A few months ago she wrote pledging to send $100 to the building fund. After her death the pledge was found among her effects. One of her sons, now living in Chicago, came to the office yesterday and redeemed it by payment of $100. He said it gave him great pleasure to do anything to carry out the wishes of such a mother. In words of tenderest love and veneration he recounted the virtues of this noble woman whose memory is so sacred, and whose children arise and call her blessed.

We receive many Baby Band lists—but only occasionally do we have sent in a complete band of a hundred names. We hold in warm appreciation the women that go from house to house, patiently and lovingly getting mothers to pledge to bring up their children in temperance principles, and securing the names of the little ones on the Baby Band. It means a great deal of loving labor to secure $10—with a hundred names. Mrs. Sarah Bennett, Belvidere, Ill., has the honor of raising a full band; numbering one hundred, and one for which she has sent a check for $10.10. Mrs. Harriette K. Patterson, Middletown, N. J., also sent in $10—with a full band of one hundred names.

The interest of the little ones in the Temple seems to be on the increase. Little Katie Maitland, of South Oil City, Pa., aged ten years, writes: "I counted my money and there was $5.72. Papa put in enough to make out $6. Of this $3.65 is my own penny a day money which I promised last February when you sent me the mite-boxes. The visitors' bank contained $2.35. Mamma gave me all the three cent pieces she got during the year; there were thirty-six of them. I sent a draft to Miss Pugh representing this money. I hope when the Temple is finished I can go to the dedication." We hope so, too. Gracie Pinckard, of Brighton, Ill., writes: "I am a little girl eleven years old; I live on a farm and am very much interested in the Temperance Temple. If I could I would give $100. I am raising chickens; mamma says that all the money I get I can give to the Temple. Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL. When I am big I am going to work very hard for the W. C. T. U. and help all I can. I want a Temple mite-box, if you please."

All money orders and checks for the Temple should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, National treasurer, and treasurer of the Temple fund. All information in regard to the Temperance Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, Pres. Woman's Temperance Building Association.

THE GREAT PROCESSION.

BY HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD

Did you ever happen to think, when dark
  Lights up the lamps outside the pane,
And you look through the glass on that wonderland
  Where the witches are making their tea in the rain,
Of the great procession that says its prayers
All the world over, and climbs the stairs,
And goes to a wonderland of dreams,
Where nothing at all is just what it seems?

All the world over at eight o'clock,
  Sad and sorrowful, glad and gay,
These with their eyes as bright as dawn,
  Those almost asleep on the way;
This one capering, that one cross,
Plaited tresses, or curling floss,
Slowly the long procession streams
Up to the wonderland of dreams.

Far in the islands of the sea
  The great procession takes up its way,
Where, throwing their faded flower-wreaths down,
  Little savages tire of play;
Though they have no stairs to climb at all,
And go to sleep wherever they fall.
By the sea's soft song and the stars' soft gleam
They are off to the wonderland of dreams.

Then the almond lids of the Tartar boy
  Droop like a leaf at close of day;
And her mat is pleasant as clouds of down
  To the tawny child of the Himalay;
And the lad on the housetop at Ispahan
Sees night, while the rose-breaths around him fan,
Lead up from the desert his starry teams
And mount to the wonderland of dreams.

The round world over, with dark and dew,
  See how the great procession swells;
Hear the music to which it moves,
  The children's prayers and the evening bells
It climbs the slopes of the far Azores,
At last it reaches our Western shores;
And where can it go at these extremes
But into the wonderland of dreams?

Hurrying, scampering, lingering, slow
  Ah, what a patter of little feet!
Eyelids heavy as flowers with bees,
  Was ever anything half so sweet?
Out of the tender evening blue—
I do believe it has come for you
To be off to the wonderland of dreams,
Where nothing at all is just what it seems!—Sel.

TIP.

'Here lies entombed beneath this sod,
  Watered with tears,
The dearest, wisest, high old dog,
  For many years
The country ever knew,
  Tippecanoe!
Died March 3, 1862."

This was the inscription. We boys had spent a half holiday carving it with our jack-knives on a pine slab, and when the last "i" had been dotted with a gimlet, and the last period made, Tom laid it down and surveyed his work a moment.

"Can't you think of something more to put at the bottom?" he said. "I don't feel so badly when I am at work for the old fellow."

Tom had already worked within half an inch of the notch cut to show how deep the slab must be sunk. "Think of something more!" said Phil indignantly. "It would take all the pine slabs that ever grew in Maine to say all that ought to be said about him!"

This made a happy diversion, for, used as Tom and I were to Phil's exaggerations, we felt the corners of our mouths giving way.

One evening last summer father exclaimed:

"This is too hot! Let's fill the lunch baskets to-morrow, and take the steamer for the Islands."

This was a favorite trip with us boys, down the harbor to the bay, and the very mention of it sent us off into ecstasies.

"And take Tip?" was the chorus, as heads came uppermost.

"No," said mother, "three boys are all I can manage. I let Tip go last time and he made so much trouble, I cannot take him."

Tip had risen eagerly at the sound of his name, but, as the last sentence was finished he dropped his head and slowly left the room.

"Now you have hurt Tip's feelings," we cried.

"He'll have time to get over it, for I don't think we can get off before day after to-morrow. Phillis will want one day to make cake and sandwiches for so many."

Where was Tip? No one had seen or heard him since the night before, and he never left the premises unless with one of us.

Had some one stolen him

The question became a fear, as the hours went past, and no Tip. Up and down the city we went, inquiring of every one we knew if they had seen our dog; but in vain. That day father sat in his office, as much distressed as we. At last, toward evening, the captain of one of the Island steamers sauntered in. "Good evening," he said. "Do you know where your dog is?"

"No," said my father, "I'm sorry to say I don't."

"Needn't trouble yourself about him," said the captain, laughing; "I'll tell you where he has been all day. He marched down to the wharf this morning, half an hour before I started, and straight aboard my steamer, and there he was when I moored again, fifteen minutes ago. He's made the round trip, done the Islands, made himself agreeable to every one, and behaved with the utmost propriety."

What a shout there was at home when the story came out! Tip had determined to show that he could and would go; and that he was a perfectly proper personage. The change in the day had been made after he had left the room, and he had marched down a little in advance of time, expecting us to follow. As we did not appear, he would not retreat, but had gone through the day in solitary grandeur.

Phillis had a cat that had in Tip an admirer of unspeakable devotion. One friendly glance, one touch of her velvet paw, was reward enough for hours of gazing, or the choicest morsels of his dinner.

A rival interfered. A poor little kitten, the only one Phillis had spared. No more attention for Tip; not even a turn of the head or a glance as he passed by; and as day after day went on with no change, the dog could bear it no longer.

Suddenly, without warning, he sprang forward, seized the kitten by the neck, and dashed like lightning from the yard, and before the cries of puss could bring help, Tip had reached the wharf and dropped his luckless rival into the water.

We boys, though forced to confess that snatching an only child from its mother wasn't the truest spirit of knighthood, were all ready to pat Tip in secret for his brilliant stroke. But father took no such view of the case. Tip had committed robbery and murder to make room for his own selfish interests, and should be horsewhipped. We went away that we might not witness his disgrace or hear his cries.

We made secret plans for comforting Tip, but he was not to be found, and morning failed to discover him. Had he turned his back on us forever, was the question we were asking one another, when a schoolmate called over the fence,—"Saw your dog at your Cousin Tenbrook's an hour ago!"

"At Cousin Tenbrook's! I guess not much! We took him there last summer, when we went to the country and he wouldn't stay a day! He came back and sat on the steps, and lived on stray crusts till we got home."

The boy was telling the truth and we were starting to bring Tip home when father stopped us. Tip was feeling his disgrace, and ought to feel it, and we should let him alone. In a fortnight with tail erect, and amid shouts of welcome, Tip stalked into the yard.

It was not long before he redeemed his character, and did it, as we thought, a thousand times over.

We had him out walking with us, when a runaway horse appeared dashing at fearful speed, dragging behind him an elegant sleigh, containing a child.

Some people stood out of the way as the sleigh sped down the street, others stepped nearer and brandished their arms and shouted. Tip stood beside us, his eyes fixed upon the approaching animal. Nearer, nearer! but not a hair of Tip's tail stirred until the sleigh was almost opposite us. Then, with a bound he reached the horse's side, and seizing the bridle, hung with his whole weight upon the bit.

The horse, frantic as he had seemed a moment before, hesitated, and in a moment stood still.

Every year added glory to Tip's record, but he was growing old. And at last a remark was incautiously dropped by mother, that she did not know how much longer he could be tolerated about the house.

The next morning Tip was again missing and found at Cousin Tenbrook's but not to return. No entreaty or command could move him. Not a look would he bestow upon my mother. He had left us, and all previous relations were ignored for the few days remaining to him.

Then we claimed him once more, and this time without resistance. Solemnly we brought home all that was left of Tip, and committed to the one poor pine slab the only record we knew how to make of his sagacity and intelligence.—Christian Herald.

The Still Hour.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 20, 1890.

BY REV. C. C. HARRAH.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

(Luke 7:36–50; Acts 19–24.)

Sunday, 20; Luke 7:36–50. Verse 36, Jesus was ever ready to go where He could do any good. Verse 37, There is a beauty and tenderness in this story of Christ's treatment of this woman which shows how true and how great was that ministering love which led Him to give His life to save sinners. In the woman we behold great sin, great repentance, great faith, and great love.

Monday, 21; Acts 19. Verse 1, One may be a disciple or learner, and yet be very feeble with respect to experience and knowledge. Paul's recognition of these Ephesians as disciples, shows that all those deserve the name who, in God's sight, possess hearts that earnestly desire salvation.

Tuesday, 22; Acts 20. Verse 1, Whatever trials Paul had, he never faltered in his work. If the opportunity of serving Christ closed in one place, he immediately went to another. Verse 19, Those whose chief concern it is to throw off responsibility, and who do not take to heart the duties of Christian work, can neither understand the apostle's trials nor the peace and joy, which at other times he expresses.

Wednesday, 23; Acts 21. Verse 5, The children loved Paul, and were deeply interested in his great work, as well as the fathers and mothers. We love to think of those little worshipers, there on the shore at Tyre, kneeling down with the older disciples. Why not make the children perfectly at home in our prayer meetings, and in all our meetings for worship? Verse 9, There is no difference in the kingdom of grace between male and female. In worship and in the use of their gifts, all believers are equal in the Church of Christ. Verse 24, Paul was not unfaithful to the law, nor did he induce others to apostatize from it. His principle was, to become as a Jew that he might gain the Jews. I Cor. 9: 20. But he did not teach or practice that Levitical laws must be observed in order to salvation.

Thursday, 24; Acts 22. Verse 1, Paul is composed and kind in the midst of the storm, and proceeds to give an account of his conversion, in which he witnesses to the grace of Christ toward sinners and His heavenly glory and power. Verse 22, The most powerful discourse will accomplish nothing, if the hearts of the people are wrong and their minds are so shut up by prejudice and falsehood that they cannot see the truth. We cannot measure the value of a discourse by its visible fruits.

Friday 25; Acts 23. Verse 1, We are not to mistake a sleeping for a good conscience. True faith in Christ, a life ordered according to the Gospel, and a faithful performance of our duties, is the way to a good conscience.

Saturday 26; Acts 24. Verse 1, No cause is so bad that it cannot find an advocate. Falsehood has always had plenty of supporters; but if thousands assent to it, a lie remains a lie. Verse 12, Paul states the case, denies the truth of the charges, calmly asserts that the opposite is truth, demands an investigation of the truth, exposes the true reason of the complaint, and, with a good conscience and a believing heart, fearlessly and successfully meets his enemies. Verse 25, We should profit by the faithfulness of the apostle. He was dependent on the favor of Felix, nevertheless he leads him to tremble on account of his sins, by preaching to him the whole counsel of God and keeping nothing back.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(Taking up the Cross. Matt. 16: 24, 25. "Bible Reading Leaflet," December, 1888.)

1. Not the discipline of the "old man," by the doing of very hard, unpleasant and trying things, is meant by our Lord, when He requires us to take up the cross. In Christ there is the death of the old man and not its discipline, and there is a new creation. Gal. 6: 14, 15. If we have this new life, His yoke is easy and His burden is light. Matt, 11: 30.

2. To take up the cross is to find the way to a new life and a better order of things by crucifying the old man. When selfishness is overcome, and we have become so dead to the world that its power to tempt and enslave us is gone, and our affections are set on the will of God so that we delight to do it, then we have found the blessed meaning of taking up the cross. The flesh, with the affections and lusts, is now crucified, and a cross is for crucifixion. Gal. 4: 24.

3. To deny ourselves, take up the cross and follow Christ, which our Lord requires in the text, means to live in that part of our nature which loves God's will and delights to do it. We do not desire to sin, and can "take pleasure" in trials for Christ's sake. II Cor. 12:10.

The Household.

WHY?

BY MARY F. BIGELOW.

"Bread-corn is bruised."—Isa. 28: 28.

Why hurt us so? We flinch and cringe,
And fain would miss the bruising sore;
We wonder at the deep'ning twinge,
Which shrinking makes us feel the more;
We're bruised and beaten o'er and o'er!

Sometimes 'tis lack of earthly wealth;
Sometimes the tarnish of our name;
The loss of rich, full-veinèd health;
Or some one's sin bows us with shame;
Some wanderer never homeward came;

Some sorrow we must hide with care,
Some pain no other life must know,
Or grief we would not wish to share,
Which fills our hearts with bitter woe:
We bear the load where'er we go!

"Bread-corn is bruised"—to make it fit
For finest uses, deepest need;
The tender Father doeth it,
Who "will not break the bruised reed";
It is His kindest, truest deed!

If thus He molds us to some use,
Some gentle, holy minist'ring,
Albeit the thing we could not choose,
Shall we not to the bruising bring
A loyal heart, to please our King?

"The finest of the wheat" for Thee!
Our best, made best by sorest pain,
Is still so poor; our energy
Is all too often labor vain!
Lord, bruise us till we value gain!

THE WOMAN OF THE FUTURE.

After What Manner Will She be Clothed?

It would be hard to overestimate the importance of the questions asked below. On the dress of women depends their attractiveness, and more than this their health and efficiency. Women everywhere are taking up the problem of dress improvement in a spirit of interested inquiry. In the names of art and beauty, in the name of physical development, in the name of every-day and business needs, it is being asked on every hand, How shall we be clothed? The answers quoted represent many varying shades of opinion. Taking so wide a range the discussion may lead to clearer view.

1. What, in your opinion, will be the dress of the coming woman? In what general respects, if any, will it differ from the present feminine attire?

2. Is the tendency of fashion in the direction of more graceful and artistically satisfactory costumes?

3. Is it in directions favorable to health and greater freedom of body? Will the corset be dispensed with? Will you indicate any desirable dress reforms?

4. Is there any prospect of the differentiation of a "business dress" for women employed outside their homes? What would be a suitable model for such a gown?

5. What is your idea of the ideal dress of woman?

BY LUCY STONE.

It is too early to know exactly or to see exactly how women will dress in the future. But as they come more and more into the world of work they will cease to pinch themselves. They will have no time to brush, even clean, endless yards of muddy skirts; hence dresses will be short. Women will know more about the laws of health and will dress so as not to interfere with healthful conditions. The much broader education women are receiving will give them better things than dressing to think about.

I hope much for the future of women in all directions, when they have an open field and fair play, and clothes will have their share of good in that better time.

1. I think the dress of the coming woman will be shorter and lighter than that now worn.

2. The tendency of fashion seems to me to be in the direction of simpler and hence more graceful costumes.

3. It also seems to be in directions favorable to health. The corset will be dispensed with.

4. A business dress seems inevitable. The "Bloomer dress," slightly modified, is the best dress for ease of motion, lightness and neatness. I know, for I have tried it.

5. My idea of the ideal dress for woman is dress that will well protect the body but leave every muscle free. Hence it must be short and light and loose.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

1. The coming woman will, I think, have no ligature or cramping garment, shoe, glove or hair-pin! There will be in her the solid self-respect founded on a knowledge of the laws of physical well-being and a reverent understanding of the happiness that she may be laying up in store for the little lives of future years and the curses that may blight their world should she be ignorant or untrue to God's ritual of natural law written in the body—"the temple of the Holy Ghost." The reform in woman's dress has already gone a long way as to underwear—corsets having been largely discarded by really well-educated women, flannel garments being very generally worn and the weight and warmth of clothing quite evenly distributed. High heels are at a discount and the shape of the foot has some slight consideration in shoemaking.

2. On the whole it is gaining, but fashion plates in general are still an affront to every woman with a brain in her head and a heart in her breast.

3. It is, I am quite sure; corsets must go.

4. The dress of women will eventually be much the same, I think, outdoors and in, for a "sensible gown" is always pleasing and suitable for all occasions.

5. The ideal dress has not yet dawned upon our eyes; it must be an evolution, and we have but just begun to evolute. But one thing is already clear, it must be (1) modest, (2) hygienic, (3) pleasing to the eye and satisfying to the mind.

"May these things be."

BY MRS. ANNIE JENNESS-MILLER.

1. The dress of the coming woman will be more and more the expression of the use to which it is to be put. For the business woman, a gown for utility will be first considered, and it will differ from the present business woman's dress in several essential particulars. It will be shorter, plainer, more free from the useless furbelows.

2. The tendency of the fashion is at the moment decidedly in the direction of grace and artistic effects, but fashion is subject to so many changes that it is impossible to predict what extravagant and outrageous conceptions may be offered us within the next few years in its name. But whenever these changes are offered there will surely be a very large number of women who will refuse to accept the authority of what is ugly, and I predict that each successive attempt to reintroduce what is novel and grotesque (although dictated by fashion) will meet with more and more opposition until fashion conforms to good taste.

3. Yes, all dress is now more or less tinged with the idea of health, freedom and comfort. The corset, if not entirely dispensed with, will be modified to become a mere support for the bosom instead of an instrument for deformity and disproportion.

4. The business woman's dress must, in the nature of things, be different from that worn by the woman of leisure. The skirtless dress worn by men in active life is a departure from the flimsy skirts and drapery of the studious, the monks and high magistrates, and is recognized as correct for its own purposes. Why should woman's dress not admit the same rational differences in a form adapted to her sex?

5. The ideal dress for women will differ according to temperament, to profession and circumstances. These differences will be founded upon common sense and the study of artistic principles. Dress must become more and more the expression of the individual. I do not believe that man's dress will ever be accepted by woman—it is not adapted to her needs in a single particular, besides, it is the very essence of ugliness. Women must study the possibilities of beauty in dress, for we need to urge the gospel of beauty and grace if we are to hope for the triumph of woman's superior kingdom. A beautiful woman is a power for good, and whatever legitimate means are within her reach—physical culture, dress, the cultivation of facial expression, or hygienic forces, which will keep off the ravages of time, are to be encouraged. The long, graceful clinging robe is most beautiful for occasions of leisure.

6. The ideal dress for woman is in my taste based upon the princess style, with train, and long, flowing lines for house, and plain tailor gowns for street.

BY LUCY M. HALL, M. D.

1. From present indications the dress of the coming woman will be modeled on hygienic principles. Women are wearying of carrying about a superfluous weight of clothes. The coming woman will wear combination undergarments and clothing so made as to produce no compression, to leave no weight on the hips and as little weight as possible anywhere. The woman of the future will be a healthier and more vigorous individual than the woman of to-day. She will not wear a seal or other skin overgarment. A prominent specialist is even now imperatively commanding his women patients to leave off their sealskins, regarding them as a fruitful cause of throat difficulties.

2. The tendency of fashion seems to be in the direction of more artistic costumes, so far as toilets for the evening and for dress occasions are concerned, but street attire is not at all satisfactory. A gown to be worn out of doors should have no flying ends. Sashes and ribbons and directoire flaps are in place only in the drawing room.

3. The corset must go. Actresses who depend on grace for a large share of their attractions have discarded corsets, from Bernhardt down.

4. A business dress to be useful must be of a length not to catch and drag. It must combine simplicity, comfort and convenience. It must admit the drawing of a full breath and must not confine the arms.

5. The ideal dress must be designed by each woman in accordance with her own needs. Its details must depend on the occasion on which it is to be worn. A street suit is one thing, a house toilet quite another. For the house a woman may indulge her artistic instincts as to color and style. If she does not disobey health principles the more she idealizes the better, and it is a pity that men have not equal liberty.—Selected.

THE HIGHER LAW.

BY ELIZABETH J. SCOVEL.

Sitting by my window studying the Bible I looked out to note the falling snow, and my eyes rested on some long icicles hanging from the roof of the house opposite. They were very large ones, and, watching them as they grew, I saw three laws at work forming one icicle. It became intensely interesting to see these laws battling with each other, and I forgot all else as the Great Teacher impressed upon my heart the wonderful lesson, so unlooked for.

In the first place there was the law of cohesion, holding together with determined grasp all the particles of water which the cold atmosphere re-chilled and stopped on their way to the earth. Then there was the law of gravitation drawing down the icicles, for had it not been that the center of the earth called these drops of water to itself, and that all things material were made slaves to its law, they might have been formed upward rather than downward. Then I noticed still another law. The wind pressed hard against the side of the icicle, and as the tiny drop found its way to the end it was pushed over, caught and congealed in an ungracious fashion, making the mass misshapen. As soon as one drop had itself become solidified, another running down to follow the law of gravitation was borne off to the side. Thus bent and twisted was the icicle, and looking at it long, I said in my heart, That is law, but not liberty; those little drops have not been permitted to go where they were drawn at first, but on their way were caught, captured, and held by the two other powers, which, for the time, outdid the strength of gravitation.

It was natural to ask, Is there no help for this? Is there no other law that God has made which will set at liberty those drops now held as prisoners? Yea, verily. To-morrow out will come the sun, a stronger power than all the rest. Without bluster he will shine on that icicle, and loose every drop in it to go on its natural way to the earth if it will, for the earth is a good place, and the home that water naturally seeks; but if any drops under the transforming power of the sun's loving rays are enough heated, they will not follow gravitation, but will change to vapor and be carried far away into the upper air, instead of filling out their first and perfectly appropriate mission. So it was with man; he was created pure, and held by the laws of this world to its center; he was not able of himself to do more than gravitate as he was born to do. The chilling atmosphere of the winter of sin caught him, the passing power of the enemy bent and bowed him from the upright way. God says we are dead in trespasses and sins, helpless to help ourselves, powerless to extricate ourselves from the laws of a fallen nature as was the icicle to escape the grip of cohesion and the ugliness wrought upon it by the wintry wind. The Scripture says, "Not by might, not by power" of our own, but "by my spirit, saith the Lord," is freedom wrought. So He sets in the sky of faith the glorious Sun of Righteousness to shine on every heart, liberating it to its free will, becoming not only the end of the law, and so holding and binding that heart, but opening up the new, bright realm of righteousness.

"Liberty to the captives" comes this way, "and the opening of the prison to them that are bound," for just so surely as the natural sun liberated the rain drops to go their way, so Christ, the Son of God, was sent to set at liberty every heart bound by the laws of this lower realm, so that it might go its own way, when quickened by the Spirit, into the upper air of holiness, or might live out its own natural existence in a life converted but not so utterly transformed, and go to the center of its own sphere, making this world its stage of action. Who can praise God enough for the Sun of Righteousness? "This is the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." It is a blessed thought that as in the natural world so in the spiritual, the greater law takes us from the grasp of the lesser, "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made us free from the law of sin and death," and this law of His life in us is our only real liberty. "Lo! these are parts of His ways."

PHRASES AND EXPRESSIONS TO BE AVOIDED.

[The professor of English Literature in Wellesley College has made out a list of words, phrases and expressions to be avoided. There is no reader of THE UNION SIGNAL who will not be the better for noticing this list. Perhaps most of us know that we ought not to use the tabooed expressions, but we are apt to say them all the same, therefore we are going to pass along this index expurgatorius. —ED.]

You must not say "guess" for "suppose" or "think"; "fix" for "arrange" or "prepare"; "ride" and "drive" must not be used interchangeably; "real" as an adverb in the expressions "real good," when you should say "really good" or "very good"; "some" or "any" in an adverbial sense, for example, "I have studied some" for "somewhat," "I have not studied any" for "I have not studied at all"; "some ten days" for "about ten days"; "not as I know," "not that I know"; "it storms" for "it rains or snows"; "try the experiment" for "make the experiment"; singular verb for contracted plural verb, for example, "she don't skate well" for "she doesn't skate well"; plural pronoun with singular antecedent, "every man or woman should do their duty," "if you will look any one straight in the face they will flinch." (This is the most frequent error of persons who otherwise speak quite correctly).

SACREDNESS OF THE BALLOT.

In this country where the ballot is the badge of sovereignty and every voter is a sovereign, no more sacred act can any man perform than that of voting. Much is said about the need of an educational qualification for the franchise, and rightly, too, because other things being equal, it must be better for a republic that its sovereigns be intelligent than that they be ignorant. But it is even more necessary that the moral sense of the popular sovereign be so educated that he will realize his responsibility and vote conscientiously. He must be made to see that for a corrupt vote, or a vote cast for a corrupt party and against any righteous reform, he is as guilty before God as for any flagrant private sin. Indeed, if measured by consequences, the former may be more wicked than the latter, since its influence may be confined to himself or to a very limited circle; while a vote for the wrong may be fraught with evil consequences to the whole nation. Plato said: "Until kings become philosophers, or philosophers become kings, there can be no end of evils in political communities." Our king is the voter, and he needs something more than philosophy to fit him for the supreme function of a popular sovereign. Until his exercise of the elective franchise is governed by an enlightened conscience, we never shall get rid of the social, industrial and political evils which now seriously threaten the stability of our free institutions.

It requires only a slight acquaintance with the politics of this country to show that many, probably a majority, of citizens have no adequate conception of their responsibility as voters. Many sell their votes for liquor, or for money; and there are many more who vote for party instead of principle; who understand little and care less about the principles of which their parties are the professed exponents. Enough for them that the ticket handed them bears the name of their leaders, and that the man who presents it is known to be working in the interest of their party. Nor is this ignorance and indifference concerning the issues and responsibilities involved in the act of voting confined to the ignorant and vicious classes. Many professional men, business men, and even Christian men, have no sense of the sacredness of the ballot; they worship at the shrine of the party fetich, and vote for measures that are wrong and for men who are corrupt.

The causes of this state of things are not far to seek. One is the intense party spirit that has prevailed since Washington uttered his memorable warning against its evils. Another is the use of the immense wealth of the rum power and great industrial corporations to buy votes and make public opinion. Another is that there is very little education of the conscience of voters concerning their political duties and responsibilities. Politics and political economy have been divorced from ethics. This is true not only in the arena of practical politics and industrial life, but in our schools and colleges, in the text-books they use, in the church, in religious as well as secular periodicals. Our religious papers are handicapped in the discussion of great political questions, however moral in their bearings and vital to the welfare of the people, by prejudice against "mixing religion and politics." The instruction of the people concerning their political duties is left to party papers and leaders, whose utterances, when not unscrupulous and uncandid, are so far controlled by interest and passion as to make them unsafe guides. The great motive power in our politics is the spoils of office. Disinterested patriotism among politicians is hard to find.

With such leadership it is not surprising that many regard the ballot as an agency to promote the interests of a political party, while others sell their votes to the highest bidder. It is an appalling fact that a corrupt use of money controls presidential elections, and in some states and cities, important state and municipal elections. We hear a great deal about "campaign funds" and "legitimate campaign expenses," and there are, of course, legitimate expenditures of money in every important election; but it is safe to say that for every dollar that is used legitimately two are used corruptly. Often the candidate himself puts money into the hands of saloonkeepers to pay for treating his constituency and to buy votes. And where a candidate pays from $1,000 to $50,000, toward his canvass, he knows that a large percentage of the sum he contributes goes through the hands of his campaign managers to buy votes directly or with drink. Shameful as these truths are, they are well known. The more shameful fact is that in many places these methods of securing an election are so common that they are accepted as a matter of course, and attract little attention or adverse comment.

The most effectual remedy for these evils will be a clear recognition, by every voter, of the sacredness of the ballot and of his responsibility for the welfare of the nation. The general adoption of the Australian method of voting will do much to prevent bribery, but so long as there are voters who regard the ballot as a sort of personal property to be sold, or used to gratify a passing caprice or passion, or to promote personal interest or a party, instead of a sacred trust to be used for the common weal at the high behest of conscience—so long there will be corruption in elections. We cannot have righteous laws, or conscientious, God-fearing legislators and executors of law, unless we vote conscientiously and in the fear of God. In reality, as well as in theory, the responsibility for the righteous government of the nation rests upon the voters, and we repeat, there is no more sacred act that any American citizen has to perform than the act of voting. The voter who knowingly casts a ballot for the enactment of unrighteous laws is as guilty as he who desecrates the holiest rite of religion.

THE ANTI-PROHIBITION CONVENTION IN IOWA.

There has been a meeting in Des Moines, Iowa. One great Republican journal referred to it as an anti-saloon conference; another called it "the anti-prohibition movement," and said, "All the delegates were Republicans." Twenty-five counties of the state were represented by one hundred and ninety-six delegates. With rare exceptions the speakers were "personally favorable to prohibition." Politically, they seemed favorable to anything that promised to secure votes and win the offices. The resolutions are curious and contradictory. They declare allegiance to President Harrison and the platform upon which he was elected, but deny the right of a political organization to bring into its declaration of principles a doctrine upon which its members do not substantially agree. This unique conference resolved itself as unalterably opposed to constitutional prohibition for the reason that "the organic law should not be encumbered with such a police regulation." Let this "state conference of prominent Republicans" say upon the housetop what we have been denounced for saying in our closets: "A large number of Republicans in Iowa are, and always have been, opposed to general prohibition." With the broad catholicity which amounts to no-policy and no-principle, it resolves:

We recognize that there are many able and faithful members of the party who believe in prohibition, and it would be as unjust and unwise to offend them by the announcement of any platform, as we have felt it unjust and unwise to make declarations repugnant to our views. Inasmuch as the members of the party are not agreed upon this subject, there is obviously but one course which the party can honorably pursue; it is to rigorously exclude from the party platform every reference to it, leaving each Republican member of the Legislature at full liberty to act with respect to it as his judgment may direct.

The following plank is apparently a bludgeon:

Those members of the party holding our views can not, with honor to themselves, longer lend their aid to impose upon many communities all the evils of unlicensed, unrestricted and unregulated liquor selling. And we insist on such a change in the platform of the Republican party as will enable us to stand honestly upon it, and to assist in restoring the party to complete supremacy; and hereby pledge ourselves to so work in the future as to attain the object, and secure the end set forth in the foregoing views.

The resolutions, which, it is reported, were "received with great enthusiasm," close with this demand upon the Legislature now in session: "In the interest of morality, business, and social order, we ask the General Assembly now in session to so amend the prohibitory liquor law as to give the communities that so desire to act the power, subject to a minimum license to be fixed by the Legislature, to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors through the medium of high license."

But Governor Larrabee said in his last message to the General Assembly, "There is every reason to believe that prohibition is better enforced in the ninety counties of Iowa than any high license law is enforced in any state of the Union. Experience has shown that the difficulties attending the enforcement of such a law, are no less than those attending the enforcement of prohibition." Again says the Governor: "The standard of temperance has been raised even in those cities where the law is not yet enforced. . . . Our courts show a marked improvement in dealing with the question." The movement of which this conference is the culmination has made great headway since the last election, which placed a Democrat in the gubernatorial chair. These men did not discover that prohibition was a failure until it failed to win. Upon this point Governor Larrabee said, "The cry of failure may be heard in every great contest. It is the watchword of the straggler." We do not believe the Des Moines meeting is representative of the party which gave Iowa prohibition in 1882, and has been its bulwark ever since. Its foundations were laid in righteousness, and it can well afford to cast off these time-serving members whose principle is policy—the policy that wins.

THE CHINESE ENUMERATION BILL.

The Chinese Enumeration Bill, which received a two-thirds vote of the House and is now pending in the Senate, encounters strong opposition in the East from widely differing sources. The bill introduced as a feature of the census is really an attempt to fortify and render more effective the Chinese Exclusion Act. It requires the Superintendent of Census to enumerate the Chinese population in such a manner as will enable him to make out an accurate descriptive list of every individual of either sex. He shall give to every Chinese person an engraved certificate containing all particulars necessary to his identification; in case of children the certificates are issued to the parents, and all must be recorded in the Census office. Experts and special agents may be employed to determine whether the applicants are legally entitled to residence in the United States, that is, if they were in the country previous to the passage of the Exclusion Act, or if they came in under its provisions.

The act is to take effect on June 1, 1890. In ninety days the penalty becomes operative. After that time any Chinese found without a certificate may be brought to trial before any judge or justice in a United States court. If adjudged ineligible to residence in this country, he will be sentenced to deportation, or five years in the penitentiary at hard labor. If found guilty of falsifying in the court, he will be fined from one to two thousand dollars, and imprisoned from one to five years. The provisions and penalties of the bill are extremely severe. Its sponsors declare it is necessary; they say that the efforts made to suppress Chinese immigration have proved ineffective. The officials in the seaports have executed the law to the best of their ability, but on the north and south are 5,000 miles of frontier crossed by twenty-six lines of railroad. The immigrants land at British and Mexican ports and steal across the border. According to statements made in the House during the discussion, the Chinese population of the United States, in spite of the blockading of the coast, is increasing as rapidly now as it was five years ago.

As indicating the depravity of the celestial heart, Hon. Mr. Clunie cites the case of a would-be client of his. A Chinaman called upon him one day to ask his fee for defending a man accused of murder, and learned that it was one thousand dollars. After several days the Chinaman returned with a sack of silver. Said he: "I killee my man; here your money." The lawyer was shocked. "You killed him? Then you should hang!" John coolly replied: "I kill him. How many men you like me get to say I no killee him?" Perhaps, after all, the most "shocking" thing was the Chinaman's frankness, and his evident acquaintance with the methods of American courts.

Reformers and philanthropists coming in contact with all classes and nationalities of foreigners, say they do not find the Chinese more degraded or degrading than the lowest class of Europeans. Were the latter deprived of naturalization privileges, and so of the protection of office and office seekers dependent upon their suffrages, for place and power, they would be equally intolerable. Representatives of the foreign mission interest of the Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist and Methodist Episcopal Churches, and of the American Bible Society, the Evangelical Alliance, and the Society of Friends met last week in New York to consider the probable effect upon mission work and property, should the bill become a law. The consensus of the meeting was against it, believing it would obstruct the work, and hazard the lives of the missionaries.

A meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, also in New York, passed resolutions denouncing it in the strongest terms, as dangerous to the peace and prosperity of the United States: "The lesson that it teaches—that the sacred obligations of treaties may be violated at the will of the Legislature, without notice, and with no effort to secure a modification of the treaties by friendly negotiation—may some time easily be applied to other treaties and by other nations to our disadvantage. The day may not be far distant when an empire of more than 300,000,000 people, apt and adroit in all the fields of science and art, brave in war and persistent beyond all other races of men, now rapidly advancing in the mastery of all the modern resources of national greatness, will summon this nation to account. In the words of one of her strongest men, 'The world is not so near its end that China need hurry, nor the cycles of the sun so nearly done that she will not have time to play the role assigned her in the work of nations.'"

This may not be so apparent in San Francisco as in New York. In our opinion the time has come to set up defences, both on the east coast and on the west, against the foreign invasion, which threatens the overthrow of all rights and institutions distinctively American, while we would more and more gladly welcome to our shores all nations that come desiring to aid in the upbuilding of this truly great and noble Republic.

MISS WILLARD'S suggestion in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 6, that a new Crusade should be inaugurated, is worth more than passing attention. Read again what she said:

"I urge that each town and village be districted, and a house-to-house visitation for members made. If we do nothing else in 1890 but carry out this single plan, we shall double our numbers and carry our literature into the homes of the people who love and believe in the W. C. T. U. just in the proportion that they know its real spirit and work as set forth in our 'Timely Talks' and leaflets. Beloved sisters, let us out and away to the homes of the people, scattering light in minds mystified by the misstatements of bad men, and the misunderstandings of the good. Our Heavenly Father will bless such work as this, for Christ's heart beats in the gospel temperance movement of to-day."

Mrs. Forrest writes us from Pennsylvania: "You will sell five times as much literature in this state as in any year previous," and why? Because the workers are all alive and eager to scatter abroad the truth as they see it. Is the W. C. T U. losing ground anywhere? Nowhere except where there is apathy. We do not know of any such places, but if there are it is because there has not been a membership crusade. Why could not the crusade be started by the house-to-house visitation urged by Miss Willard, coupled with the offer to admit to a year's membership to the W. C. T. U. and six months' subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL for one dollar? Then the new members would become intelligent co-workers at once. As it is, many join and know nothing of the broad, world-wide view that our paper gives from week to week of the objects, aims and works of the W. C. T. U. The above suggestion that each new member pay one dollar, which is to include a six months' subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL is based on the supposition that the membership fee is fifty cents. If it is more merely add fifty cents for the six months' trial of the paper. Note carefully what Miss Willard has to say in the Publisher's Notes about "wide awakes and fast asleeps" and the cause why. Shall this suggestion go floating off like thistle down and land nowhere in particular? Or will there be on all sides those who will say, "It is a capital, timely and feasible plan—it shall be done!"

ARE the faithful women of our volunteer corps neglecting somewhat the golden opportunity of impressing the traveling public with the beauties of total abstinence and the dangers of the licensed dram-shop? The following excerpt from a business man's letter shows a tendency in that direction. He writes: "Being 'on the road' much of my time, I find hung up in the depots almost everywhere, those wall-pockets for temperance literature, bearing the letters, 'W. C. T. U.' But, alas, in nine cases out of ten they are empty. Indeed, in a month's travel in Nebraska (which will soon be the very center of the mighty conflict), I did not see one of them nicely filled. People often sit in depots for hours, waiting for a belated train, and are glad to read anything to while away the time. I believe it would be safe to say that if these depositories of temperance literature were kept well filled all over the country there would be ten thousand readers every day. And this means three hundred thousand a month, three and a half millions a year. May I also suggest that under the letters 'W. C. T. U.' there be placed 'Please Read and Return.' Many people who travel, especially foreigners, would need this invitation. If possible, it should also contain some German temperance tracts and papers, and if the invitation to read was printed also in German it would add much to its influence. May I also suggest that every W. C. T. U. appoint some one specially adapted for such work, as a committee of one, to make of this thing a great blessing." Such reminders are not infrequent in our office, and we earnestly urge the unions to revive their interest in this wonderful opportunity for spreading temperance truths.

THE new free South is moving forward to that place in the manufacturing and commercial world to which she is entitled by her rich natural resources. Slave labor must always be unskilled labor, as ignorance is the strongest of fetters. Moreover, sin is a curse to any people, and the incoming reign of thrift in the old slave states is only a hint of the general prosperity awaiting our entire country when it shall have cast off the unrighteous rule of the rum barons. Capital flows into the South now as easily as into the West. The Manufacturers' Record in one issue tells of a new carpet mill going up in Florence, Ala., with a capital of half a million; of the organization of a company representing $900,000 for gold mining operations in Georgia; of a $1,000,000 coal mining company just organized in Birmingham, Ala.; a company to operate a smelting furnace in Centre, and a cotton mill in Dadeville, of the same state. In Louisiana a sulphur mining property has been sold for $200,000. Laredo, Texas, has secured a $50,000 machine shop and foundry. Some half dozen companies with good capital have lately organized in Virginia at different points for the purpose of developing the lumber and iron resources of the state; 300,000 acres of land in East Tennessee have been purchased at a cost of $3,000,000 by wealthy Prohibitionists. For what end is not yet made public, but it is safe to say not for the erection of a distillery. We rejoice to see the march of free empire turning southward to reclaim that beautiful war-wasted territory, where all nature — not excepting human nature—is rich and luxuriant.

READERS of THE UNION SIGNAL must have been impressed with the many-sidedness of the publications sent out by the W. T. P. A.—White Cross, Juvenile, Mothers' Meetings, Social Reform, and many other lines of work are urged. Not long since we issued a series of "Agitation Leaflets," the demand for which has been remarkable. They are exactly in line with another series now ready, entitled "Home Protection Posters," large posters with short, terse, and eloquent sentences aimed at the iniquities of the liquor traffic. The purpose is to furnish these posters for use on bulletin boards in front of W. C. T. U. rooms and for posting on fence corners, or wherever the eye of man may likely fall. See the Publisher's Notes for further particulars as to the material used, prices, etc Much, if not all this kind of work seems to fall on the white-ribboners. The men see the need but fail to come up to it. The women of Missouri are teaching a lesson of undaunted courage quite equal to any in the annals of history The fight is on; faltering and fear belong only to indecision. "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them."

AS INDICATIVE of the alertness of our leader as well as the wide-reaching influence of our Union, the following letter written by Miss Willard to the King of Samoa will be of special interest to our readers:

As President of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union I desire to offer you sincere thanks for your recent proclamation in which the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is forbidden to your subjects. You have set a key-note worthy of the greatest monarch in Christendom. You are in advance of the age, and at the level of the New Testament so far as the temperance reform is concerned. Two hundred thousand women in America, wearers of the white ribbon, bless God for your faithful admonition, not only to your own people, but to the Christian church in every land. We only regret that our countrymen, and all foreigners in your dominion, can still go on cursing themselves and others by the use of the crazy drinks, and selling them through their greed of gain. We earnestly wish that your law might extend to them, so that the brain poisons forbidden to your own subjects might be equally forbidden to all who land upon your happy island. Is not this enlargement of your proclamation possible?

THERE has been a slöjd training school in Bostor nearly two years under the generous patronage of Mrs. Quincy Shaw, the gifted daughter of Agassiz. In THE UNION SIGNAL of March 20, Dr. Alice B. Stockham said she believed Col. F. W. Parker had established the first school for slöjd training in the Cook county Normal. She should have said Col. Parker has the first in the West. Dr. Stockham is pleased to make this correction as she is very enthusiastic in her praise of all Mrs. Shaw's generous efforts in behalf of the introduction of this handcraft in schools. Mrs. Shaw has for many years supported from her private income many kindergartens in Boston, and has been the means of having them made a part of the public school system. She has become greatly interested in slöjd as an educational handcraft.

Mrs. A. T. Newman, lecturer on Mormonism, has been disabled for two months by a sprained ankle. She was en route to Utah when the accident occurred. Mrs. Newman will have the sympathy of all white-ribboners in this trial of faith and force.

The interest shown by royal ladies in reforms is a pleasant thing, and a promise of good. The Empress of Germany is now forming a "League for the preservation of good habits" among the leading ladies of her realm. Its members bind themselves to wear fewer and more simple dresses, to practice economy in their households, and to discourage luxury in every form both for themselves and for their friends. In this instance "aping royalty" might be a good thing for Americans.

Longmont, Col., is a beautiful little valley town, east of Long's peak, from which it takes its name. It is situated in a rich agricultural district and has one of the finest mountain views in that state of unmatchable views. The one blot has been its three one thousand dollar licensed saloons, and it has been under liquor control for twelve years The early settlers intended it should be a temperance town, and that has been the issue every election. April 1st proved to be a genuine April-Fool's day to the friends of King Gambrinus, for the entire anti-license ticket was elected, giving the temperance people the mayor and three trustees. It is hoped that this temporary victory is a herald of better days, when prohibition shall come to stay.

At this time of the year a vacation trip to Europe is in the minds of many a traveler, and ofttimes the important question is, "With whom shall I go?" There are "parties" without number, some of which can be recommended, and some of which cannot. One of the former kind has recently been organized by Mrs. Mary B. Willard, so well known and beloved by all white-ribboners, principal of the American Home School in Berlin, Germany, and there are yet a few vacancies to be filled. The party will leave New York by the steamer Ems, North German Lloyd line, June 21, and returning will leave Southampton, September 4, by the same line. The company will be under the personal care of Miss Sarah E. Morgan, one of the teachers in Mrs. Willard's school. There will be nearly three months of travel through Germany, Austria, Italy, Switzerland, France, Belgium, and Great Britain, the entire cost of which will be $650. For further information address Miss Ruby I. Gilbert, 161 La Salle street, Chicago.

One of my correspondents writes as follows: "I am praying that it may be borne in upon you so that you cannot hold your peace to speak some word that shall set our women thinking about and praying over the great subject of capital punishment. In the light of Christ's gospel, can it be right? Is it up to the level of a Christian civilization? To me it seems germane to our department of prison and jail work, also to the evangelistic department, and involved with all our distinctively temperance work. Let us pray that the light as it is in Christ Jesus may shine in on the human hearts of the white-ribboners."

In this age of developing womanhood, it is interesting to note how the desire for tracing family genealogy is increasing. Recently "On Duty" has caught the information that one of California's brave W. C. T. U. women, Mrs. Mary Tracy Mott, of Brentwood, is a direct descendant of Sir Thomas Tracy who came to America in 1635. Mrs. Mott has in her possession a book containing the family history as far back as Edward the Confessor, who lived in the eleventh century. As a rule, Americans think too lightly of the blood which courses in their veins, so this bit of personal mention is especially gratifying.

The order of the King's Daughters has had a secession —half of its central council having left on account of a theological difference. Apropos of this the Christian Union says in an editorial of April 3:

We need hardly say to our readers that our sympathies are wholly with the original order. We trust, in the interest of Christian work and Christian feeling, that those who have withdrawn will not attempt to organize a new body with the title of "Evangelical Order of King's Daughters," which is threatened. It is, indeed, very doubtful whether if an appeal were taken to the courts, they would be allowed so to do. The title of "King's Daughters" belongs to the original society, and it would be doubtful morality for a seceding body to assume it, and more than doubtful for it, in so doing, to add to its own title an epithet which would imply that the original order was unevangelical. If the seceders...wish to form a new organization...they should give to the new order a new name and endeavor to win for it by their works as honorable a fame as that which three years of Christian history have given to the order which they have left.

MARYLAND.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Through the visits of Dr. Anna Shaw, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, Col. Bain, and Mrs. Bottome, and Mrs. Davis of The King's Daughters, Baltimore women are aglow with the desire to help on with the world's good work. The state has been deeply stirred in other portions with the eloquence of Miss Shaw, who has spoken since my last letter, in Cecil, Harford, Baltimore and Washington counties, in Friends' meeting-house, and Grace M. E. church, Baltimore, and most tellingly at a large mass-meeting in the State House, Annapolis.

Mrs. Chant's visit was an event of remarkable significance and interest in the history of Baltimore. Through the efforts, principally, of Mrs. E. A. Robinson, superintendent of Y work, and of Mrs. Summerfield Baldwin, state president, a number of the finest and most conservative churches in the city were opened for Mrs. Chant's meetings; four Protestant Episcopal and two Presbyterian churches were of this number. The crowds in attendance at some of these meetings were simply amazing to one familiar with the character of the people and the previous position of the churches, and the conclusion is inevitable that we are far more ready for woman's voice and woman's work than has been supposed. Two delightful afternoon teas, or parlor meetings, led the way for some of the work that followed. It is worthy of note by workers in other cities, that the fact of Mrs. Chant having spoken from the chancel of an influential and conservative Protestant Episcopal church on her visit to a neighboring city two years ago was probably part of the open sesame here.

Colonel Bain's address in Immanuel Baptist Tabernacle was, as usual, a brilliant success in every particular.

Mrs. Bottome and Mrs. Davis delighted the members of the various circles gathered to meet them, and also the large audience assembled in Mt. Vernon M. E. church—Dr. Tuttle's—for the evening meeting. Mrs. Frank Watkins, one of our W. C. T. U. veterans, and Mary Snowden Thomas, president of the Baltimore City W. C. T. U., took active part in the latter meeting.

While the women of Baltimore have been thus engaged and aroused as never before to a desire to help humanity to better things, many of the business men have spent more time and effort than ever before in an entirely opposite direction. The new mayor of the city distinguished the beginning of his administration by sending letters to the various business associations of the city, urging them to send delegations to the Legislature in the interests of the high license bill. One by one they wheeled into line, the Board of Trade, Corn and Flour Exchange, Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, and so on, and "all we like sheep," sang itself again and again to some readers, as item after item in the daily press recorded these facts. The latest phase is a 'High License Crusade"—alas, for the noble word! and numbers of our prominent and influential men have visited Annapolis in its behalf.

Two refreshing exceptions to the monotonous votes in the various associations in favor of high license, are Messrs. Eugene Levering and Wm. Henry Baldwin, both of whom voted "no" on the Board of Trade report favoring the bill. Mr. Levering accompanied his vote with a forcible protest against the measure, and with statements as to its failure in other cities. Mr. Levering, by the way, is the donor of the handsome $20,000 building recently presented formally to the Johns Hopkins University, to be used by the Young Men's Christian Association of that institution.

"License for Revenue" is the cry of the hour, and many and ingenious are the changes rung upon it. "Never in the history of Baltimore was such revenue so sorely needed as can be obtained through liquor license," says one daily, and begins the close of an elaborate editorial on the subject thus: "To subordinate moral to fiscal results is an unpleasant duty, but legislators must remember that they are there to act as statesmen and not as missionaries." Judging from press comments and current report of the present Legislature, there is grave fear of the latter catastrophe!

Suggestive facts in this connection are the recent appropriation of $250,000 to enlarge the penitentiary, and the favorable report of the Baltimore city council on a resolution appropriating $35,000 for the erection of an addition to the pauper insane asylum. "Peter must be robbed that Paul may be honestly paid."

The Maryland Prohibition party, the State Temperance Alliance, and the W. C. T. U. have also been before the Legislature, as already reported in THE UNION SIGNAL.

A large convention was called by Rev. R. W. Todd, of Chestertown, Kent county, in February, representing nearly three thousand persons to protest against the bill, and a committee was appointed to lay the protest before the Legislature, which was duly accomplished.

Reports of work throughout the state are of much interest. Kent county held its first Demorest contest recently at Fairlee, before a large audience, which it would have been impossible to gather for an ordinary temperance meeting. Good music was interspersed throughout the entire program.

Towson, Baltimore county, and the county seat, notes "temperance sentiment growing steadily," also weekly meetings, Bible readings, and prayer meetings, growth of the Loyal Temperance Legion in interest and numbers, and a prospective temperance hall. Arlington W. C. T. U., the same county, recently opened a free reading room to the public. Glyndon, also in this county, reports itself as actively at work.

Washington county reports a most interesting entertainment by the newly organized Loyal Temperance Legion of Hagerstown.

Carroll reports meetings of unusual interest.

The Woodbridge Y's of Baltimore spent a delightful evening portraying "A Dream of Poets," at the rooms of the Young Women's Christian Association.

Baltimore City Union held its last quarterly meeting in the beautiful chapel of Grace M. E. church. About two hundred ladies were in attendance. Fifteen local presidents were present, and reports from seventeen unions were heard.

The "latest news from the seat of war," comes as I close. A large delegation of wholesale liquor dealers was before a committee of the Legislature March 25, in opposition to the high license bill. The members contended that the trade could not stand over a two hundred dollar license, and that they were opposed to all the restrictive features of the bill, and in favor of an amendment allowing bar rooms to be kept open until 5 o'clock in the morning. The last proviso is difficult to believe, but so saith The News.

NEW JERSEY.

UNION COUNTY CONVENTION.

This met in the St. James M. E. Church at Elizabeth, Wednesday, March 12, at ten a. m. The devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. J. Burhaus, of Westfield.

Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, county president, gave a report of her visit to the National Convention as delegate. Her address was full of interest to the county. "What is the Vital Need of the W. C. T. U. at the Present Time?" was brought before the convention by Miss Forbes, of Elizabeth; the greatest need she could think of was earnest prayer. There were a number of responses. First, the great need of reaching out our hands to the boys; second, men and women consecrated to the work; third, sympathy of Christians and help of the churches; fourth, common sense and tact to win those who are opposed—filled with the love of the Holy Spirit; fifth, firm hold upon the children; sixth, self-consecration: each one responsible for those around her; seventh, revival of temperance in churches, and Christian men and women aroused to active effort.

Mrs. M. Batchelder, state superintendent of prison and almshouse work, earnestly advocated the appointment of matrons for all police stations and prisons. Mrs. J. K. Barney, National superintendent of prison work, followed with a talk upon prison reform.

In the afternoon a Bible reading was given by Mrs. Nettleship. A committee of ten, including Mrs. Barney and Mrs. Batchelder, by appointment visited the county jail, and conducted religious services. Mrs. Barney, speaking of her visit, said that it was seldom she found a prison better arranged in regard to ventilation, cleanliness, and general good management.

Mrs. Bodine, of Dunellen, gave a practical talk on narcotics. She strongly urged the education of boys as to the evil of smoking and use of tobacco in all forms. Mrs. S. J. C. Downs said woman needed but to look upon the shriveled boyhood of the times to realize the necessity of an effort to abolish the cigarette.

The clergy of the city were represented by the Rev. Dr. Dunn, Rev. E. W. Burr, Rev. W. H. Sherman, Rev. Mr. Tomlinson, Rev. Mr. Nourse. Mr. Joseph Batten spoke of the great responsibility and the influence of good mothers.

A paper on "Temperance in the Sunday-school" was then given by Miss L. Ely, of Cranford. The question box, by Mrs. Downs and Mrs. Ellis, proved an interesting and helpful exercise.

Rev. E. W. Burr, pastor of the St. James Church, conducted the devotional services in the evening. A quartette rendered some very delightful music. Mrs. J. K. Barney then addressed the meeting; subject, "Jerusalem to Jericho." She is a very pleasant speaker, and won the attention and sympathy of her audience, holding it throughout the evening.

WORK IN SYRACUSE.

Some overtures having been made by the managers of the Liberal Woman's Convention, previous to its meeting in Washington, February 24 and 25, to the W. C. T. U. of Syracuse, our union, No. 2, made it the topic of their discussion at our parlor meeting February 20.

The question, as proposed by our superintendent of franchise, Mrs. S. G. Hammond, was, "Ought all friends of woman suffrage to work together for its promotion?" She introduced the subject thus: The direct answer must be in the affirmative, for in union is strength, while the direct tendency of division is to weaken. The question was suggested by the introduction of a new periodical among us entitled The Liberal Thinker, which claimed to represent the woman suffrage movement and denounces the W. C. T. U. as injurious to the cause on account of the position taken by the National W. C. T. U. with regard to religious doctrines in the constitution of our government. The paper is edited by Mrs. Matilda Joslyn Gage, of our city, with a view to the organization of an association for opposing the efforts of the National W. C. T. U. and the National Reform Association on these points; these organizations and all who sympathize with them in their desire to have the Word of God in our National constitution and who also support Senator Blair's Sunday Rest Bill are styled the "Christian Party in Politics."

Mrs. Esmond, our beloved and veteran white-ribboner (well known as superintendent of the department of unfermented wine), said she had no hope that help or light in the smallest degree would come if we cut this cause loose from its moorings to Christianity. "Can I unite," said she, "with a woman who says, 'There is a word sweeter to me than mother, home or heaven—and that word is liberty?' Such liberty is license; I want none of it." Extracts were also read from the Liberal Thinker, saying that "Miss Willard was the most dangerous woman in the United States;" calling her "Pope Willard," saying that "she was using the W. C. T. U. for the union of church and state," that "we had gone far enough in the way Miss Willard and Senator Blair would lead us." Another extract said, "I look forward to the day when there will be no churches or priests." Another statement was made that a Methodist bishop in one of our territories put down all the names of his members living and dead as petitioners to the Blair Bill; other extracts in the same vein were given. Mrs. Esmond also spoke of Kalamazoo with its woman mayor and aldermen and gave extracts from papers highly commending them in regard to Boston women voting last year.

Another member gave an account of the election of Miss Ida Griffin, an Oswego Normal School graduate and a W. C. T. U. member, who nearly three years ago was elected school commissioner of the second district of Oswego county, and of her successful and satisfactory performance of its duties. Another sister spoke of the withdrawal of the Indian Association of this city from the Woman's Council at Washington on account of the plea for equal suffrage, and soon after the disbanding of the association. Others spoke in favor of suffrage for women especially on the school and temperance questions. Two gentlemen, honorary members, were present, and encouraged us by declaring their sympathy with the cause. Mrs. Esmond offered the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the W. C. T. U., No. 2, of Syracuse, most heartily condemn the course taken by the editor of the Liberal Thinker and her coadjutors, who as woman suffragists promulgate such sentiments as were expressed in the January number of said paper: that we disclaim all sympathy and approval for such utterances, believing them to be most pernicious in their tendency and inimical to the best interests of the home, of society and the world. M. J. I. VILAS, Sup. of Press, No. 2.

WORK IN THE HADDINGTON UNION.

In our locality, a suburb of the city, we have the Haddington W. C. T. U., with a membership of about forty, that has worked hard for three or four years under adverse circumstances until the members grew almost discouraged, but thanks to the tireless energy of the president, Mrs. Martha Lemon, and a few earnest members, the union starts on another year's work poor in pocket, but rich in faith and determination. The neighborhood is sparsely settled and spread over a large extent, which makes the work harder, but a pleasant reading room has been opened for young men and boys where they can spend their evenings in reading or with games, and the attendance proves the attractiveness of the place. We do not have enough subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL, but will endeavor to increase the list in the future. It ought to be in the hands of every member, and there should be an effort made by each union to increase the list of subscribers. It would wonderfully improve the efficiency of each local organization.

Our state and Philadelphia county organizations are blessed with two splendid workers in Mrs. Mary H. Jones, president of the former, and Dr. French, president of the latter.

KANSAS.

HAPPENINGS.

The broad prairies of Kansas have already commenced putting on their spring garb of green, and the voice of the politician is heard in the land, for the spring election is drawing nigh. Our white-ribbon fraternity is earnestly entreated to let nothing hinder them from rallying in full force on election day and casting their ballots for the home vs. the saloon, which is in reality the true status of the case, as is evidenced by the following appeal issued by Attorney-General Kellogg:

To the People:—

The more I become conversant with the working of the Prohibitory Law, the more I am impressed with the necessity of the wholesome public sentiment in its favor in each community. In all those portions of the state where the public sentiment is favorable, the officers have no difficulty in securing a strict enforcement of the law. A favorable public sentiment, active, courageous, and aggressive, is needed in every city, town, village and country neighborhood. The people must not relax their efforts. Law and order leagues, W. C. T. Unions and other temperance organizations, public meetings, and individual efforts are all necessary in upholding and enforcing the law. With the approach of the time for municipal elections, a special duty is devolved upon the loyal citizens of the state. The Constitution must be upheld, and the laws enforced. The saloon influence should not be permitted to dictate nominations, nor to elect officers.

Inasmuch as the W. C. T. U. is a recognized factor in the enforcement of law and order, by our state officials, as "citizens" we should feel the responsibility resting upon us and remember to do our full duty faithfully and well.

The Leavenworth W. C. T. U. recently gave a reception to the public school teachers of the city. The state executive committee met in Topeka, February 26 and 27. The corresponding secretary, at the command of her physician, sent in her resignation, which was regretfully accepted. The following card from Our Messenger shows that her heart is still in the work:

DEAR SISTERS:—It is with sincere regret that I am compelled to give up active W. C. T. U. work for a time, not only in state but in local work. However, if I cannot be actively engaged, I am glad that I can still be counted as one of you, and as loyal as ever to our state and National unions. I most earnestly hope that not one union in Kansas—not one white-ribboner belonging to one of them—will cease to be one of us, or will allow any outside influence to turn her away from the clean-cut path of the Kansas W. C. T. U. I thank you all for your constant patience and kindness during the time in which I have at least tried to faithfully serve you.

KATE H. BIGGERS.

May she soon be enabled to take up the work unwillingly laid down! Mrs. S. A. Thurston, of Topeka, resigned as treasurer, and was elected corresponding secretary. Mrs. M. L. Berry, of Cawker, was elected treasurer. The next annual convention will be held at Sabetha, in the extreme northeastern part of the state. In this country of magnificent distances many will, no doubt, be unable to attend.

Rev. Mr. Gault is having a successful march through Kansas in the interests of our cause. The president of Clay county writes me of the good work done for them in their county convention, and speaks of his lectures in glowing terms. She says: "The unions in our county, although small in numbers, are strong in faith and hope, and willing hearts and hands keep pace with larger forces." They are doing a good work in several departments, notably flower missions. One union sent a hundred bouquets to the Ft. Leavenworth military prison on Thanksgiving day, which were, no doubt, appreciated there. They believe in mass-meetings as the best means of educating the public generally. They also recently held a Sabbath rest convention, with very favorable results.

Our state president, Mrs. Rastall, is working for the erection of a Temperance Temple on the grounds of the Chautauqua Assembly at Ottawa. With her undaunted energy she will surely succeed. She recently spent a few days in Coffey county encouraging weak unions, and organizing one at Waverly with a membership of thirty-four, and seventeen honoraries. W. C. T. U.

KENTUCKY.

FAYETTE COUNTY CONVENTION.

This was held March 2, at Lexington, in the Main street Christian church. The organization of the county is recent, having been started during the past winter. Five unions have been formed, and it was largely for the purpose of strengthening and establishing these that the convention was held.

Fayette has been especially fortunate in her officers thus far. The president, Mrs. Beauchamp, is one of the ablest and most earnest temperance workers in the state. The secretary, Mrs. S. Clay, is the esteemed and efficient president of the Lexington W. C. T. U. The sessions of the convention were well attended by the leading people of the town.

The president's annual address was full of wise plans and helpful suggestions for the coming year, and was pervaded by an uplifting spirit of devotion to the work that appealed strongly to all present. The Kentucky W. C. T. U. women prize Mrs. Beauchamp, and value her rare executive ability. She has been one of our foremost leaders in the past and we feel that a still broader work is before her.

The subject "Health" was opened by Miss Laura Clay in an able, characteristic paper, and was earnestly discussed by the convention.

As an effort is being made in our state to have a scientific temperance instruction law passed this spring, the subject naturally claimed considerable attention. Mrs. Cramer, the earnest superintendent of the department, read the opening paper. Since the temperance law, if passed, could be violated unless the district school trustees were in sympathy with it, the necessity of having temperance trustees was apparent. So interested were the women on this question that Miss Clay was called on to give briefly the Kentucky law relating to school trustees. She showed that as women are eligible to this office in Kentucky, and as widows with children of school age can vote for trustees, we can do a good work by taking full advantage of this law, and by working for the election of women as school trustees. Since responsibility is commensurate with opportunity, this open door for Christian work, measureless in its possibilities, far-reaching in its results, should not be neglected.

The noon-time prayer was observed. A dainty, inexpensive lunch was served and a pleasant social hour enjoyed by all. The Y's assisted throughout.

Nothing could have been more helpful than the devotional exercises conducted by Miss Sue Scott. Instead of occupying all the time herself, as so many leaders do, she read a verse from the Bible, bringing out some special lesson, gave a few appropriate comments, and called for two prayers of only a sentence each, asking for the thing mentioned in the text; then one stanza of a hymn, then another text, comments and other prayers; thus was the half hour made most uplifting.

Mrs. Clay read an admirable paper on "Social Purity." She was especially happy in the expression of her thoughts on this vital question. The papers that called forth the best discussion were on "Purity in Literature and Art," and "Bible Wines." The former subject was opened by Mrs. Nannie D. Scovell, a woman of exceptional culture and extensive reading. "Bible Wines" was most ably presented by Miss Emma Shaw, who made a strong plea for the use of unfermented wine at the communion table. The most pleasing feature of the convention was the free and hearty discussion that followed each paper. The last exercise was a parliamentary drill conducted by Mrs. Mary C. Roark. This was made very lively and profitable by the hearty participation of a large number present. Mrs. Clara Hoffman's presence during the afternoon, and her assistance in the discussions, were of great value. Of the state officers, we were favored with the presence of Mrs. Bryant, treasurer, and Mrs. Givens, corresponding secretary.

The lecture at night by Mrs. Hoffman was eloquent and forceful, showing the complicity of the government with the saloon power, and that the entire responsibility rested on the Christian voters. Mrs. Hoffman's mere presence is an intellectual tonic. She impresses one as having had for her mind diet, not skimmed milk, but pure, rich cream, and as always having a reserve force for any emergency.

MICHIGAN.

WORK OF WILLARD UNION, DETROIT.

We have been doing some evangelistic work the past year, some of our members giving more time than usual to visiting the sick, helping the fallen among women, as well as doing their best to get employment for reformed men. The jail and asylums have not failed to respond in grateful acknowledgment for such careful, prayerful visitations, and after over one thousand calls made and hundreds of appeals to a loving Father for help, we are assured of greater faith and strength of soul for ourselves and we do not know where the good done to others will end—not here, we trust! We had a bountiful supper given in the basement of the Central M. E. church; six tables, seating ten and twelve persons, were filled many times; after the supper, our president's address and some fine singing, we found our fund increased to one hundred and fifteen dollars, which after the little expenses were taken out, left us ninety-six dollars and sixty-seven cents.

Our membership numbers nearly three hundred paying members with thirty-five honoraries; our dues only fifty cents yearly, honorary one dollar. Some pay five dollars annually. We have a penny collection every week and a monthly social which keep adding a little constantly to our treasury. More good is done by our women in house to house work and praying with the unsettled and dissatisfied than in any other way. All the sick are nursed and treated like sisters, and our Father alone sees how many are brought to trust and abiding rest by the faithful few who are earnest in soul saving.

Mrs. H. A. P. Blodgett is president; Mrs. J. H. Powell, recording secretary; Mrs. J. Andruos, treasurer; Mrs. Jno. Crebbin, first vice president; Mrs. J. Grimshaw, second vice president. MRS. W. H. KELLY, Cor. Sec.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS HOOD sends the following: "Mrs. Hattie L. Clarke, formerly of Macomb, who is now a resident of Chicago, has been made president of the third district of Illinois. Mrs. Clarke brings to the work a practical knowledge of our W. C. T. U. methods, and is a most valuable worker."

A DEMOREST silver medal contest was held at the First Congregational church of Marietta, Ohio, in January. Recitations by six young girls, interspersed with fine vocal music by Miss Muriel Palmer, who sang "Home, Sweet Home," and the college quartette; Rev. Addy of the Presbyterian church presiding. The medal was awarded to Miss Stella McKinney, by Professor Chamberlain, of Marietta College. The large audience was well pleased with the recitations of the girls, as well as one by Mrs. Cole, of Parkersburg, an elocutionist who trained the contestants, and Miss Lida Moore of the same place. Since that the Congregational minister devoted one Sabbath evening to temperance, when two of the young ladies, Miss McKinney and Miss Bohl, read temperance selections with very pleasing effect.

A GOOD word from New Jersey: "God has been with the Willard W. C. T. U. of Westfield during the week ending March 23, and we want our sisters to join in our alleluias. Mrs. J. T. Ellis, our state secretary, has been holding evangelistic meetings in our midst, and she has been richly rewarded by a baptism of the Holy Spirit upon many of her hearers. Thirty-two of the young men and boys who were converted and reconsecrated under her teaching, have formed themselves into a circle, called 'The Ellis Circle,' and have resolved that united they will stand for the Lord and win others into the kingdom."

PLEASANT words come regarding the work of Mrs. S. M. Perkins in Van Wert county, Ohio, her public addresses being highly appreciated. At the county convention, March 19, she added greatly to the interest of the day. Fourteen delegates were present, and many earnest workers. Reports from the unions were very encouraging.

THE W. C. T. U. at Jerseyville, Ill., held the first of a series of medal contests March 13. A full house was present and much interest was manifested. Miss Hattie Randolph, a member of the Loyal Temperance Legion, won the medal, the decision of the judges giving general satisfaction. The neat programs used were the work of a young Republican editor, to whom the union is indebted for kindly courtesies. Two more classes are in preparation, and arrangements are now being made for a flag festival, at which the public school will receive a large flag, the gift of the union.

HURON county, Ohio, W. C. T. U held a convention at Collins, March 19. Good reports were brought from six unions by delegates. Some of the subjects considered were, "Scientific Temperance Instruction," "Hygiene," "Healthful Dress," "Liquor as a Hindrance to Missionary Work in Africa," "For Our Encouragement," and "Mothers' Meetings." There was an interesting exercise given by the Loyal Temperance Legion, and in the evening a Demorest silver medal contest occurred. Master Perkins, the only boy who took a part, carried off the prize. Many say it was the best convention ever held in the county.

MRS. G. L. CLARK, the evangelistic superintendent of the District of Columbia, writes thus in regard to Miss Greenwood's series of services recently held in Washington, of which previous notice has been given: "The meetings have consisted of seven Bible expositions and two addresses given in Miss Greenwood's most clear and impressive manner, while they have attracted to them crowded houses and cultured and enthusiastic audiences. The last two were especially devoted to gospel temperance work. Miss Greenwood seemed almost inspired in some of her Scripture readings as she so beautifully and sweetly unfolded the deep spiritual meaning of the divine word. Her touching pathos frequently moved many in her audience to tears. At her last service her subject being 'The Home,' the large audience was deeply impressed, and we trust many were greatly benefited, as she so eloquently and pathetically described the homes as they are too often found, and the perfect Christian home as it might be under proper influences and surroundings. We trust these meetings may be the means of great and permanent good, and lead many to a better and higher Christian life. We shall hope to have Miss Greenwood with us again at no distant date."

A LARGE and appreciative audience crowded Association Hall, in Auburn, N. Y., recently, to enjoy a novel and unique temperance entertainment, entitled, "Ye Hatchet Partie," tendered as a testimonial by the W. C. T. U. to the Y. M. C. A., for the many courtesies extended them by that organization. The party was in every respect a success. The select program that had been arranged for the occasion was excellently rendered, all who took part acquitting themselves in a creditable manner. The "hatchet drill," by nearly thirty young ladies, all attired in the National colors and carrying hatchets, was the novel feature of the evening. Mrs. Jennie M. Pearson, who had charge of the entertainment, was attired in National colors with a pretty, white lace head-dress, representing Martha Washington. Through her efforts, assisted by Mrs. Emma Brinkerhoff, who did so handsomely with the musical part, the entertainment was one of the best that has ever been given by the W. C. T. U. The singing of Miss Otellia Rinze met with special favor, and she received a triple encore, and at the conclusion of the program, so pleased was the audience with her singing, that by special request she favored the assembly with another selection. The seminary quartette sang several fine selections and were given hearty encores. After the exercises, refreshments, consisting of coffee, cake and sandwiches, were served by a bevy of earnest temperance women, headed by Mrs. Dr. W. R. Laird and Mrs. William A. White, assisted by Mrs. H. B. Perry, Mrs. James Clary, Mrs. John S. Clary, Mrs. Dr. B. E. Osborn, Mrs. Dr. Hyatt, Mrs. Dr. Boyce, Mrs. Rathbun, Mrs. A. J. Sanders and several others. The proceeds of the entertainment will be presented to the Y. M. C. A.

THE PRESS.

To Press Superintendents:

The first step towards winning the world for temperance is to win the press. Let once the newspapers tell the truth about Gambrinus, and his doom is sealed. We, then, as press workers, have a serious mission—to enter the wedge, to pour in the "little leaven," to give the people, in homeopathic doses, it may be, but none the less surely and effectively, the important facts concerning this question. As many of you know, one of the agencies already set in motion to enter the wedge and to distribute the leaven is the National W. C. T. U. Bulletin. It is a small sheet, of short and varied temperance items, sent out weekly, and especially intended for the use of editors and press superintendents in preparing copy for temperance columns. It is already used by a large number of superintendents, but there are still a great many who have not yet availed themselves of its aid. These we would earnestly urge to subscribe for it. The cost is but twenty-five cents a year, a merely nominal sum in view of the time to be saved and the advantage to be gained.

If editors object to the reprint, the items can be localized, condensed or differently worded. It is important only that the truth should be made known everywhere, and country editors at least will seldom refuse space for the news of this movement if it is well written up and regularly supplied. Therefore we urge upon all local superintendents the supreme importance of being provided with every available help, and especially with the Press Bulletin.

To present subscribers I would say that if the Bulletin at any time fails to arrive promptly, you will confer a great favor upon the editor by informing her at once, also by entering complaint at your own post-office. The Bulletin is mailed regularly to each subscriber every Wednesday morning. MARY HENRY,
Nat'l Press Supt.

Publisher's Notes.

From Our Home Guards.

Songs of the Y. W. C. T. U. This is compiled by Anna Gordon, one of the sweetest and most musical souls in all the nation. As we turned over the leaves, we saw—not the songs—but a lithe figure coming at Miss Willard's call for a volunteer organist in a great meeting in Boston, and thought ran through the years, as we conned over the places she has filled, and the taste and nice fitness she has shown in all her work. She set the rhymes and notes for the Loyal Temperance Legion's Marching Songs, and now here is the completed book for the Y's. They ought to use it in all their meetings. Only 25c.

How to Do It.

After reading the letter recently received from you, I said I will try now; so the next afternoon I prepared to sally forth in quest of subscribers, when callers came, and I said to myself, "I will work at home now;" so secured one for a year's subscription and the other a "ten-center." And with so good a beginning I followed it up when evening came, going to the home of a well-to-do farmer, who indulges in a glass of beer when he wants it. I found him at home with his family all around him, including one grown up daughter. After a social chat on business and neighborhood affairs, I produced my UNION SIGNAL, told him it was a temperance paper and a good one, what it said, and asked him to look at it, which he did, then passed it to his wife and daughter, all the time putting in a word of encouragement as it seemed best, and before I left the house I had a willing subscriber; and although it was bedtime when I reached home, I said, I have done a good evening's work in getting THE UNION SIGNAL in that place. The next afternoon (as I have to work forenoons) I put on marching orders and walked a mile securing two one year subscribers, one a Catholic woman. After supper I visited another beer-drinking farmer with family and repeated the process of the evening before, with a similar result—a year's subscription. I must confess my faith was small when I started for his house; but I knew the cause was good, and that was my inspiration. I have made the canvass on the merits of the paper, as I can talk that better than anything else. Yesterday on my way to church I left a bundle of UNION SIGNALS in a high license family, strong ones they are; hardly hope to succeed with them.

Bible Temperance Lessons.

Give them a trial. Get the set of outline pictures, the manual, the charcoal; study up the instructions given and give these seed thoughts to others. Have some boys and girls ready to speak the recitations that are given in the manual. Take courage from this little *incident that is given, and do some seed-sowing yourself. If you don't may be no one else will, and a boy that might be saved will be lost instead, for the saloon-keepers are not afraid to speak out!

*"In 1694, a vessel from Madagascar which put into the port of Charleston, in distress, had on board a little sack of the rough rice. It was given to one Langrave Thomas Smith, who planted it first in a low place in his garden. It yielded admirably, and by him was disseminated as seed among the neighboring planters, and by them to others along the rivers farther in the interior, till it became, after a few years of careful culture, the staple commodity of the colony. From this it has extended through all the Southern and some of the Western states."—Ramsay's History of South Carolina.

Prices: Manuals alone, each 5 cents; per 100, $4. Large outline pictures with charcoal crayons, per set 50 cents.

Every person who read in last week's UNION SIGNAL the editorial upon "The Kindergarten," must have had her soul stirred with interest and enthusiasm. Thousands, no doubt, have asked the question, "How can I know more about this new gospel and how can I help spread it?" Every town and city needs a work done, similar to that done in San Francisco. The Kindergarten is a magazine published at 161 La Salle St., and is the only periodical in English devoted exclusively to this work. The April issue closes its second year, and its reception and success have been almost phenomenal. It is full of helps for teachers, Sunday-school workers and parents. The May number will contain a portrait and a sketch of the wonderful work of Sarah B. Cooper, besides an unusual amount of other interesting matter. You can get The Kindergarten three months on trial for 30 cts. But if you can possibly spare $2 you cannot make a wiser investment than to subscribe for it for the year. Or if you will become an agent for it, you can soon pay for your own copy, besides earning money to advance the good work in your vicinity. Address Alice B. Publisher's Dep't.

This time it is not the publisher for W. T. P. A., but for Sabbath observance literature. You all want this literature to circulate, especially in April. Here are specimens:

No. 3, "The Fourth Commandment," No. 10, "Bible Thoughts about the Sabbath" and No. 14, "Crown of the Week" are for Sabbath-school use in the opening exercises, using one each year. The schools will usually bear the expense, only 15 cents a hundred.

After the sermon you will have secured for April 6, give out at church doors—say No. 27, "The Sabbath," with subjects for prayer and readings for the week, and No. 24, the "Sabbath Observance Pledge," each 10 cents a hundred, or select larger leaflets at 15 cents a hundred. Nos. 1, 5, 7, 9, 16 and 19 have been very popular. Nos. 22, 23 and 25, the latter a reprint for Catholics, are newer. Others are more expensive.

Perhaps you want instruction for this work. If so, when ordering, ask for samples of 11 and 17.

Send order to Mrs. J. C. Bateham, Painesville, O., or send stamp for price list and any samples you want, and it will pay you to add another stamp for Annual Report and Marching Orders for 1890. She also furnishes Dr. Craft's "Sabbath for Man" for $1.00.

A VERY GREAT OFFER. For 20 cents we will send THE UNION SIGNAL five weeks and a copy of the Handy Manual, which is a 25-cent book packed so full of valuable information and tables that it is easily worth $1 to any one. Indeed, it's worth more than that to the man who wants instantly to know things he learned once but "has forgotten." Star offer workers can count each name thus sent, and agents can have the usual commission on each name. Push this offer if you want to get a lot of short-term names. Only 20 cents for the two!

If Only One Out of Four of each of our subscribers would send us the name of a new subscriber (with the $1 needed), we would at once be at the 100,000 Mark!

"If" and "only" are such unpleasant words! Stop a bit; look back just four years and a half. We had less than ten thousand subscribers then. In other words, we have gained an average of about fifteen thousand names each year. We must get twenty thousand new names this year. How can it be done? Simply enough. Show your neighbor there never was such a paper as THE UNION SIGNAL; prove it by telling what you find in it, and the work will be done even with the same ease whereby the Chicagoites were too vigorous for the New Yorkites in the late World's Fair tussle. What made Chicago successful? A large force of "get up and go"! How will we get the 100,000? By "a get up and go" force. The proverb that says, "All things come to him who waits" don't belong out here in Cook county! Here we say, "If a man wants anything, lo, he has to strive mightily, and he will get it!" Ditto in getting subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. Behold, now! If one of every four would thus strive mightily, and obtain that new name (we wouldn't limit you to sending in just one name!) and should ask us for a large photogravure picture of Miss Willard as a reward for their labor, the picture would be sent—a nearly life-size picture! If you'll be one of the four, send your name (with the subscriptions gained), and we will treasure it up, and when the 100,000 mark is reached the picture will be forthcoming. Two conditions:

Bombs!

It's all right to talk about bullets and bird shot, they have their place, but read now about some genuine bombs that we have—warranted to produce consternation in the camp of the enemy, i. e., the liquor traffic.

Bim—Bim—Bomb!

What? Read! Large posters, some in red ink and some in black, about 15x20 inches, having thereon such sentences as these, in bold, attractive type:

> The Wine and Spirit Gazette says: "The men who advocate High License as a Temperance measure are either hypocrites or fools."

> "We have less paupers and less tramps in this state in proportion to our population than ever before. Breweries have been converted into oatmeal mills and canning factories, and are operated as such."—Gov. Larrabee's Message, 1890.

> "What the voters of to-day need is BACKBONE The defeats of to-day are the victories of to-morrow."

> "Prohibition is better enforced in ninety counties in Iowa to-day than any license law ever made in Iowa, and even better than any High License Law is now enforced in any State in the Union."—Gov. Larrabee's Iowa Message, 1890.

These are samples of the first series of thirty. They controvert the favorite newspaper gabble, "Prohibition don't prohibit," which, being so wonderfully true (?) the brewers and distillers fight prohibition with daily newspapers, money, lies, bribery, corruption, deceit and desperation! Make men mad? Maybe—any way to get consciences aroused. Hurt the church member's feelings? Um—um—maybe they need hurting? Where use them? On bulletin boards, inverted V boards about 24 inches wide, three feet long, hinged at apex of V, or on fence corners—in church lecture rooms—Everywhere the eye of a voter can fall on them. Sold only in series of Thirty for 50 cents postpaid.

If one hundred or more of any one is wanted for a special purpose, we will have to print it to order. Prices will be given on application. It takes a lot of money to get these posters out, but if you will respond liberally and post your town with them one month, there will be a howl and a groan from the dailies that will at once show their darling saloons are not bomb proof!

Aggressive?

Well—Try Them Once!

Be lively about it—that Nebraska campaign is on now and there's no use talking—the whole country is getting ready to take sides for the saloon or Against the Saloon.

No man, no newspaper, no politician—not even a know-nothing-about-it-in-our-platform party can stop the fight.

Aim True!

From a Boston Critic.

My attention was drawn with a peculiar interest to Miss Willard's book. Miss Willard's name is a household word in our land, and that for a brave womanliness and a life of heroic Christian devotion, combined with some of the most brilliant gifts with which man or woman can be endowed. When my notice was called to these "Glimpses of Fifty Years"—never having known particularly of Miss Willard's life and work before—I recalled a remark I had recently heard made by some who were present at the temperance meetings over which she presided in New York: that as a public speaker Miss Willard had greater gifts of combination and organization than any other speaker, male or female they had ever heard. The same power shows itself in the "Glimpses of Fifty Years;" the motive of a pure and steadfast purpose concentrating and illuminating the whole. The importance, the intense and living interest of such a life and work cannot be overestimated. There is a rare, a genuine power, in these strong, heroic words from the true life of a true woman. Above the many false lights of the day, vain, irreligious, sacrilegious—we read here between the unconscious lines how the One Great Light of the world has still His true followers and workers, and find a still flame of unknown self-sacrifice and devoted gifts, a light truly of the Greatest, to succor, guide and save.

A Beautiful Thought

Lies imbedded in the little leaflet, "Being Reviled, We Bless." It was written by Hannah Whitall Smith, and copies were presented by her to all the delegates in the National Convention last November. The calls for it have been so constant that Mrs. Smith has kindly revised it and we now put it out as a regular publication. One of the many little things published by us which are little only in point of size. "You may silence evil by evil, but you can overcome it only by good," is the keynote of this pamphlet. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, $2.

Prohibition in Title Deeds.

Harriman, the newest City of the New South, was recently inaugurated with such remarkable success as to challenge public attention throughout this entire country.

In keeping with other conditions, there was a flood of cold water. With it came a flood of cold-water people and other people. Both kinds admired the location, and endorsed the idea of banning saloons forever by provision of title deeds.

Harriman's future was accepted as that of a second Birmingham—the great Iron and Coal town of Tennessee; a coming railway center, and the natural focus of at least one thousand square miles, rich in minerals, and abounding in agricultural promise.

Nearly 600 Lots were Sold for Nearly Six Hundred Thousand Dollars.

It was a wonderful tribute to the management and resources of an enterprise immense beyond realization, yet based upon the fundamental principles of wise production, and the prohibition of unwise waste. Nothing like it has ever before been known. It has made Harriman a marvel from the start.

THE EAST TENNESSEE LAND COMPANY did not set out to Boom Harriman, but to BUILD it. The Boom came—the BUILDING WILL FOLLOW—is now begun. All who wish to aid in creating a town of the best class, where legitimate industries may have entire sway, are invited to coöperate.

They can do this by location at Harriman, where the E. T. L. Co. has yet several thousand fine residence and business lots for sale at moderate prices, or by advising others to locate there, or by subscribing at once for some of the remaining and will follow the example given below?

At a meeting of the Illinois state W. C. T. U., held last week, its executive committee voted to draw upon its treasury for the full amount needed to scatter temperance literature broadcast, that the rank and file of its members might be helped to give reasons for "the faith that is in them." In carrying out the plan, the secretary is making a faithful effort to reach some one in every union who will make it her personal business to see that the leaflets are put where they will do the most good—as in the hands of ministers and other leaders of public sentiment, and, especially, that they are copied in newspapers, through the several press superintendents. Already the response to this effort shows an urgent demand for the information here given.

Through our W. T. P. A. representatives we reach many of the unions, but there are yet many which have no such connection with us, hence we ask your aid in bringing these statements before the people.

EVANSTON, ILL., March 7, 1890.

Your favor of booklets and leaflets at hand. I always like the droppings of W. T. P. A. Indorse them? Yes, indeed. Push them? With every pound I weigh. I only wish I could have them for more liberal circulation at my meetings. I get the women to send for them always, however. Yours truly,

S. M. I. HENRY.

The Work of a Worker.

"My first meeting in this campaign was in Fargo, N. D., January 15. By February 20 the 2,500 'Timely Talks' I have secured since I started, besides much other literature, will probably all be disposed of, making not less than 6,300 disposed of according to my five cents per package plan; besides some hundreds of pages of THE UNION SIGNAL and other papers and temperance literature I have given away. I have put into the hands of the people since the campaign began, about a month ago, a total of 6,700 pages of clear, strong and powerful temperance and religious reading, and it would amount up to nearly 80,000 pages for the whole year. I mean to keep on and do as much towards my 80,000 pages this year as I possibly can. I believe the good that most surely will be accomplished will justify all the hard work and effort required, so I will go on, faltering not." MISS I. C. DE VELLING.

Words Fitly Spoken.

"I had not seen a copy of The Young Crusader for some time, and while I have always thought it perfect this seemed the best number. God bless you and your work." MRS. S. H. BARNEY.

"The Bible Readings in THE UNION SIGNAL seem prepared to fit my case. I remember particularly the one on 'How to know the will of God.' It was a bit of practical experience that greatly helped me."

"I trust the little book, 'Helping,' may have a wide circulation. Many a gentle youth or maiden will find it the most 'helping help' that has ever stirred their hearts or minds. The demand for this sort of literature is much greater than the supply." MRS. A. S. BENJAMIN.

From a Massachusetts pastor:

"My wife and I were both fascinated with 'Glimpses of Fifty Years.' Our little girl two and half years old, has shared our pleasure in listening to the stories her mamma has told her from the life of Miss Willard. I regard it as one of the most helpful publications of our day, and shall do all I can to induce people to read it. I have had an item inserted in the local paper that the book is in our public library. As a rule I am not in favor of autobiographies, but here the story is told with great grace, wisdom and delicacy. I am a stranger to Miss Willard, but thought these words of appreciation would not be displeasing."

"No W. C. T. U. woman would ever sit with folded hands not knowing what to do or how to do it, if she would only make use of the literature provided by the W. T. P. A." OLIVE P. BRAY, Pub. Kan. W. C. T. U. Messenger.

FACTS FOR THE SICK.

What an Eminent Divine says for the benefit of SUFFERING WOMEN.

From a letter from Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga., in which he states he has been cured of a long standing case of Catarrh, and that his health is better than it has been in 30 years, caused by taking

DR. KING'S ROYAL GERMETUER

He adds. "The effects of this remedy upon my wife have been even more signal and wonderful. She has been almost a lifelong invalid from Nervous Headache, Neuralgia and Rheumatism. In a period of thirty years she has scarcely had a day's exemption from pain. She has been using Germetuer about two months. A more complete transformation I have never witnessed. Every symptom of disease has disappeared. She appears to be twenty years younger, and is as happy and playful as a healthy child. We have persuaded many of our friends to take the medicine, and the testimony of all of them is that it is a great remedy."

Royal Germetuer builds up from the first dose. It speedily brings bloom to the cheek, strength to the body and joy to the heart.

If you are suffering and have failed of a cure, send stamp for printed matter, certificates, etc.

For sale by the Atlantic Germetuer Company, 14 N. Broad St., Atlanta, Ga., and by druggists. Price reduced from $2.50 to $1.50 per concentrated bottle, which makes one gallon of medicine as per directions accompanying each bottle. Can be sent by express C. O. D. if your druggist cannot supply you.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY

Original Edition, Unabridged.

The value as an educator, of such a work as Webster's Dictionary, can hardly be over estimated, and certainly no man, woman or student can afford to be without one, as it is a library of information in itself. Probably no educational work will ever be so widely known and used as is Webster's. Heretofore the price of this standard work has been so high as to make it prohibitory to thousands of families who can now secure one through us at less than half the regular price. By placing a very large order we are enabled to offer Webster's Dictionary, original edition, unabridged, at the marvelously low price of $4.00. This dictionary is substantially bound in either half morocco or sheep as prefered.

GENERAL SUBJECTS OF THIS WORK.

1.—Etymologies of English words, deduced from an examination and comparison of words of corresponding elements in 20 languages of Asia and Europe.
2.—The true orthography of words, as corrected by their etymologies.
3.—Pronunciation exhibited and made obvious by the division of words into syllables, by accentuation, by marking the sounds of the accented vowels, when necessary, or by general rules.
4.—Accurate and discriminating definitions, illustrated, when doubtful or obscure, by examples of their use, selected from respectable authors, or by familiar phrases of undisputed authority.

Revised and Enlarged by Yale Professors.

To which has been added an appendix of 10,000 words and 15,000 superb illustrations, with pronouncing vocabularies of scripture, classical, and geographical terms, a dictionary of mercantile and legal terms, 15,000 synonyms, also many pages devoted to a chronological history of the principle events since the beginning of the world, making a book of 1,700 PAGES. Every family should now own one of these invaluable books as the great reduction places it within the reach of all.

AGENTS. We want good agents to handle this Dictionary as we know it will sell better than any other book in the market. Many people will doubt our ability to furnish Webster's at the price $4.00, to such we say, send $1.00 with your order to guarantee charges and we will ship C. O. D. for balance, $3.00 subject to inspection. Remit by Post Office or Express Money Order, Registered Letter or N. Y. Draft.

TOWNS and cities receive annually from liquor licenses about $1,250,000, while over $27,000,000 is paid into saloons by the people. For every dollar paid in for license about twenty-one dollars are paid out by the people. The saloon antagonizes all good government and all educational influences.—Carroll D. Wright.

THE assessed value of Kansas in 1880 was $160,000,000. In 1888, after eight years of prohibition, the valuation was $353,000,000.

A LAW providing that railway employés who have worked twenty-four consecutive hours shall not resume until they have had eight hours' rest, has been passed by the Ohio Legislature.

THE large hall of Cooper Union, New York, was recently crowded by a mass-meeting of women in response to a call by the Working Women's Society to urge the passage by the state Legislature of the Women Factory Inspectors' Bill. This measure provides for the appointment by the governor of eight additional factory inspectors who shall be women, and limits the time of labor of women and children in factories and stores to ten hours daily. Resolutions urging the necessity of such a law were passed.

THE Anglo Temperance Association is making rapid advances in India. The object of the organization is to secure the ultimate prohibition of the sale of liquor throughout India.

THE coöperation of all the Protestant churches in Ireland is to be invited in holding a great temperance mission from the first of next October to the tenth, in celebration of the Father Mathew centenary.

THE unmarried women of Massachusetts have twenty-nine million dollars on deposit in the savings banks of their state.

THE officers of the No. 5 Brooklyn, N. Y., union, write with cordial commendation of Major Hilton's labors among them, resulting in awakened public sentiment on the temperance question; fifty dollars in the treasury, and an added membership of more than three-score.

AT the close of a masterly temperance address in Calcutta, by Canon Wilberforce, dusky Mohammedans and Hindoos crowded to the table, and nearly eight hundred pledges were taken.

IT is said that liquor legislation is more necessary to the social welfare of the masses in Russia than in any other country of Europe, and it is also declared that the government is opposed to any such legislation, fearing a decrease of its revenue from the manufacture and sale of liquors. During the past year in Odessa alone there were three hundred deaths from the use of intoxicants.

THE Total Abstinence Society connected with Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, has, during the eight years of its existence, held 624 meetings and given 21,655 pledges.

THE Ladies' Health Protective Association was lately organized in the chapel of the Central Congregational Church of Brooklyn by sixty public-spirited women who propose to do something toward securing clean streets for that city, which is sadly in need of a reform in this direction. Mrs. James Scrimgeour, in addressing the meeting, said they were encouraged by the success of the women of New York in remedying public abuses. She said a big village improvement society could make Brooklyn as clean and attractive as a New England village, and urged that care be taken to put nothing in ash barrels that could blow about the streets. She added that if the women had the management of the appropriation for street cleaning the work would be satisfactorily done.

"THE Prohibition party," says The People, "is gaining thousands of recruits from the ranks of the young men. They are following Garfield's advice, not to pitch their political tents in the graveyard of dead issues."

THE following resolutions were adopted by the North Michigan Free Methodist Conference, at its last session:

Resolved, That this conference will stand by the Prohibition party in the coming election by our influence, prayers and ballots: and that we will teach our people to do the same. And

WHEREAS, The W. C. T. U. is not a secret order, and as our people have stood aloof from them in the past,

Resolved, That in the future we will encourage and assist them in their noble efforts to bring about temperance and social purity in the land.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Elizabeth Storrs Mead has been elected president of Holyoke College.

Seventy proprietors of saloons were arrested in Denver, Col., on Sunday last for selling liquor contrary to the law.

Hon. Samuel J. Randall, ex-speaker of the House during the forty-fifth and forty-sixth Congresses, passed peacefully away Sunday morning, April 13, at his home in Washington, D. C.

Secretary of War Proctor gives the encouragement of his approval to the work of the W. C. T. U. among the soldiers and sailors. He says: "I am glad to say I heartily sympathize with the efforts in behalf of temperance in the army and navy, and shall do all in my power to aid the good work."

The remains of the late President Garfield are about to be removed from the public vault in Lakeview cemetery and placed in the crypt of the monument erected to his memory in Cleveland. This monument, which cost $160,000, is surmounted by a statue of Garfield ten feet high, and of the purest white marble.

Henry M. Stanley will reach London the last week in April, and on May 5, the Royal Geographical Society will give him a magnificent reception. His forthcoming work on "The Darkest Africa" will be published in two octavo volumes by the Scribners. It is said that 50,000 copies have already been ordered.

MISSIONARY women and white-ribboners have always been in potential sympathy, but the Congo and similar pagan outrages by Christian nations have brought them into active coöperation. That was a significant embassy recently decreed by the four foreign missionary societies of women, representing the Methodist, Congregationalist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches of the Northwest. Mrs. Moses Smith and Mrs. Prof. Fisk, of Chicago, were its designated leaders. They went to the President of the United States, praying him to use his utmost influence to prevent the exportation of American whisky to heathen lands. The President listened with appropriate official dignity and refrained from making any reply. They went to Secretary Blaine, telling him that the United States was the only nation that had declined to join in the agreement not to send rum to the Congo, whereat he was surprised and agreed to give attention to the statements made by them. It should be added that Mrs. Gen. Logan, who belongs to the M. E. church, did all in her power to help on the sacred mission of these ladies. To white-ribboners there is poetic justice in the picture of Mrs. Moses Smith pleading with the President for protection for heathen nations from American whisky, since it was she who led the Chicago Crusade band to the city hall in 1874, when they vainly prayed the council for the enforcement of our Sunday law, and escaped with difficulty from a howling mob led on by saloon keepers and hoodlums. Barbarism is the same on all sides of the sea, and alcohol goes not from Christian but from heathen hearts in this country to heathen hands on the equator. The World's W. C. T. U. petition against legalizing the sale of brain-poisons is being signed in every land and its polyglot voice will yet prove potent with all governments. We must just "pray devoutly and then hammer away stoutly."

MILWAUKEE boasts a peerless family. Col. C. K. Pier is a successful lawyer. Mrs. Pier and Miss Kate Pier are also lawyers, having graduated from the law department of the State University in 1887. The two remaining daughters, aged eighteen and twenty, are now in the law college. Miss Kate was for ten months in the employ of the Wisconsin Central Railroad Co., which position she resigned to enter private practice. She was the first woman to argue a case in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, being then twenty-one years of age. General Bryan Dean, of the law faculty, ex-Secretary Vilas, and several other notables of the legal profession, were in the court-room that day. The young Portia betrayed no embarrassment, but stated the case unhesitatingly, and without superfluous words; cited authorities in support of her argument, and evinced an acquaintance with the literature of the profession which was creditable both to herself and her teachers. She won her case, and has since had her share of clientage. All the young ladies of the Pier family are favorites in university circles, possessing as they do average beauty, and more than average talent. The pioneer woman lawyer of the state is Miss Angie King, of Janesville, who was admitted to the bar in 1889. Her success has made the way easier for those who have followed.

THE great mistake made by socialistic theorists is in supposing that the employment of force will bring to terms those who are "of the contrary part." A nation's action is the fruitage of its thought. Before any demand can be urged in legislative halls, those who believe it to be just must go back among the people and arouse a sentiment that will send men to the legislature and to the Congress whose views are in harmony with the new ideas of their constituents. The national life can only be reformed by amending the nation's ways of thinking. Whatever develops and educates the best sentiment in the hearts and at the firesides of the people is a benefit and blessing to the state, for it is through these homes that the commonwealth breathes, just as a forest breathes through its million leaves and sap vessels. Personal appeals are of great value, but it is through the eye that the steadiest and most lasting impressions are made upon the public mind. Doubtless there are many germs of a better future, growing even in the mire of communistic agitation, and a wise discrimination will separate the wheat from the tares. Wholesale denunciation is cheap, but like most things that cost little it is of very little worth. For the statesman who patiently investigates the causes of the present discontent, and eliminates those that are just from those that are groundless, there waits, in the present crisis of affairs, the gratitude of this generation and the unfading laurel wreath of history.

WHOEVER studies the signs of the times with discerning eye must see that the golden age of human brotherhood draws on. Even the "trust" is a signal. To be sure it is a counterfeit, but it exists by faith in association of mutual interests for mutual profit. There has been no truer, finer manifestation of this spirit than that evolved last year by a group of college women, graduates of Vassar, Wellesley and Smith. Realizing the rich opportunities of their own lives, and feeling the conviction that where much is given much is required, they met to devise a scheme for sharing their blessings with those less favored than themselves. The plan decided upon was that of a "college settlement" to be located in one of the poorest quarters of New York. In May, 1889, a place was rented at 95 Rivington street, in a district not criminal, but where the people have to struggle for the maintenance of "fairly decent" existence. The house was thoroughly renovated, put in good sanitary condition, and pleasantly furnished. Then the object lesson began in the attempt to show the greatest amount of comfort to be obtained for the least outlay of money. In October the real experiment was entered upon, when seven young women took possession. They came to live on the same basis as the other people of that locality, hence could have no servants. They afterward secured a housekeeper to cook and assist in culinary management, as they had employments themselves, one being a physician, ready to write prescriptions for five cents, another a music teacher, giving lessons at correspondingly reduced rates. Then they took a little girl from the district to live with them. The first night she only removed her dress and shoes on going to bed. She was not severely rebuked, as that would imply she had not been well taught by her mother, and the college girls are careful not to wound the self-respect of their neighbors, or lessen their family respect. The child proved imitative, and the third night hung out her underclothing to "air." After two months she had so improved in neatness and faithfulness that she was able to take a position as housemaid in the upper part of the city, and her place was filled by another girl. The mothers are occupied with shop-work, and their daughters grow up without training. The college women have undertaken to be on neighborly terms with them, and by free and hearty association to open a door for them into a larger life. No room is too fine to receive the poorest neighbor. A woman with a baby, driven out in the night by a drunken husband, was received into their guest chamber. They have plenty of games and entertainment for the children who come, after school, on the day allotted them, and plenty of books to lend on library day. The cook is always ready to give recipes for wholesome, palatable and economical dishes. Modeled somewhat after Toynbee Hall, the settlement does not attempt a mission or charity, but its residents, by being friends and neighbors in the real Samaritan sense, try to touch the lives of these ignorant people at every point, and with helpfulness in every touch. The public baths opened in the basement, where a hot bath was offered for five cents, did not meet with much favor at first, but now they are in great demand. Miss Scudder, the literary lecturer at Wellesley College, though a busy woman, finds time to visit them and take a share in the work. She says, "We are happy there, and so interested in the queer studies of life." The young women are mostly from comfortable, or even luxurious homes, and it has never entered into the heart of woman to conceive a more practical philanthropy.

CHICAGO women are deeply interested and righteously indignant over the expulsion of three women clerks from the office of Internal Revenue, after years of faithful, efficient service. This is a movement of national concern to womanhood, as Collector Mamer's avowed policy is "the offices for the voters." Acting upon the principle involved, rather than in the defense of the discharged clerks, the Woman's Club of Chicago, composed of four hundred leading women, sent a delegation of five ladies to Washington to present a memorial to President Harrison. In substance the memorial says: "Since the close of the civil war, women have been employed in various government offices, and have done their work so well that neither political party has ever thought of denying them the right to such positions as they were qualified to fill. Given such places at first as a debt of gratitude to women who had worked faithfully in hospital wards, or whose husbands, fathers, or brothers had given their lives for their country, they have been retained because they deserved to be retained; because, the efficiency of the public service has nowhere been greater than where they were employed; and because being equally with men bread-winners for their families, as well as tax-payers, they were equally entitled to the benefits of their common country. We simply protest in the name of the women of the United States against the principle announced by Mr. Mamer; namely, that women not being of service as politicians, have no claim to consideration in the distribution of the offices of the government. We feel that the announcement of such a line of conduct will be received not only as an insult to women but as a reflection on the policy of the present administration." This knights-errant mission of Chicago ladies to the White House will doubtless become a historical visitation, and, if it fails of fruition, will not add to the glory of manhood's boasted chivalry, not to mention the higher principle of human justice. Verily this is an age when women must look after their own sex, and this instance is a forcible illustration of the necessity of women's clubs in order to handle rapidly and intelligently such exigencies as the present one. The President received the ladies courteously, but expressed no defined policy. The matter was placed in the hands of the Congressman who nominated the Collector, and we await the result with interest.

RESUBMISSION.

BY EMMA P. SEABURY.

Who asks for resubmission of the law of prohibition?
Who signs the great petition which before our gaze unrolls?
Are the Kansas people tiring of the spirit that was firing
Their souls, when that great army triumphant swept the polls?

Who asks for resubmission of the law of prohibition?
Is the question that is coming from the East and from the West:
And the South, with many voices, and the freedman who rejoices,
And the anxious and the waiting ask: Will Kansas bear the test?

Has the mother grown aweary for the watches long and dreary;
When the hours dragged to midnight and were mingled with her prayers
For the weak one who was trying, all his tempters' wiles defying,
To run the dreaded gauntlet of the wine-shop and its snares?

Does the glad wife long to listen, her eyes with tears aglisten,
For the husband staggering homeward from the revel at the dawn?
Or the maiden under cover of the gloaming wait her lover,
Till her heart is worn and anxious, and its restfulness is gone?

Does the man with altered manner, marching under this great banner
Self-supporting, self-respecting, calm, reliant, strong and brave,
Want his boys to face the danger? does he ask it for the stranger,
That he bury all his manhood in a sot's dishonored grave?

Are the men and women turning to the streets, for paupers yearning?
Do they want to fill asylums and their prisons' empty cells?
Do they want the drunkard reeling by them, without sense or feeling?
The saloon whose gilded glamours but conceal a thousand hells?

Who wants this resubmission? Who swells the great petition
That unrolls before the Senate its panoply of names;
Men and women consecrating life to truth, nor hesitating,
Or the wily politician who debases and defames?

Rise up, O noble people! let the bells from every steeple,
Ring the triumph and the glory of the right above the wrong;
Ye who fought for federation, for the freedom of the nation,
Steady, now, for prohibition, more than half a million strong!

All the world that rang your praises, at your danger breathless gazes,
Every man who loves his brother; every soul that from its clod
Of unpurified ambition, bursts its chrysalis condition
And soars outward, onward, upward, on the wings of faith to God.

Who asks for resubmission of the law of prohibition?
Is the question that is coming from the East and from the West;
And the South with many voices, and the freedman who rejoices,
Answer, "Kansas never failed us; she is sure to bear the test."

RHODA'S EASTER CARDS.

BY MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

CHAPTER III.

"I do wish 'your loving Rho' would give her full address. Where is 'The Studio'? and who is 'Rho'?—and why are the letters always mailed on the train? and why does not Clarence Langhorn get them?"

She was a busy clerk in the dead letter office at Washington; and yet not so busy that she did not have time to feel sorry for poor Rho, whose loving words and sweet tokens were regularly consigned to the oblivion of dead and untraceable letters.

"And those beautiful Easter cards!" she went on thinking to herself, as she held one in her hand. "I remember this is the third one. They all have that dainty knot of white satin ribbon, and are so sweet. It's a shame that he does not get them! May be he has found somebody who gives him what he likes better than Easter cards. That's the way with men. But somehow I don't think after all she's a sweetheart; more like a mother or sister. Just what I'd like to send to brother Will—I will send it; I'll go through the necessary red tape, and make this exquisite thing my own, and send it to Will next Easter."

. . . . . .

Two young men came together out of the post-office of a western city, on Saturday evening before Easter Sunday.

"Well, Horton," said one to the other, "you'll be over?"

"Y-e-s, I think so."

"See here," cried the other, grasping Will Horton by the shoulder, "I don't feel quite satisfied with your reply. If I thought you wouldn't come I should be tempted to tie myself to you and fetch you. For you see there's to be no backing out, old fellow; you are not going to be allowed to bury your talents any longer. The banquet is more in your honor than anything else. The fellows are dying to make your acquaintance; you have whetted their appetite by your successes, so to speak, and they will not let you off now."

"All right, I'll be over. I think I shall enjoy a little recreation."

"Of course you will. A little fun will brighten you up amazingly, sharpen your wits, you know, for that case that's coming on. Eight sharp, remember."

Horton had his hand full of letters. One he knew at a glance, and the touch of it had almost broken the spell that was being woven for his hurt.

A rising young lawyer from the far East, in this rapidly growing city, a thousand clutching fingers were reaching out to drag him down, while as yet not one had really been outstretched for his uplifting. He was one of the homeless thousands, for he had been blind and dumb to his privileges in the matter of his love for the fair artist, in the college town where he had prepared for his professional studies, so he still only carried her image in his memory. This had been to him a talisman, until he had begun to establish himself as a man among men, and had attracted the public eye by a remarkably brilliant success in legal practice. He suddenly found himself amid new and strange conditions which promised new advantages, and also threatened new dangers.

Shall the charm work still? Can this talisman of man's love for woman keep him pure? What can keep a soul when men combine for its ruin? What shall not love, human and divine, united, dare attempt, even against the best-laid plans of the destroyer? There is nothing so small that it may not become a thing of salvation, if God is behind it.

Horton broke the seal of his Washington letter. A sudden thrill passed through him—a nervous shock, which quickened both mental and moral vision, and the powers of his soul. The letter was from his sister, the clerk in the dead letter office, and one of Rhoda Langhorn's Easter cards was in his hand.

What memories it awakened of the days when he tried to serve her, hoping she would let him love her. They had worshiped in the same chapel, he the creature, she the creator, and more than once had together piled and hung the Easter loveliness about the sacred walls. He had loved her so intensely that he was even afraid of her. Her name was a sacred secret, hidden in his heart from even the dear confidant of boyhood; hence his amazement at finding, this evening of all others, Rhoda's Easter card in the same envelope with Narcissa's letter.

He stood turning the dainty souvenir over and over for some sign, until he bethought him to read the letter. He glanced along rapidly until his eye rested on the paragraph that at once held his attention. It read:

"Letters have been coming for the last two years and over, addressed to one Clarence Langhorn, Coalton, Ill., from 'The Studio,' signed 'Rho.' They are mailed on the train somewhere on the Nypno Road. It seems that every Easter, 'Rho' sends a card to this 'Clarence,' which for the last three years have found their way to us. There has never been any clue by which we could trace them back, so they have gone, love-freighted as they are, the way of all unclaimed letters.

"The Easter cards have been sold according to law; this one I begged the privilege of buying for you. It is so sweet, so appropriately expresses much that I have felt as I have thought about you, and our lives together as children, that I wanted it for you. But I am sorry for poor Rho and her Clarence; though I fear he does not deserve it. Why will not people fix their letters so they can be returned, I wonder?"

"God knows!" ejaculated Will Horton, "this time at least." The letter went on:

"I have speculated about this Clarence, and his relation to Rho. I wonder why he doesn't get her letters, and why she always mails them on the train."

"I know about that," thought Horton; "she hands them to Charley Welch, at the depot, in the morning, as she goes to the College; or as he passes her house. I have seen her do both, and he mails them on the train. Poor Rho! I wonder what has become of Clarence. She need not have expected much of him, though.

"But what would Narcissa have reason to expect of me? What would she or Rho think, if they knew how near I have come to crossing the line? Heavens! What have I been thinking about? But for this letter and Rho's card I should have joined those fellows at eight o'clock, I verily believe, and what then? Doesn't seem possible I could have come so near forgetting! I must have lost some essential manhood. God help me!

"'He is risen' (reading from the card) 'wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God, by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them.'

"'Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty. Alleluia!'

"Rho, your heaven-sent message cannot be a dead letter. It is alive. It shall be the forerunner of a true Easter to me. But Clarence! Shall my gain be his loss? God forbid!"

He held in his hand the dainty double card with its silken fringes and white temperance badge, and studied the design, while his heart throbbed with strange emotions. There were fern, mosses, spring beauties and lilies of the valley; the text lettering in the faintest gossamer lines, while the glad Easter song and shout seemed to palpitate with living colors, shaded from deepest crimson to palest saffron and gold.

How well he remembered the little white bow, just like this, which the fair artist always wore, and the "Y," ecrawled with delicate carelessness in one corner of the card, how suggestive it was of her and her sweet life mission.

That evening while the fellows were waiting and wondering if he had really escaped them, Willis Horton sat writing to Rhoda Langhorn, telling her first of his escape from sin to salvation, of the new Easter that had dawned upon his soul, and of his love for her, which could be a secret no longer. From motives of delicacy he withheld all mention of the dead letters, or the missent Easter cards. He would write to Narcissa, sending the address of Rho, so that she might at least have her letters back, if their tender messages must be lost to Clarence forever. And he would be himself to her, in her sorrow, all that love could make him, all that she would accept at his hands.

He had finished writing these two letters when he bethought him of the others yet unopened. He had not much heart for business or for lesser friendships, but broke the seals, and read, and filed them away, until he was again surprised by another link in the chain of influences that had been drawing him back from slippery places. He was a fine singer, with a rich tenor voice, which for over a year had not been heard in the songs of the church, and here was a note asking, as a favor, that he would step into a vacancy in a choir that was to sing at an Easter service that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had planned to hold at the prison Sunday morning.

The writer said: "We know it is late in the day to ask such a favor, but as you are not singing at present, and as you read at sight, we have ventured to ask this great accommodation. Our plans will fail if you cannot take Mr. Webber's place. He was sure you would, as it is the sudden death of his brother that calls him away. He would have seen you himself, but that he only had time to make the Eastern train. If you can join us at the rehearsal this evening at Grace Chapel, from 8 to 10, we will be very grateful."

What could be more fitting service for him, that coming Easter morning, than to sing to souls in prison; he who had just been made free, who was to enter upon his own new Easter. He never thought of declining, but placing Rho's card in his pocket and taking his winged declaration of love in his hand, he went out, dropped the letter in a box and joined the singers at rehearsal.

. . . . . .

That prison chapel! The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union Flower Mission had transformed it into a bower of beauty, and after the service, the bouquets, bearing Scripture cards tied with white ribbon were to be distributed to the convicts. The chaplain, an old man in prison service, was dumb with emotion as he looked upon the work of those pure girlish hands, for the men of crime. Never before had he known an Easter morning like this in prison.

As the convicts entered, wending their slow way, in the long procession, to their places, they were greeted with a burst of song, fragrance and beauty that moved even the most stoical and hardened.

Willis Horton had never sung as he did that morning; never before had he known what song was for. The triumph of his tone, the joy of his face, drew all eyes, and touched all hearts. Many a prisoner said to himself, "O what must it be to be free and sing like that!"

At the close of the service a messenger came with the request that the singers should go to the prison hospital and sing one song to a dying man, and would they hasten? for there was no time to lose!

"Poor fellow, is he really going?" exclaimed the young lady in charge of the Flower Mission; "I had promised him an Easter song all his own, after the service here. Hurry! do not be too late."

So the singers, led by Horton and the hospital messenger, hastened to the cell in which lay a dying man under a life sentence for murder.

They ranged themselves about the door of the narrow room, and as Horton looked up he saw a pair of wide open startled eyes fixed upon him from the face on the pillow. Something in them drew his heart, his compassion, and his new Christ-like-love, as nothing had ever done before.

They began to sing the simple old songs of the church: "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," "Rock of Ages," "Nearer, My God, to Thee,' breaking at last into the triumphant chorus, "He is risen: Alleluia!"

At the first utterance of this note of triumph in the old anthem, a cry leaped from the white lips of the prisoner, a weak, pitiful cry of "O Rho! Rho!" followed by muffled sobs and sighs.

In an instant Horton, his part in the anthem forgotten, was at the poor fellow's side, and their arms were about each other.

"O I knew you," gasped Clarence. "I couldn't bear it;—Rho! Rho! That's all on the Easter cards we used to make together, and it has come true, all she said. He is Risen! but O I am dying in prison,—and she mustn't know. This is the anything that was to make me keep sober.

"I'm glad they shut me up; it gave me a chance to keep away from the drink; but Will, I did not kill the man, we were all drunk together, but I know I did not kill him, they proved it on me, though, and sent me here for life; most over now, though, thank God. Don't tell Rho where I died, 'twould most kill her. I do—want—to—see—her—so—bad—just—once. I shall see—her—up—yonder—I shall—for He is risen—Alleluia! I see that all the time—all sorts o' letters—with lilies—and crocuses and spring beauties and—O-o-o-o-o!"

Horton had been unable to utter a word; deep sobs heaved his breast; he had lifted the dying boy in his arms, and caressed his face, head and hands, as Rho herself might have done.

As Clarence uttered those last words he remembered the lilies and spring beauties blooming on the Easter card in his pocket, and that all their sweetness had been perfected for the eyes that were soon to glaze in death, and, hastily drawing it forth, he held it up in sight of the dying boy. That cry of recognition! that rapture of love that broke over his face! None who saw it could ever forget it.

He grasped the card with his last remaining strength, pressed it to his lips, and, with a sigh, fell asleep.

. . . . . .

The next Easter morning, Narcissa, Willis and Rhoda Horton stood together about a grave, from which arose a white shaft, dressed with Easter lilies, and sang in low voices the anthem of resurrection.

The marble bore this inscription:

CLARENCE LANGHORN,
Aged 24.
Began his new life
Easter morning, 18—.
In Christ.
"He is risen indeed. Alleluia!"

HIGH LICENSE.

BY REV. J. H. ECOB, D. D.

We have reached the point where we must pit prohibition squarely against high license. Why do men want the state to continue in partnership with the liquor traffic? Simply because there is money in it; just that and nothing else. Low license means some money; high license means more money. Let the income from high license go to the American Board of Missions instead of the state treasury to ease the tax burden, and where will be the High License party? Men reason: Here is a great traffic that will go on; then let the state compel it to pay the taxes.

Look at the question clearly for a moment; give high license all the fair names possible, call its fees by some soothing roundabout, but it all comes down to this: The state takes large sums of money from a given traffic and applies that money to the purposes of state government. If that traffic is legitimate, the state is bound to tax it as lightly as possible, and that tax is good clean money, which a Christian state can honestly apply to its needs If that traffic is illegitimate the state is bound to prohibit it. If it does not, but puts a high license upon it, or high tax—call it what you please, the state thereby becomes a partner in an illegitimate business, and takes that foul money to pay running expenses. Suppose this principle is applied elsewhere Remember sharply what the principle is. It is taking foul money to pay running expenses. It is not forgotten what we used to say of some of the good, rich Boston deacons who were in the commercial business in the old days of the slave trade. Every now and then among their goodly ships they would fit out one with New England rum and trinkets and dispatch it to the coast of Africa, and it would come back with a load of slaves. That one black ship was worth a whole fleet of white ships. But now will some high license advocate say what the deacon shall do with that black money; that blood money; that price of the bodies and souls of men. Does any one think he will put that foul money to pure uses? Will he pay ministers' salaries and feed orphans and widows? I say nay, nay! That money came from the pit; and he is the devil's minister who takes it and disburses it, it matters not what he does with it.

Remember the principle, Foul money for running expenses. Apply it to a business corporation. Apply it to a church. Apply it to the home. Workers in the temperance cause will have done a great thing if they get this single conviction before the people of this land: The taxes of a Christian state must be as clean as the contributions of a church. The state appoints her receiver of taxes, I, an honest man, a good citizen, step up and lay down the tax upon my Christian home. I am jostled aside by the rum-seller who lays down his high license. The state reaches forth her hand and sweeps his blood money and my clean money into her treasury. I protest, protest, protest! In the name of my manhood, in the name of my Christian home, in the name of my state, I protest. I have no lot or part with this man in his accursed business. I protest, no man, no institution, no state shall reckon the proceeds of the rum-seller's labor and my labor on the same basis. My tax represents my property. My property represents the outcome of my labor. My tax represents my citizenship. No self-respecting citizen can for an instant consent that his state shall take indifferently his good clean Christian money, and the hire of the harlot, the stealings of the gambler, or the spoils of the destroyer of men. This principle cuts to the root of all license, low or high, for an illegitimate traffic. This principle calls steadily and consistently for prohibition.

Glance a moment at what many are pleased to call the practical side of this high-license system. The following, clipped from the Albany Evening Journal, is a sample: "Ask the tax-payer who is paying for police courts, jails, poor-houses, orphan asylums and insane asylums whether the Iowa communities would not be better off if each one of these 2,200 saloons was paying $250, or a total of $550,000 toward the relief of our burdened real estate."

Observe a very significant admission in this bit of practical political economy. Police courts, jails, poor-houses, orphan asylums and insane asylums, are tacitly admitted to be the fruit of the saloon. Then the demand is made to tax the saloon to pay for the burdens which it imposes. This is the old story of the doctor who threw the baby into fits. There was death in the fits. This practical political economy says; Feed the people on whisky, then tax the whisky to pay for all the damage it does. This reminds one of the Dutchman who whipped his son till the boy was raging mad, then said to him, "Ah, I know vat you tinks; you tinks tam! Now I licks you for dat." So, feed the people on whisky till they not only think but act "tam," crowding police courts, jails, poor-houses and the rest, then tax the whisky to foot the bills, in order "to relieve overburdened real estate" Oh, long-suffering political economy! Of all the maltreatment and perversions of a hundred years, this is the "unkindest cut of all." Prohibition's simple and adequate reply is: Cut off that which demands and fills "police courts, jails, poor-houses, orphan asylums and insane asylums," and instantly your tax budget is relieved of more than has ever been raised by any license, low or high.

There comes to mind that picture in "Pilgrim's Progress" of a fire burning brightly, and a man pouring on water all the time. When Christian asked how it was, he was led around back of the fire, and there was a man pouring on oil. Prohibition does not cry for more water, but gets around behind the fire and goes for that man with the oil-can.

Peace! Independence! Truth go forth
Earth's compass round;
And your high priesthood shall make earth
All hallowed ground.

A STUDY OF THE POSITION OF PETER AND PAUL.

BY W. HOWATT GARDNER.

V.

The method of the early church was much like our modern Sunday-school. Would even the most conservative bodies remand their women Sunday-school teachers to silence? To be consistent this ought to be done. Such women are simply usurping authority, when they ought to "learn in silence." It is most puzzling to note how some, while maintaining that women should be silent in the churches, make exceptions and claim that Paul's words have no application to Sunday-school teachers, responses in the liturgy or singing in the choir, or teaching the heathen. For such exceptions there is no authority in Paul. If his command is a universal rule, it can have no exceptions, and Paul has delegated no ecclesiastic since his time to make exceptions. If we are to take Paul's words universally and literally, we can not do otherwise than take them unqualifiedly. They exclude, if universal, all audible service on the part of women. Paul's restrictions, however, were not universal, but conditional and temporary. Women were not, as a rule, and especially those from pagan nations, who were exhibiting in their dwarfed souls the results of degrading laws and customs, fitted to teach. The position of teacher was one of authority and responsibility, and hence, for a woman unfitted to teach to assume such position, would indeed be usurping authority over him who was fitted. Though she could not teach, she was allowed to learn, and Paul had faith enough, if men since have not had, to trust to the development of truth and justice to fit woman to take her rightful place. That women may teach, when fitted to do so, we find Paul declaring in his second letter to Timothy. "The things that thou hast heard of me, the same commit thou to faithful men (anthropois) who shall be able to teach others also." The word for men in this passage is anthropois, meaning manhind, persons. The needed qualification was ability to teach, and was equally binding upon man and woman. The door was open to woman to teach when she shall have been fitted by learning.

Therefore, we believe that woman universally was not forbidden to speak in a religious assembly, or to preach, if she is called to that work or to teach, if she is fitted. But what did Paul mean by forbidding the Corinthian women to speak? We who read the English version, read a translation, and translations at the best must be imperfect. The English version covers five Greek words with one English, "to speak." But we need to do still more than to remember that we read a translation; we must read and re-read any epistle until we get into the atmosphere of it, and feel its surroundings. Let us bear in mind the excitability and talkativeness of the Eastern women of that day. Those uncultured women of Corinth disturbed and violated the proprieties of a religious gathering, with probably unchristian women in the congregation to add to the "confusion." From Paul's frequent utterances concerning "the gift of tongues" in this chapter, it seems there was a good deal of noisy manifestation suggestive of "confusion." So Paul well said, "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints." What Paul censured was not the use of the privileges of the sanctuary, but the abuse. If the women were disorderly it was but natural for him to seek to silence them. "Let your women keep silence, for it is not permitted unto them to speak." Any pastor to-day would put an injunction upon any disorderly element in his congregation. It is always a need that necessitates a law; when the need has passed, the law becomes dead.

The Greek word translated "to speak" is laleo, meaning generally, to talk, to talk about anybody or thing, in the sense of gossip; properly, to make an inarticulate sound; specific meaning, to prattle, babble, gabble, chatter. In classical usage it is applied to inanimate objects; to sound the harp as also the twittering of birds, barking of dogs, chattering of monkeys Said Plutarch, who wrote in the same Greek in which Paul wrote, "These indeed utter sounds but they speak not." In reference to little children it signifies to prattle. Said Xenophon, "I, being a little child, was thought to be a most astonishing one to prattle." Said Paul, "When I was a little child, I was accustomed to prattle as a little child." Dr. Robinson defines the meaning of laleo to be "to use the voice, without any necessary reference to words spoken, and thus differing from eipein, to speak, and legein, to say." Thayer defines it as "to utter a sound, to emit a voice, not only of men, especially when chattering and prattling, but also of animals." Yet he seems doubtful as to the specific usage in the New Testament. Later Greek still employed the root meaning of the word and applied it to utterances of a foolish character. See I Tim. 5: 13. "Tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not." Jude 16. "Their mouth speaketh great swelling words." II Cor. 11: 23. "I speak as a fool." The word used to refer to orderly discourse is legein. Dr. Marvin Vincent in his New Testament word studies says, "The verb originally means to pick out and hence to use words selected as appropriate expressions of thought, and to put such words together in orderly discourse." "The verb lalein, is used of speaking in contrast with, or as a breaking of silence." This is a Hebraistic usage, adopted from a similar usage of the Hebrew equivalent, while the specific meaning is employed, as has been shown, to express disorderly discourse or talk of a foolish character. Professor Schirlitz in his German Lexicon of New Testament Greek relates laleo to the German lallen, and Professor Whitney of Yale in his German Lexicon defines lallen as "to stammer, lisp, speak sillily."

Philologically considered, laleo is an onomatopoetic word whose sound signifies its sense. Repeat, lal, lal, lal, and we get an idea of the meaning. Babble, splash, chatter, murmur, are words belonging to this class. Repeat rapidly, mur, mur, and we know the meaning of murmur. This root sense of laleo runs through various languages: Latin, lalare; German, lallen; Italian, lalazione; English, lallation. Place these words in a column, and we see the root in each indicating the sense of indistinct utterance, or silly, foolish talk.

lal-are.
lal-len.
lal-lation.

Applying the root, or specific meaning, to the chapter in which the injunction to women is contained, the chapter becomes wonderfully clear. The word is used twenty-four times in the chapter, and once only for ordinary speech. The other twenty-three times are referable to some external circumstance that made laleo most appropriate in some phase of its root sense. Considering the disorder in the church, is it not natural that Paul, in accordance with what Professor Phelps calls "the instinct of speech," should select the word most appropriate to the occasion? If laleo does not have its specific meaning in the New Testament, determined by circumstances, trend of argument, and appropriateness of word, how comes it that the root sense has let the New Testament Greek entirely alone and again impressed itself upon later languages? This seems a strange freak of language! The fact is, the language of the New Testament is still practically the classical Greek, though modified by the introduction of dialectical words and provincialisms, just as the English is substantially Anglo-Saxon, though containing words from other languages. The unclassicalism of New Testament Greek consists in different idiomatic usage, sentences modeled after Hebrew order, grammatical structure, and in change of meaning of such words as express distinctively Christian ideas, and perpetuate Old Testament ideas from synonomous words in Hebrew, preserved by the Septuagint translation, such as "spirit," "flesh," "sin," "repentance," "angel," "paradise," "regeneration," but ordinary words maintained the same significance as when spoken by Socrates or Plato. In view of all the foregoing, we read Paul's injunction as follows: "Let the women in the assemblies keep silence, for it is not permitted unto them to chatter, and so add to the confusion, but let them be in subjection, as in accordance with your law and custom, and, if they wish to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home, for it is disgraceful for a woman to chatter in an assembly for religious worship. . . . . Let all things be done decently and in order." Of course, it would be absurd for a woman to-day to ask a husband, who probably is less informed than she herself is, for religious instruction. "But," the commentator says, "the husband might, if needful, put his wife's question to the church," but Paul made no such provision. Is not this argument akin to the idea that a wife's citizenship is represented by her husband?

What is the conclusion of the whole matter? In view of the fact that Paul's letters under consideration were written, one to the church at Corinth, and the other regarding the church at Ephesus, in order to correct disorders peculiar to that time: and considering the excitable characteristics of the women of that day, due to their enforced ignorance; the testimony of Chrysostom in the fourth century to these same characteristics, also of missionaries of to-day regarding Eastern women in the same condition; that the office of prophetess differed nothing in service from that of the prophet, who was the preacher of his time; that exceptionally prominent women then preached; that women were then allowed to teach when fitted to do so; that the Greek word translated "to speak" has a specific meaning, to babble or chatter, by the testimony of both classical writers and Paul himself, that laleo has not lost the force of its root sense, as testified to by Philology; that Paul's restrictions do not apply to the women of to-day; that in Christ we find our supreme authority, we conclude that women are not forbidden to either teach, or preach, provided they have the right qualifications, the same as those of her brother man, namely, a love for the work, preparation for the work, consecration to the work.

LEGAL RIGHTS OF THE CRUSADERS.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—The deep interest excited in the public mind by the Crusades, heretofore and now being waged by Christian women in Missouri against saloons kept in open violation of the law, and the unjust criticism of their heroic achievements by the daily press, prompts me to write this defense of their acts.

Under the local option laws of that state a large number of the counties and cities voted in favor of prohibiting the sale of intoxicants within their limits, and the sale or keeping for sale of such liquors are criminal acts, and such places are nuisances at common law and as such may be abated in a summary manner by any person aggrieved by them.

The press, having failed to discover the criminal character of these saloons and to demand their suppression, is swift to denounce the Christian women, who are trying to protect their homes from the ravages of these haunts of vice, as law-breakers and criminals. It assumes that those engaged in the commission of crimes, and the property used in their perpetration, are entitled to the protection of the law, while those who try to prevent crime are the criminals.

Saloons that are kept in violation of the penal laws of a state are public nuisances. Blackstone, defining a nuisance at common law, said: "Whatsoever unlawfully annoys or doth damage to another is a nuisance." In a recent case involving the constitutionality of the prohibitory laws of Kansas, the Supreme Court of the United States, maintaining that saloons have the characteristics of nuisances, said, "We cannot shut out of view the fact within the knowledge of all, that the public health, the public morals and the public safety may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drinks; nor to the facts established by statistics accessible to every one, that the disorders, pauperism and crime prevailing in the country are in some degree, at least, traceable to this vice."

It being true that "whatsoever unlawfully annoys or doth damage to another is a nuisance," and that saloons endanger "the public health, the public morals and the public safety," and that they in some degree cause the "disorders, pauperism and crime prevailing in the country," they must be public nuisances wherever they are prohibited by law.

Being nuisances at common law can they be abated in a summary manner without legal process? If so, who may abate them? Blackstone in his classification of remedies by the act of the party says, "The fourth species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured is the abatement or removal of nuisances. . . . . The reason why the law allows this private and summary method of doing one's self justice is, because injuries of this kind, which obstruct or annoy, require an immediate remedy, and cannot wait the slow progress of the ordinary forms of justice." 3 Blk. Com., p. 5.

In 9th Wendell, 571, the Court of Appeals of N. Y. says, "Formal legal proceedings, and trial by jury, are not appropriate to and have never been used in such cases." One of the judges in the same case said, "Much stress was laid by counsel upon the fact that the exercise of the right claimed would result in the destruction of their property without the benefit of trial by jury. The same objection would apply to the dejection of every nuisance, yet nothing is clearer, or better settled than the right to exercise this power in a summary manner, not only when the whole community is affected, but when a private individual alone is injured. This is a right necessary to the good order of society."

In 98th Ills., p. 305, the statement in the syllabus is, "As the summary abatement of nuisances is a remedy which has ever existed in the law, its exercise cannot be regarded as in conflict with constitutional provisions for the protection of the rights of private property, and giving a trial by jury. Formal legal proceedings and trial by jury are not appropriate, and have never been used in such cases."

The abatement of nuisances in a summary manner by the executive officers of cities, without legal process, as provided in their ordinances, such as the removal of wooden buildings within the fire limits and the like, is an exercise of this power. The city has no more right to take private property for its own use, or to destroy such property, than a natural person, and can only do so when such property has become a nuisance. Property that the claimant cannot legally own, and the possession of which constitutes a crime, is not under the protection of the law. The women who destroy such property are not criminals. They have the same right to abate such common nuisances as men have to defend their persons or domiciles when unlawfully assailed. As the women of that state are denied the right to vote or hold office, I think they are fully justified, morally and legally, in protecting their homes, their families and themselves from the ravages of these demons of vice in the summary manner which the law permits.

(JUDGE) JAMES BAKER.

Evanston, Ill.

MISS ACKERMAN IN SIAM.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—During my stay in Bangkok I asked for an audience with His Royal Highness, Prince Diss, at the head of the educational department for the government. He received me in his private apartment in the educational rooms. As I passed through the hall and reached the door, he stepped forward to meet me, when I was introduced by Mr. McFarland, president of the college for native boys. The Prince shook hands in a most friendly manner, and said "he had read of me in the papers, and was glad to see me," and as I had visited his school and talked to his boys, of course he was interested to know what I thought of his people. He expressed himself as deeply interested in the cause of temperance, and said he was soon to begin the translation of a text-book on scientific temperance to be taught in the school.

All of the male portion of the royal family are very youthful looking. Prince Diss, like most of the natives, is low of stature, dark of skin, has short, straight hair, brushed off his forehead a la pompadour, exposing a very intellectual brow. He speaks English perfectly, and is very much at ease in his manners. Of course he wears the costume of his country; a short white coat, black panung (substitute for trousers), long white hose, and low-cut shoes with large steel buckles, completed his apparel. He has many progressive ideas, and is especially interested in the education of the boys in the English language, and before leaving I am intending to form a Loyal Temperance Legion among the school-boys, and introduce the Demorest contest. I have one of the medals with me which will interest them very much, for many of the boys are bright.

The next event was being presented to His Majesty, the King. In company with Mr. and Mrs. McFarland, I made my way to the office of Prince Ta-Wan, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and half-brother to the King. We were shown into the general waiting-room, when very soon his Royal Highness appeared, and the usual introduction followed. In appearance he was very like Prince Diss; his face is full, a restless eye; he speaks English correctly, but not readily, and was dressed in native style, every garment of the finest silk.

We passed from this general waiting-room to the waiting-room of the royal palace. The palace is surrounded by an inclosure, the outer wall of which is reached by a long, paved walk through the grounds of the state buildings. Here we passed the outer guards, when two noblemen conducted us to the reception-room of the palace. We found several persons of note waiting to secure an audience with His Majesty. The Consul from Austria to Siam was among the number. As no one is ever presented to the King only in full dress, all were thus attired. The Austrian Consul wore military uniform of high rank; at his side hung a sword in a silver sheath. He wore white gloves and a plumed, helmet-shaped hat, and a most distinguished-looking individual he was. The Belgium Consul was also in waiting; he, too, wore military uniform, less elaborate than the Austrian's, the trimmings being tinsel instead of gilt.

Of course I was pleased to meet these distinguished gentlemen, but I was most interested in a Chinese nobleman. I was told he was, and still is, the Siamese Consul to Singapore. It seems very strange that a Chinese should be representing this government at a foreign port, but he is highly educated and immensely wealthy. When I was introduced he seemed to know who I was, and inquired at once if I was "coming to Singapore," and said, "If I can do anything for you just let me know." I had never seen a Chinese of highest rank in his native dress, and so was very much interested in his costume. His appearance was most striking. He wore most elaborate shoes after Chinese pattern, very thick soles turned up slightly at the toes, white silk hose, clock-work at the sides, green silk trousers fastened closely about the ankles, a long crape silk, lilac-colored tunic reaching nearly to the ankles, over which was a shorter garment of plum-colored silk. His long, black hair hung down his back, while the front of his head was closely shaven half over the crown. His eyes were really the attractive feature of his face; they fairly danced in his head as he joined us in conversation, speaking English in a manner that would put many a native born to shame. I could not discover the least foreign accent in his speech.

While we were talking the gentlemen had concluded their business with the King, and one of the noblemen came to say His Majesty would receive me at once. We ascended a short flight of marble steps, passed through a large hall, between a line of royal guards, to the door of the private audience room, where His Majesty, the King, and His Royal Highness, Prince Ta-Wan, stood ready to receive me. Mr. McFarland presented me, when His Majesty greeted me with a warm shake of the hand and motioned me to a seat in a large easy chair, seating himself on a couch near by. I cannot say he is really kingly in appearance—being too small for that, but he is highly intelligent and perfectly free from any mannerisms or pomp. Like all the royal family he is low of stature, but has departed from the usual fashion of brushing his hair off his face, and wears it parted on the left side. He was dressed in deep black; his coat was woven of silk after the Jersey fashion, without seam, and his whole attire was plain and simple. There is a great vein of humor in his composition, and two or three times he indulged in a hearty laugh, as hearty as a school-boy's. When he has anything special to say he fixes his piercing black eyes upon one in a most searching manner. He expressed himself greatly pleased that the women of America were so interested in his people, and that I was visiting the country. He inquired very kindly after Mrs. Leavitt, and as I departed, said, "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union have my best wishes for success in trying to make people better." So, bowing ourselves out of his presence, the noblemen again escorted us to the outer gate.

The Royal palace is such a gigantic affair that a book might well be written about it and its strange and mysterious surroundings. The palace itself is a very large stone structure, with a main building and two wings, one to the right and the other to the left. The main building is reached by heavy marble steps from either side. At the foot of the steps, standing on a heavy base, are four great elephants. These are about the size of a young elephant, are made of masonry and covered with gold leaf. The grounds are beautifully laid out, and the inner gate is guarded by two huge statues of grinning monsters, neither man nor beast. This is all that mars the beauty of the surroundings. On the other side are the many houses occupied by the wives of the King, some thirty or forty in number, besides the women of the harem. In all there are some three thousand women living within the palace grounds. The first wife or queen occupies the palace, the others each have houses of their own on the ground. The kings are required to marry royal blood, and as none can be as royal as their own family, they marry their own sisters. The present king and queen are half-brother and sister, both having the same father. It is considered a very great honor to go to the King's harem and the beautiful daughters of noblemen are sent there at an early age, and thus budding, virtuous womanhood is sacrificed to royalty.

Leaving the palace we pass the barracks, where are quartered the Royal Body-guards to the King, some ninety in number, while near by are the royal stables. Going through these stables with the overseer we were shown the King's charger; not that he ever rides, but he must have a charger; also the young Crown Prince's pony. These horses all came from Australia, and are truly fine specimens of horse flesh. Next we came to the stables of the white elephants. I cannot see why they should be called "white," for there is nothing white about them; they are just an ugly dirt color. They are still considered sacred, and are well cared for, but of no use only on state occasions, when they are adorned with all their trappings of state and take a prominent part in the festivities. Any one capturing a white elephant is rewarded by the King bestowing upon him some high rank.

I reached here in the midst of the holiday season, which seemed to be a bad time for my work, but we began our meetings as soon as Christmas was passed, the first meeting being held in the drawing-room of the British Legation, Captain Jones, British minister, kindly tendering the use of his beautiful home. The meeting was well attended and the captain entertained us all with refreshments. The next gathering was held at the American Legation, Colonel Child extending like hospitality. It is very pleasant to meet so large a number of Americans; we never appreciate our own countrymen as much as when we meet them abroad. Colonel Child, who is United States minister to Siam, entertained me on Christmas with a dinner to which the American residents were invited; he also gave the use of his drawing-room and presided at an evening meeting. We continued the meetings Friday and Saturday evenings, and I took the Sunday service at the Union Church. All the meetings were fairly attended, especially the lecture on Alaska, which is very popular. The work was formed here by Mrs. Leavitt, and the women have had a great struggle to "hold the fort." Temperance sentiment is very low. I do not think I ever found myself among a more indifferent people. The ladies have been struggling to keep up a "Sailors' Rest" with a reading room and coffee house, and this alone has done a good work.

We have formed a Loyal Temperance Legion among the white children, and they are to take up the Demorest contest. Next week we give a "book sociable" in aid of the reading room; those coming being expected to bring books and papers. I shall be here longer than I expected. I am suffering somewhat from the fever that prevails in the East, and on account of being such a poor sailor, I have been advised not to undertake a voyage till I am free from the fever. This letter brings me to the closing scenes of another year, and as I recount the mercies and blessings of the past, with a song of praise on my lips, and a prayer of thanksgiving in my heart, I close the books of the happiest year of my life, and in deep humility I

"Praise Him for all that is past,
And trust Him for all that's to come."

CALIFORNIA WINES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Seeing, as we California women do, the great harm done to our own people and to visiting tourists by the so-called "pure wines" of this coast, we feel impressed to give an occasional warning on the subject through your columns.

An old gentleman who has been in California thirty years and is now a stanch Prohibitionist, came here with paralysis and was recommended by the doctors to make and drink wine. He did so, leaving it free to all his family with no thought of harm. One year he asked his family what he should do with the grapes; if he should make wine again.

"No," said his son of fifteen, "don't make any more wine."

"Why," asked the father, much surprised.

"Because," answered the boy, "I like it."

He was a sensible son of a sensible father. There was no more wine. The son grew up, graduated in college, and secured a good position as teacher. But the story is generally reversed.

A young man came here from Iowa, bright, intelligent but unused to wine. "So many told me it was not intoxicating," he said, "that when I went one day to a restaurant where it was set out for me I drank some. When I got out of doors the sidewalk seemed in waves. I stopped and thought a moment, concluded I must be tipsy, took the street car out to the farthest limit of the line and sat under a tree for a couple of hours before I went home." They do not all stop with one such experience, however.

When the National G. A. R. was here the delegates were met at Barstow by Los Angeles committees with oranges and wine, and an old army nurse who was there said Christian men who had not tasted a drop for years, drank because they were told the wines were "perfectly harmless," and became intoxicated, to the great grief of themselves and wives.

"Harmless," "unadulterated," "pure"; these are terms constantly in use. And yet at a meeting of the horticultural commission, our state saloon managers, they complained that 25,000 gallons of aniline dye had been shipped into this state that year as "cherry juice" to flavor the wines. If my memory serves me, it was the president, Mr. Wetmore, who made the complaint. So much brandy is used to "fortify" some grades that there has been a strong effort among the wine men to get Congress to allow them to manufacture it free of duty. In some kinds of wine forty per cent of brandy is used, according to the statement of these same wine men who certainly will not overstate the case, and yet people will tell you they are "harmless as water."

As to their not being adulterated outside the "cherry juice" business, a young man who had grown up in this state and has not the least symptom of being a Hrohibitionist, told me his place of business was next door to a wholesale liquor store and he had often counted the barrels going in and out, and estimated that for every three or four barrels that went in, twelve came out. Something must have happened inside. Surely, something happens to the men who put it inside of them.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

MATILDA B. CARSE.

Dear white-ribbon sister, brother, boy or girl: Have you a Temple mite-box on your table? If not, write to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, 145 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago, inclosing a two-cent stamp, and it will be promptly sent you on condition that you will drop into it a cent a day, or its equivalent, during the next twelve months. Mite-boxes in quantities will also be sent to unions for the cost of transportation.

One of God's hidden ones, a friend in Connecticut, who, for good reasons, cannot allow her name to be used, writes us pledging $100 to be paid within two years. Another of these silent ones from Wauseon, Ohio, sends a check for $25 on her pledge of $100. She has almost completed her gift. Miss Sarah H. Leet, Racine, Wis., writes: 'Ever since the first steps taken toward the erection of the Temperance Temple, I have longed to send a hundred dollars toward the building fund in memory of my dear mother, who was always a stanch temperance woman. I am very anxious that her name should be upon one of the memorial tablets in Willard Hall. I now pledge you $100 for this purpose."

Mrs. Anna B. Lane, Ford, Mo., has sent several small gifts for the Temple. In her last letter she enunciates a great truth, which those who possess little of this world's goods would do well to remember. She says: "My gifts have been very small, but I feel that the dime of the person who can only give a dime, is as necessary to the work and the person's standing with God, as the dollars of those who can give dollars." Our good friend, Mrs. Norman Buck, of Palouse City, Washington, writes: "Oh, these mites which make a million! I hope they are coming in fast. Of course you will tell us when the corner-stone is to be laid, in time for local unions to hold a corner-stone meeting and take a collection." We will, indeed. We think that corner-stone collection is a good idea.

We only wish we could have a little more room for our Temple Items. News from the children who are such large helpers in building the Temple, have been crowded out for several weeks. We are determined they shall have a hearing this week.

Cordelia Stiver and Robert Stiver, Bunker Hill, Ill., send the contents of their mite-boxes, $7.33. They are respectively seven and five years of age. They have taken great delight in filling the boxes, and always have their mother read the Temple Items to them. We hope these dear children's good example may induce others to follow in their footsteps. Little Edgar Roberts, of Evanston, Ill., a six-year old boy, sends $1, which he earned by selling molasses candy.

Fred and Frank Helman, Rockville, Ind., write as follows: "We are two little boys, eight and six years old; we want to help build the Temple; please send us a mite-box, and we will see how much we can get in it. There are lots of saloons in Rockville. We take THE UNION SIGNAL. I think it is a nice paper, I sometimes learn pieces to say at school out of it." Frank Easton, Elmira, N. Y., sends for a mite-box, and says: "I am a boy ten years old. I am interested in the Temperance Temple. My grandmother reads to me about it. I wish to do something toward the building of it. I am a Prohibitionist through and through." Another ten-year-old boy, Rhea K. Gregg, Grand Lake, Colo., writes a very cute letter, and sends for a mite-box. He promises not only to put in a penny a day himself, but to get others to give. He says, "I have my mamma, grandpa, grandma, auntie, and three big uncles who are strong Prohibitionists, and vote for it every chance they get (I don't mean my mamma, grandma and auntie vote, though they would if they could). They all wear the yellow ribbon, and I am going to, for I think they ought to vote as well as some drunk men I saw last election day. Grandma wears a white ribbon. Does every one have to belong to the W. C. T. U. to wear the white ribbon? or can a boy wear it who believes in the Crusade and everything THE UNION SIGNAL says? I hope to go and see the Temple in 1892." Such boys as Rhea Gregg have a perfect right to wear the white ribbon, as an honorary member of the W. C. T. U.

Our youngest white-ribboner is a boy—rather young, to be sure—but we know he will honor our guild, brought up as he is—when he becomes a man—Baby Carl Balcomb, Colorado Springs, Col. He is only a year old; his wise mother has sent for a mite-box for his use. She says: "When he is old enough to understand he will be taught that he owns an interest in the wonderful Temple. He already wears a dainty white ribbon in the buttonhole of his cloak, and attends the W. C. T. U. meetings, as he is the only baby in our union."

The Amboy W. C. T. U., of Illinois, have sent for seventy-five mite-boxes, and intend to have their $100 raised by next June. The Elmore, Minn., W. C. T. U. have sent for twenty-five boxes, and are planning for a May-day mite-box festival. Mrs. Norton writes that the union is very much interested in the Temple, and is earnestly at work for it. The Tuckahoe, N. J., W. C. T. U. also sends for twenty-five mite-boxes, and has commenced in earnest to raise $100. Mrs. Champion writes that they are very much ashamed that they have not done something before this for the Temple, but they pledge to make up for it the coming year. The W. C. T. U. of Leonard, N. Dak., is trying to raise $100 for the Temple, and sends through Miss Sowles for twenty-five mite-boxes. The Colerain, W. C. T. U., of Ohio, sends for twenty mite-boxes. Mrs. Sidwell writes: "We are anxious to see the Temple fund increase so that the building may speedily grow."

Our Children.

SHOULDER ARMS!

BY M. S. H.

Concerted piece for eight children.

First Boy:

Shoulder arms, together!
Marching on we go,
Ready for the battle
Fearless 'gainst the foe;
Sin, and vice, and evil,
Darkness, dread, and wrong—
We must boldly fight them,
We must march along!
Boys, be brave and dauntless
At your captain's call;
Shoulder arms, together!
Ready, one and all!

Second Boy:

Fight the foe of Passion,
Mighty though he be;
Though he rise in terror,
Make him swiftly flee!
Gentleness will slay him,
Love will overthrow—
Try the tender answer
That shall lay him low.
Conquer, conquer Passion!
Make the giant fall;
Shoulder arms, together,
Ready, one and all!

Third Boy:

Fight the foe of Falsehood,
Lurking ever near;
Truth shall win the battle,
Strike, and never fear;
All deceit and cunning
We proclaim our foe
Falsehood is an evil
All must overthrow.
True, and brave and honest,
Boys, we'll march along;
Shoulder arms, together!
Boyhood's happy throng!

Fourth Boy:

Envy, strife, and malice
All our life oppose;
We must rise and conquer
These our cruel foes;
Take the heav'nly weapons—
For, though young we be,
All things dark and evil
Faith shall cause to flee;
Faith and prayer are weapons
Mighty all our life;
Shoulder arms, together!
Win the Christian's strife.

Fifth Boy:

There's another foeman
That we all must face,
Working dark destruction
Over every place;
Alcohol is deadly—
Cruel, wicked, strong—
Up, and slay the tyrant,
All ye temperance throng!
Lift ye up your banner,
Spread its folds of light;
Shoulder arms, together!
Win the temperance fight!

Sixth Boy:

Who can fight that battle?
Children, young and small;
When the children struggle
Alcohol shall fall;
Come beneath our banner,
Come this very day—
In the temperance army
Bravely march away!
When the children wrestle,
Alcohol must sink—
Shoulder arms, together,
Slay the tyrant, Drink!

Seventh Boy:

We will use the weapon
Of our pledge-book here,
Those who keep to water
Little have to fear;
Touch not, taste not, ever;
Handle not the wine—
We are pledged abstainers,
Let us all combine—
Marching, fighting, battling,
Till the foe shall fall;
Shoulder arms, together!
Ready, one and all!

Eighth Boy:

Not in strength that's human
Can we win the day;
Mortal power can never
Win the temperance fray;
Ask the Lord to help us,
And His succor crave
As we seek to rescue
Souls He died to save;
Struggle for our brothers
At our captain's call;
Shoulder arms, together!
Ready, one and all!

Altogether:

Shoulder arms, together!
Temperance boys we stand,
Pledged to win the triumph,
All across the land;
And strong drink we'll vanquish,
Fighting side by side,
While beneath our banner
Steadfast we'll abide;
Drink is harming thousands,
We must lay him low;
Shoulder arms, together!
Up, and face the foe!

THE RAISING.

CLARA MARCELLE GREENE.

"Boys, do you know what a 'raising' is?" asked papa, who had promised us a story when we gathered about the library fire after tea. Little Ted nestled close to me, and laid his head on my lap.

"A 'raising'?" repeated ten-year-old Otho, with the look and tone of superior wisdom peculiar to his age; "oh, yes, it's something about farms and cows, isn't it?"

"Oh, oh, oh!" derided younger Jack, doubling himself over the knees of his first pants; "I know better than that; it's what you put in puddin's!"

A general shout extinguished poor little Jack, who hung his head and fell to admiring his pants for comfort.

"And what does papa's baby think a 'raising' is?" said papa, stooping over and smothering kisses in little Ted's neck, between his tumbled curls. A queer little shrug of the shoulders and a stifled laugh were the only response, and papa proceeded to gratify the curiosity of his eager listeners.

"'Down East,' where I was born, when a man wanted to build a house or barn, men did not then come, as now, and bring a lot of fine timbers, ready made and fitted, and run up stick after stick, and brace after brace, like canes, so fast that in twenty-four hours the painters are beginning to paint.

"Instead of that, a carpenter sat day after day, patiently hewing by hand great timbers, until enough were hewn to make the square foundation, the upright corners, and the top and ends of the roof. Then the man gave out word to his neighbors to come on a certain day and help him and the carpenter raise the great timbers into position. That was the 'raising.'

"When it was finished, there stood the skeleton of a building to be covered, and the men were all invited into the house for dinner. Besides that, what else do you think they had to cheer them on through the 'raising'?"

"Brass band," guessed Otho, who had headed a procession of seven boys with four torchlights and a harmonica, and felt his blushing honors thick upon him.

"Lemonade," ventured Jack, a good deal subdued by the ignominy of his first failure.

"No, my boys, a jug of rum with a tin cup was set out near the men, who went to it and drank as often as they pleased. Some of them only drank after one of the heaviest timbers was hoisted into place, with much hard straining and tugging, and shouting of orders. Others drank oftener, and at night were quite intoxicated.

"A very sad thing happened at one raising that I remember. The building was a large barn, a hundred feet long, and many men and boys were there, among them a father and son. The son John Dudley, was about fifteen years old, my own age.

"His father was often drunk, and that day proved no exception. John was a handsome, strong-limbed fellow, with a fine head, ruddy cheeks and black eyes, the idol and only hope of his mother, a patient, hard-working woman who had done her best to keep her boy out of his father's footsteps.

"I think he never tasted liquor before. But that day I saw him go around the jug several times till a rough fellow dared him to drink. John was a bold, bright boy, and he laughingly seized the cup and tasted the liquor. Several times afterward I saw him do it, and when he started for home he reeled a little.

"It was a keen, bitter night in December, and soon began to snow. At daybreak a neighbor tapped at our window to know if we had seen John Dudley. He had not reached home, and men were looking for him. My father and I quickly dressed and went to join in the search. Fields, forests, barns and fences were all inspected, but no clue was found till a woman said she saw him crossing her field toward dark, and that he seemed bewildered.

"Jack Simpson and I started that way and soon found tracks in the thin snow. We followed them in silence, with beating hearts.

"Turning the corner of a high stone-heap, Jack suddenly started back with a great cry. There lay the dreadful sight before us. John Dudley lying in the lee of the rock, frozen to death. His cap lay a little way off and the keen wind was blowing through his hair.

"I saw it all at a glance, and stopped for nothing. I ran to turn his mother back, who was following fast behind. But she read the whole terrible truth in my face, and rushed by me like a mad creature. I could not tell you, my dears, any more of that scene. It was plain that the liquor bewildered him, that he lost his way, and being benumbed with the cold and the drink, he lay down under the shelter of the rock to his death.

"So we buried him, in the presence of a sobbing congregation; and God knows at whose door to lay the sin."

Our family circle was hushed when papa finished his story. Little Ted had long before been gathered up in papa's arms with his sleeping head on his shoulder, while Otho and Jack sat looking into the fire with big tears brimming their eyelashes.

A ROUGH sailor, before he bought his ticket to see Munkacsy's picture of Christ, inquired of the ticket-seller: "Is Christ here?" A little child once asked the same question at the Sunday-school door. It might be very properly asked at any church-door: "Is Christ here?" In our hearts, in our homes, in our Sunday-school, in our churches, in all our places of business, in our courts of law, in our legislative halls, in our highest executive positions—that is the all-important question, always and everywhere.—Ex.

The Still Hour.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 27, 1890.

BY REV. C. C. HARRAH.

DAILY BIBLE READING NOTES.

(Luke 8:1-40; Acts 25-28; I Samuel 1, 2.)

Sunday, 27; Luke 8:1-40. Verse 2, The disciples wondered that Jesus even talked to a woman. (Jno. 4:27.) But He welcomed them equally with men, and soon there was about Him a circle of women disciples who ever remained faithful to their Master. Not one enemy of our Lord appears among women in the gospel history. Verse 15, There are many hearers, but there are few of the "honest and good heart" kind. There are the wayside hearers, whose hearts are beaten hard by worldliness; the rocky soil hearers, whose religious natures are thin and shallow; the thorny soil hearers, who surrender themselves to the cares, riches and pleasures of the world. Those who having heard the Word keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience, are the genuine believers in Christ. We need to pray that we may hear with profit.

Monday 28; Acts 25. Verse 11, By means of Paul's appeal to Cæsar, the Lord opened an avenue for His servant, so that he could make known his testimony for Jesus in the capital of the world. The appeal was a necessity on the part of the apostle, and it all seemed to be of man's doing; but Providence was overruling the matter, and the Roman government was made to subserve the purposes and ways of the Kingdom of Jesus. Verse 19, In all his addresses in these times of trial, the apostle made clear the great central truth of the whole Christian faith, that Jesus had risen again, and was alive.

Tuesday, 29; Acts 26. Verse 4, Blessed are those children and youth who are carefully keeping themselves from the sins and wickedness of the world. Paul did not spend his youthful years and strength in carnal lusts and in serving Satan; but he was the friend of virtue, and, so far as his knowledge extended, he lived a strictly religious life. When we have more such boys, the world will be blessed with more strong, noble men, like the great apostle. Verse 28, With many a soul the hour is favorable, the will is aroused, the mind is enlightened, and the heart is touched; but some little thing is allowed to destroy this prospect of salvation, and the treasure that was almost grasped is lost. One is not saved by being almost a Christian.

Wednesday, 30; Acts 27. Verse 21, The true, manly dignity which Paul manifests during this voyage, and the fact that at this time he had come to be so completely under the influence of the spirit of Christ, shows us how the experience of true Christianity works to make the highest and noblest manhood. Verse 22, Christians have to suffer the common evils of life in company with others; but they know that there is an almighty and faithful Lord on high who will never forsake them, and that they shall be protected amid all the evils of the world.

Thursday, 1; Acts 28. Verse 2, Sympathy, compassion and kindness are noble virtues, and Christians should excel all others in practicing them. Verse 14, Paul's heart gained new courage when he again met with brethren. We may be assured that our hearts possess the true power of faith when we love the brethren, desire communion with them, and are strengthened by their faith. I Jno. 3:14.

Friday, 2; I Samuel 1. Verse 10, The daily petitions that ascend to God from distressed souls are such a relief to the burdened hearts of humanity that prayer must be regarded as the greatest privilege and blessing. Verse 28, Samuel was old enough now to be of some service in the sanctuary. Is it the thought of all Christian parents that their little children are the Lord's, and that they should interest and engage them in the work of the church just as early as possible?

Saturday, 3; I Samuel 2. Verse 1, Prayer and praise ought to go together. Verse 25, It was not God's preordination, but their own willful and impenitent disobedience, which was the cause of the destruction of these bad men. Verse 26, A good and reliable boy is certain to make a good man. The books of Samuel give us a history of his noble life, and of the apostate condition of Israel, and the beginning of the nation's kingdom history.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(An enemy hath done this. Matt. 13: 24-30.)

It is the world's favorite argument against religion that the church contains many false professors. The parable, which is the text, teaches us that our Lord Himself did not expect that it would be otherwise. It also teaches us that the church or religion should not be blamed for this, for it is the work of the devil.

1. There is a diabolical influence which we have to withstand in building up the Kingdom of Christ. Our Lord teaches that this devil takes away the word of the kingdom out of the hearts that are beaten hard by worldliness, and that refuse to hear with attention and purpose. Luke 8: 12. If there is not a devil at work, why did our Lord, not in the parable of the sower, but in the private explanation of the parable to His disciples, speak as He does of the evil one? Read Eph. 4: 27; 6: 11; I Pet. 5: 8; I Jno. 3: 8, 10; II Cor. 2: 11.

2. Fair-minded people will not charge to the church and to Christianity that which is against the gospel. If there are tares in the kingdom, they are not of God's planting but Satan's. A field of wheat that has grown from good seed is not to be condemned because there are some weeds in it which have no business to be there.

3. There will be a time when our Lord, who is the Head of the church, will put an end to Satan's work, and the tares shall be separated from the wheat; so the text teaches.

The Household.

THE HEAVENLY AIRS.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

Work is the fresh air of the soul!
It clears the heavy brain,
Quickens the pulses of the mind,
Warms thought to action, and the blind
And sluggish will, sunk into ease
Of ineffective lethargies,
It stirs to life again.

Grief is the cold air of the soul!
It chills and blights the flowers,
In urgent gusts it sways and smites,
Freezing the source of all delights;
But roots grow strong by dint of storm
And, when the spring awakes they form
The growth of happier hours.

Love is the warm air of the soul!
It reacheth far and wide,
Clasping all life with healing touch,
Wooing the little into much,
Making brown branch and buried root
To bud and blossom and bear fruit
Like the sweet summer-tide.

Blow, heavenly winds, on every soul!
And stir them constantly;
Sting us and quicken us and bless,
Relax not in thy urgent stress,
Till out of toil and love and pain
Full strength and stature we attain,
And are let home by thee.

THE WREN'S NEST.

BY MRS. E. M. ADAMS.

It rested so prettily in the spray of woodbine that swayed to and fro in the west wind, and Father Wren and Mother Wren chirped about it, and wove in a thread of crimson silk that childish fingers had dropped upon the grass, and were always busy making the bird home prettier and prettier, when I thought it perfect before. Morning, noon and night I watched it, and many a half-hour of revery was brightened by the wee, merry home-holders in the woodbine outside my window.

The wrens chirped all day—she, sitting upon the nest, in mild, sweet notes; he, in the overhanging branch, in jubilant, ringing tones.

"What do they say, mamma?" asked Peter, his brown head against my shoulder.

"I don't know, my laddie," I answered.

"Not one word?"

"Not one word, my son."

"Well, I do," said Peter. "He says, 'That little boy wants to see our birdies awful bad,' and she says, 'So he shall! So he shall!'" and Peter bounded away to hail a playfellow who was sedately walking a fence a few yards away.

So I sat where my boy had left me, and one of the elves who live in the woodbine blossoms, whistled in my ear. Just a wee, sweet whistle that sounded like some faint fairy music, and lo! I heard the wrens, and knew what they were saying.

"I think just as you do, Jenny," said Mr. Wren. "Peter will do to trust about the nest; the boy seems to love us. But he might bring friends to see us, and trouble might follow."

"No, Father Wren, I am not afraid, for his mother sits here by us, and she thinks too much of your beautiful songs, my dear, to have us disturbed."

Mr. Wren bowed profoundly to his little wife, and burst out in an extra gush of melody in return for the compliment.

"Shiftless creature!" said Mrs. Jenny in rather a sharp way, when the music ended.

"Whom do you mean, madam?" asked Bob Wren abruptly, in a tone of wounded feeling.

"Not you, of course, you foolish fellow, but Peter's mamma. Here she sits, day after day, looking away to the hills, scribbling, tossing the papers about, and singing the same tune, over and over, till I'm almost distracted. She doesn't hear that blue-eyed boy when he teases for a tail to his kite, and the baby cries before she remembers to cuddle her. Before I'd let another thought come between me and my darlings!"—and Mrs. Jenny looked daggers at me through the leaves. "I'd like to tell her my mind for once," she added as a parting shot.

"I'm sure she is a very nice woman," said Bob. "She never forgets the crumbs on the window-sill for us, and she looks at me a great deal oftener than at the hills over there." (Here Bob prinked a little.) "She loves that baby with all her heart, and as to Peter, he does tease a good deal, Jenny." Not a word spoke Mrs. Wren. "Now," said Bob, "there's a woman to dodge," and I, peeping through the woodbine foliage, saw a small, quick woman go by. "That woman knows too much. She knows whose turn it is to have the next church social, when the library board meetings occur, who has broken his Loyal Legion pledge, who has given to support the new coffee house, and who has always forgotten her pocket-book. She knows when Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward will appear upon the lecture platform, what the cost of the minister's wife's new dress was; she can tell how many children the Prince of Wales has, but she doesn't know if the larder is empty at home; she doesn't know if her husband is sick; she doesn't know if her young hopeful, Charles Augustus, has played truant, and chased kittens or stolen plums all the forenoon."

"Fie, Bob!" said Jenny, "you talk terribly."

"Only to you, my dear. It is a great relief to express my thoughts to you," and Bob gave an affectionate glance at his mate.

"Did you ever notice, Bob, how elegant and fine Mr. Turn-about is when the young ladies come to play lawn tennis? how he smiles and seems so happy, and pets his children and is courteous to his wife; and when the guests are gone, and the game is done, he scolds because the front door has not been locked, says his wife is no player, snaps the baby's fingers for reaching after the bright geranium from which he picked a bouquet for Miss Lamode, and sends the children in tears to bed? I feel dreadfully about that man," and Jenny snuggled closer the five wee hopes beneath her breast.

"He is all well enough," said Bob, "only a trifle irritable. His wife will tell you the same."

"Oh, his wife!" quoth Jenny. "Bob, do you know the minister we heard when we sat in the trellis by the great window of the church, that May Sabbath? Well, when you kindly sent me for a little flit while you minded the nest, I perched in a clambering rose bush, and saw him and his family at breakfast. Do you remember his sermon that day, from the text that is golden, the rule that is golden:

"'Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you.' We said it was beautiful, we called him a great good man, and you said God loved him. At his breakfast table he spoke hard words. His wife's eyes were tearful. His children sat cowering. He ate selfishly of the best, and helped no one, but found fault wherever the untaught servant had made wreck of his wife's careful plans for his comfort. Bob Wren, do you suppose God loves that man?'

A long silence in the woodbine.

"Jenny, my dear, do you remember our 'Ne'er-do-well' of the brood last summer, a selfish, wicked child?"

"Ah! Do not call him that, my poor baby! I love him, I hope for him still. He will be a bonny bird yet, I trust," and Madam Wren dropped her loving head in sorrow.

"I, too, love him," said Bob. "I, too, hope he will do right. It would pain me to hear a word of blame given him. He is our child, dear to us in spite of all his faults"

"Yes," murmured Jennie.

"Ah!" said Bob, "God is the father of His children. None so wicked but are dear to Him; failing often in the littlest acts of grace, yet dear to Him as our poor nestling is to us. How we have wounded the good God's heart by condemning His children!"

An elfin whistle sounded again in my ear. I heard only Bob Wren's melody afloat on the air, but softly in my heart an echo sang, "The greatest of these is charity."

SISTERS.

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

There are young ladies living in fine homes, free from self-support, and special domestic care, who have nothing to do but "enjoy themselves;" yet whose hearts are as heavy as lead with thinking of the troubles of those to whom they might carry worlds of blessing, if only opportunity were given.

They look upon their own lives as wretchedly useless, yet they do not see how to make them better.

Their fathers amassed wealth. Their mothers did their part. Their brothers share the business. They have a full portion of the family energy; yet there is nothing for them but to make calls, talk nonsense, haunt dressmakers, ride about, listen to gossip that pours itself over one who cannot escape, like the dropping of water on the scalp of a Chinaman dying by low torture. Since they are in no haste to marry, they must let life wear on, while their individuality, as a factor for good, wears out and they settle into the role of "auntie" for their married sisters' irrepressibles.

A lady who had broken through social restraints, and taken up public work on behalf of the needy, was questioned by a gentleman in regard to the fearful sacrifice she was making. "Never happier in my life," was her reply. "As you know, I was most lovingly cared for in my home, but I could not shut my ears against the moans of the poor people. I always wanted to die to escape the responsibility that the pride of my family would not let me meet."

He looked at her as though she were a strange, new specimen. "You are phenomenal."

His wife raised her quiet, brown eyes to his face. "No, dear, you are mistaken. She has a true woman's heart; that's all."

What can these young women do? There is no measuring what they might do if they were given a chance.

The Romish church has found its best capital in the answer to that question. Its straight bonneted women, gliding about through hospital wards, caring for little children, hiding the outcast's sorrow, baptizing the dying, raising money for the church, managing the finance and affairs of their great Orders, those "sisters" steady the triple tiara more surely than any other of its props.

The "High" church of England has taken the cue in giving scope and opportunity to its women of culture and means. The costume and vows of its "sisters" differ but little from those of the older church.

The "Low" church of England has its Mildmay "sisters," a hundred ladies who are free from vows, living in community, supporting themselves, and caring for a bewildering number of benevolent institutions.

The Wesleyan "Sisters of the People" in London live together, paying their own board, and toiling tirelessly, but most joyfully for the poor.

Some of them had a serious time getting the consent of their friends to their work. The grandfather of one of them is the richest Wesleyan in Great Britain. He has a fortune of twenty millions. She said to me in her quiet, beautiful way, "They'll do anything for me if I'll give up this work; but, you know, I must obey God."

In this generous, gracious America, there must be scores of young ladies with similar capabilities and "call." They could be placed in a plain, pleasant home, with a chance to study and teach the Bible, and any amount of good work among the needy. Their beautiful ministrations would make the deserts of vice in our great cities "bud and blossom as the rose."

General Booth in calling for officers for his Army specifies certain qualifications that would be quite the thing for all who are or ought to be candidates for Christian work. They must be "anxious to devote their lives to soul winning, with character that will bear any amount of investigation, perfectly ready to speak, pray, visit, sit still, travel a hundred miles, or die at any moment, willing to be led and taught, and to be sent home again if they do not succeed; willing to be misrepresented, misunderstood, and undervalued."

Who can tell what a benefaction a score of such young ladies would be in this great, miserable, wicked old New York. I would be glad to hear from them at 146 W. Sixteenth Street.

REST.

Because the tired, busy housekeeper cannot have an hour, more or less, for sleep during the day, she is very apt to think that it is not worth while to lie down for a few minutes' rest; but that is a serious mistake on her part, as she can easily prove by experiment. Very often the mere change of position and closing of the eyes, if only for five or ten minutes, will remove the strain from muscle and nerve, which, if continuous, means exhaustion sooner or later. Sleep is not a necessity in day-time rest, although it is always a blessing if one has the time and inclination for it, but next best are the brief snatches of complete bodily and mental relaxation, in which, to make the most of them, the mind should be concentrated resolutely on the thought of rest, to the exclusion of everything else; all cares and perplexities must be put aside for the time being, and the thought of rest alone be kept uppermost. It can be done by persistence, and the result is well worth the effort, for the burdens that have been laid down are wonderfully lightened by these brief resting spells. Some people can rest in this way without lying down, wherever they may chance to be, simply by closing the eyes and withdrawing their attention from all surroundings; it is no doubt a habit of the greatest practical value, and is like oiling machinery to prevent it from wearing out.—Exchange.

THE INFLUENCE OF DRESS.

A writer on men's dress says: "The influence of dress upon the welfare, manners, and morals of mankind is but too rarely estimated at the proper measure of importance. A nation whose people are garbed in slovenly coverings, apparently content to accept this condition, whether as a result of poverty or of prevalent vices, will be found at a painful standstill in the march of civilization. There is nothing that so blunts the ambition and hopes of a community as the lapsing into a state of indifference to personal appearance which permits the masses to go about ragged and unclean. The effect of an utter disregard among the poorer classes as to what shall be the nature and condition of their apparel not only has a most blighting effect upon their progress, but it is found that such a negligence will, by degrees, degrade the standard of manhood down along the decline toward the veriest animal depravity.

"There should be but slight excuse for the civilized men of to-day being badly dressed. The existing customs and general plan of attire are so prescribed as to make a vulgarly garbed man a creature of accident or a victim of his own folly, rather than a necessary evil. The matter of fact dressing of the men of this country conforms with the striving and hurry of the age. It is practical but not artistic."

CHOICE BITS FROM GEORGE MACDONALD.

The whole history of the Christian life is a series of resurrections. Every time a man bethinks himself that he is not walking in the light, that he has been forgetting himself, and must repent; that he has been asleep and must awake; that he has been letting his garments trail, and must gird up the loins of his mind; every time this takes place there is a resurrection in the world. Yes, every time that a man finds his heart is troubled, that he is not rejoicing in God, a resurrection must follow; a resurrection out of the night of troubled thoughts into the gladness of the truth. For the truth is, and ever was, and ever must be, gladness, however much the souls on which it shines may be obscured by the clouds of sorrow, troubled by fears, or shot through with the lightnings of pain.

If all the labor of God is to bring sons into glory, lifting them out of the abyss of evil bondage, up to the rock of his pure freedom, the only worthy end of life must be to work in the same direction—to be a fellow-worker with God. But I was taught that the way to help others was not to tell them their duty, but myself to learn of Him who bore our griefs and carried our sorrows. As I learned of Him, I should be able to help them. . . . I have a burning desire to help in making the world clean—if it be only by sweeping one little room in it. I want to lead some poor, stray sheep home—home to the bosom of God, where alone man is true man.

We must not choose our neighbor; we must take the neighbor that God sends us. In him, whoever he be, lies hidden or revealed, a beautiful brother. . . . Thus will love spread and spread in wider and stronger pulses, till the whole human race will be sacredly lovely. . . But there are those whose first impulse is ever to repel and not to receive. Learn they may and learn they must; even these may grow in grace until a countenance unknown will awake in them a yearning of affection, rising to pain, because there is for it no expression, and they can only give the man to God, and be still.

Education, so-called, is a fine thing, and might be a better thing; but there is an education, that of life, which, when seconded by a pure will to learn, leaves the schools behind. . . . For life is God's school, and they that will listen to the Master there, will learn at God's speed.

TREATMENT OF INEBRIATE CRIMINALS.

Is this Christian nation dealing with the victims of strong drink in the best way to secure their restoration to manhood, or do our judicial processes in regard to drunkards savor much of the spirit which a century ago believed insanity to be an indwelling demon to be driven out by the lash? If our treatment of drunkard criminals is right, it ought to produce reformation; does it? Last year Massachusetts appointed Dr. A. A. Miner, Dr. George C. Shattuck, and Mr. John Tyler a Commission to examine into the treatment of drunkards in city institutions. They made detailed investigations into the legal machinery of Boston, and visited correctional institutions in various parts of the country. They report that they discovered a general concurrence of opinion that the conditions for securing the best economic and moral results are yet wanting. The common method of dealing with men arrested for drunkenness is to fine them or commit them to prison. The fine, if paid at all, generally must be paid by the hard-working wife, and imprisonment with common criminals only intensifies the evil. This is proved by the fact that the usual consequence of one such imprisonment is a worse "drunk," for which a second incarceration is deemed necessary. The Commissioners report the case of a woman yet young who had been committed for drunkenness fifty-seven times. During one year Massachusetts punished by imprisonment 17,000 drunkards, over 16,000 of whom had before been committed for the same offence. Statistics show that not one in a thousand inebriates who have once been committed to jail ever recover their manhood.

The reason is not far to seek; penal treatment pays no attention to the physical and mental condition of the inebriate. Regarded as a criminal he is placed in association with the lowest felons where the worst elements of his nature are aroused and strengthened. His self-respect, too, is destroyed and with it goes a strong recuperative agency. Ignoring the element of disease—all inebriates are diseased—this treatment neglects all means of restoration to health, and confines him in such unhygienic surroundings as tend to increase and perpetuate his malady. For we must recognize that every inebriate is a diseased man before we get at the root of this matter. That he is so, no intelligent student of scientific temperance can doubt. In even the moderate drinker, alcohol has wrought its legitimate work in disturbing the functions of the vital organs, and producing deterioration of nerve tissue. This brings on the alcohol craze which as the disease progresses, passes beyond the power of self-control, and its victim is known to the medical profession as a dipsomaniac.

What is needed to cure him? Clearly not degrading punishment, amid unhealthy surroundings, but medical care and healthful surroundings coupled always with absolute prohibition of alcoholics.

Instead of sending the chronic inebriate again and again and again to jail, he should be committed to an inebriate hospital, properly arranged for the especial purpose of effecting his cure. He should be committed for not less than one year and the hospital should have power of detention, if necessary for a cure, beyond that time. The hospital should have a farm to afford outdoor work to the patients, an important element in their recovery. There should also be workshops for employment when out-door work is impracticable. The patients should be in charge of specialists in nervous diseases, and every effort should be made to build up the shattered nervous system, to strengthen the weakened will, to inspire hope and revive self-respect.

This is the work that the Massachusetts State Asylum for Inebriates proposes to do; private institutions have been doing it in some degree, but they have been hampered by the very fact of being private; there was no authority back of them to commit patients and enforce their stay. This difficulty will be overcome in a state or county institution.

We have firm faith that such an institution will succeed; looked at from the standpoint of mere dollars and cents it is more economical as well as more humane than our present method of dealing with inebriates. The number of arrests for drunkenness and crimes committed while drunk, is increasing with fearful rapidity; the expense of courts, jails, prisons and insane asylums rendered necessary to deal with these cases, entails enormous expense; and figures show that these arrests are very largely re-arrests. In all city prisons are found the "chronic drunks," who reside there almost permanently, their intervals between release and recommitment being about the same as the vacations allowed officers and employés of the institution.

While there they are earning nothing and gaining no power of resistance; when they go out they are weaker, physically and morally than when they went in, hence fall an easier prey to temptation.

Now try the other plan; as soon as a man is arrested he is sent, not to the Bridewell for thirty days, but to the inebriate asylum for a year. Here every possible aid to recuperation and reformation is afforded, and the chances are that at least five out of every ten cases will be cured, so that at the end of the year the state receives back an able-bodied, sober citizen, ready to do his part in the work of the world. Nor has he been a dead weight of expense during the year of his detention; the physical labor, which is a part of the regimen necessary for his recovery, is productive labor which goes far toward making the institution self-supporting. Even had he earned nothing, the expense of keeping him in the institution would not probably exceed the cost of his frequent arrests, trials and imprisonments under the present system, while at the end of the year, instead of being the dead weight upon the community which he now is, he will be self-supporting and able to provide for those dependent upon him. Thus an incidental good will be accomplished in lifting the burden entailed by the support of drunkards' wives and children, either by charity or in poorhouses. The plan is worth trying; it cannot possibly produce worse results than the penal system now employed, and it promises something infinitely better.

"YET SHOW I UNTO YOU A MORE EXCELLENT WAY."

The correlation of forces is a very prominent and pleasing feature of W. C. T. U. work. No department "liveth to itself"; the work of each is interlaced with the work of all in such a way that progress in one tends to the good of all. Often one department seems like a golden circlet binding all these interlacing threads together. Thus our Y work inspires the young womanhood of the nation to labor "In His Name" in social, juvenile, evangelistic, literature, legislative, and all other lines. The literature department supplies helps for every other; the evangelistic department calls all others to the work of soul-saving and Bible study; in the same way does the comparatively new department of School of Methods serve all others and bind them into one.

Last summer we stood on the parade ground of the most important cavalry post in the country, and watched the drill which, continued day after day, week in, week out, transforms the "awkward squad" into disciplined soldiers. Man and horse alike were drilled to such accuracy and precision of movement that, as they wheeled and circled around us, it seemed that the fabled Centaurs were present in real flesh and blood, so perfectly one did horse and rider seem.

This, we thought, symbolizes the work of the School of Methods. It should thus unify the forces of the W. C. T. U., and train them to accuracy and precision of aim and of action. No army was ever more magnificently officered than is ours; none ever had better raw material; it needs, only, that every one of its soldiers should be thoroughly drilled in the Manual of Arms of this peaceful war "For God and Home and Native Land," to make it invincible. And this is what its training schools seek to do.

Their motto is, "The servant of the Lord must be apt to teach, patient," and their object to so train the captains and the colonels of the white-ribbon army that they may be fitted to teach the more excellent way of doing their work to every local union in the land.

Like most of the departments it was not made, it grew; grew naturally from a felt need and a small beginning. The Annual Leaflet gives as its aim the establishing of schools at summer assemblies and camp-meetings which shall bring the society's work to the attention of the public, and for the study of the best methods of work in each department, to the end that trained workers may take the place of those now unskilled. This is one of its aims, but not the only one; it has gradually outgrown these bounds and now, while not neglecting its first works, it stretches out helping hands to small gatherings as well as large, and seeks to make itself a felt power for good in every county convention in the land. Let us look at its work in each of these phases.

Nestling in the shade of the magnificent forest that crowns the highest bluff of Lake Michigan between Milwaukee and Chicago, is the assembly grounds of the Lake Bluff Convocation. Here every summer for more than half a score of years, have come the leaders of temperance thought for conference. Being a gathering of leaders rather than of masses, it seemed unlikely soil for the Training School to grow in. But it did take root here and so grew that like the mustard seed, its product became a great tree and many sweet-voiced birds rested in its branches.

We called it a Training School at first, but as the work enlarged, and with it the comprehension of its needs, we changed the name to the more modest one it now bears, School of Methods, reserving the other for that bright fruition of our hopes that, God willing, shall some day materialize beneath the dome of our glorious Temperance Temple.

The school started in a very unpretentious way in Clark chapel, with less than a score of women as pupils. But their teachers were the leaders of our hosts, and both teachers and taught waited upon the Lord and were taught of Him. Soon husbands and sons, strolling by, heard through the open windows, the wise words that were being spoken there; they came in and others followed till the place was too strait for us and we went to the Tabernacle. Here the school has been held for several years, with an average attendance of about two hundred, many of the most enthusiastic among its pupils being gentlemen.

What do they do there? For answer we wish you could look through "Pansy's" eyes. One summer she with her husband and son came into a Chicago depot, worn out with a long, hot, dusty ride. It was Saturday afternoon and they were questioning where they should spend the Sabbath; just then a whiff of wind wafted a handbill to their feet; Dr. Alden picked it up mechanically and read aloud an announcement of Lake Bluff Convocation, then in session. "Why not go there—it sounds cool," he said, and they went. That Sabbath was so delightful that they lingered for a few days. Monday morning, as "Pansy" tells the story, they saw on the bulletin board the notice of the W. C. T. U. Training School and went to it, having very faint ideas of what they should find. She says that she expected to find a children's meeting, of some new fashion, but what she did find was a body of earnest men and women being taught by an expert how best to conduct a gospel meeting, and in the days that followed she saw similar training in juvenile work, social purity, literature and other departments. Before she had known about W. C. T. U. work, now she felt that she was at the heart of it. She came, she saw, she was conquered, and henceforth the W. C. T. U. held a warmer place in her heart than it had ever held before.

And this is the result wherever our schools are held in the great assemblies; they are object lessons whose teaching is definite and convincing of the practical work of the W. C. T. U. Did they accomplish nothing else, this education of public sentiment would be their sufficient reason for being.

Yet this is only incidental; their main work is teaching the more excellent way of doing temperance work in all its branches. As Lake Bluff is so near the National headquarters that it claims the immediate aid of national general officers, it holds, as Miss Pugh expresses it, the capability of being the standard of all schools of like kind, and therefore, as we cannot sketch them all, we make it their representative, and give its program for the coming session as a specimen of the work done in these summer gatherings.

Its sessions commence Monday, July 7, and continue eight days when it merges itself in the great Convocation; each morning, at eight o'clock, the children's meeting is held under the leadership of Miss Northam, Illinois' superintendent of juvenile work; at eight-thirty is the daily prayer meeting in charge of Miss Pugh. At nine begins the regular school work, with an hour's teaching in "How to Study the Bible," by Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer and Mrs. Esther Pritchard, as teachers; at ten o'clock each day comes a lecture on "Economic or Scientific Temperance." Economic temperance occupies the first four days and scientific temperance—including one on the action of alcohol on the nervous system, by Prof. Ford, of the Calhoun School, Chicago; one on its effects on the stomach, liver and kidneys, by Dr. Jessie Brown; one on tobacco by Mrs. Buell, and one on liquor's war against labor, physiologically considered by the superintendent, fill up the last four. The last hour of the morning is devoted to drills in methods of work, the departments to be taken up being physical culture, Y work, railroad work, foreign work, purity in literature and art, Sunday-school temperance, juvenile work, and parliamentary practice. In the afternoons Mrs. Anna B. Curry, of the Boston school of expression, will conduct classes in her specialty, in which she has no superior. She has never been West before and from the difficulty she has had in freeing herself from eastern engagements sufficiently to come, there is little prospect of her coming again. Ladies and gentlemen who ever appear "in public on the stage" will do well to seize this opportunity of learning how to do it with the best possible grace and efficiency. This is the only "pay class" at Lake Bluff; let it be a full one.

North Carolina, under the leadership of her president, Mrs. W. Woody, has outstripped all other states in the accomplishment of the other aim of the department—making itself felt in county conventions. Last year she planned a series of these which were most successfully carried out by Mrs. M. L. Wells, National organizer. It has culminated in a permanentorganization, the Asheville W. C. T. U. Assembly, of which Mrs. Wells is president. It is to have its first session next July and August, with a School of Methods and a week's Bible study under Dean Wright. A royal-hearted lady, Mrs. Ray, has donated delightfully located grounds among the mountains which surround Asheville; the W. C. T. U. of that city is raising a fund for a permanent building, and send a most cordial invitation to their friends everywhere to come and spend a fortnight in the wonderful climate and amid the more wonderful scenery of that charming resort. Mrs. Wells writes that she feels sure the ground could be deeded to the N. W. C. T. U., and this could be made the National school. The meeting begins July 20, and continues two weeks; every effort is being made to have this initial meeting a grand success; Miss Willard, Anna Gordon, Miss Griffin and other noted workers both North and South, will be there and the meeting cannot help being an inspiration. Besides its appointed program we feel sure it will do a blessed work in drawing the hearts of our sisters North and South closer together. We only need the opportunity of working together to be melted into one. Thus this especial school, like the department that it represents, finds its mission in the correlation of forces and the interlacing of many golden threads into one. May the strand thus woven prove the clue leading us out of the labyrinth into the "more excellent way," and may its inspiration be felt in every county of every state represented.

THE SPRING ELECTIONS.

The recent elections have awakened more than the usual off year interest. Wisconsin has gained the attention of the whole country by the prominence given to compulsory education as embodied in the "Bennett Law." The issue was upon the repeal of this law, which requires all persons having control of children between the ages of seven and fourteen, to send them to school at least twelve weeks in every year. It defines a school: "No school shall be regarded as a school under this act unless there shall be taught therein as a part of the elementary education of children, reading, writing, arithmetic, and United States History in the English language." No reference is made to parish schools of any denomination if these requirements are met. The Bible has already been discarded from the Wisconsin schools under sentence of sectarianism and bigotry, so there would seem to be nothing in the educational system of that state which need interfere with the religion or irreligion of any voter. The law does not proscribe the teaching of German or any foreign language. It simply declares that eighty-four weeks' tuition in the English language as contained in United States History are essential to the education of an American citizen. This seems a very moderate demand of the state upon its adopted citizens. Had it been plainly stated we believe it would have appeared so to them. But demagogue politicians combined to misrepresent and mislead the German population through its tenderest sentiment, love for "der vaterland." They were told it would rob them of the speech in which their cradle songs were sung, that it would prohibit the teaching of the German language and deny the right of trial by jury. Milwaukee was the chief battle site. In that city where beer is king, and neither party dare assail its power, anything which can be made to serve as an issue is welcome to both parties. The Bennett law met the need, and the Democrats opposing it, attracted the unreasoning vote—a vote always large where beer is plenty. The law is a copy of the Illinois compulsory education bill, but it has proved such a spirited topic for campaign purposes, that the agitation seems likely to spread, and an attempt at repeal is now anticipated in Illinois.

Prohibition party gains are conceded in many localities, and in many more the report is: "About the same as two years ago," which amounts to gain, as the general vote is much lighter than in presidential years. In some form, the principle of prohibition has figured in nearly every contest. It is the Banquo at every political feast, whether it appear in humble grave clothes as "no license," or heralded by candidates, calling itself "a party." It is an invincible spirit for which a body is being prepared. Its advent to power is hastened by every act of increasing arrogance on the part of the saloon. The people agree in refusing to tolerate saloon autocracy; they differ as to the best methods for deposing it. High license and prohibition are to be put on trial in Nebraska this fall. It is the most important campaign ever inaugurated in American politics. Nebraska herself, and high license Illinois are the witnesses on the one hand, prohibition Kansas and Iowa on the other.

THE methods of the women voters in Kansas are most interesting. They register in large numbers that they may not be found with empty lamps, in case they are needed to light the path. Then if an issue comes which jeopardizes the home, or good government, they go to the polls. If all is well they do not take the trouble. This accounts for the fact that in some places the vote is so much lighter than the registration. They hold themselves a moral reserve force in municipal politics, aggressive only when moral exigencies demand their interference. This may not be right. We would like to see a full vote polled at every election, but "limited suffrage" will doubtless always mean a limited poll. In Oskaloosa the women declined renomination, saying they had brought the city out of debt and put it on a good financial footing, and they were ready to turn it over to the men again. In Topeka the woman's vote was very light, no special interest being at stake, but in Emporia there was an increase of fifty per cent over last year. The proposition was to reduce the salaries of school teachers. The women's platform was "good salaries for good teachers." They supported it by voice and vote and carried it to victory. The New York World, in a letter showing bitter prejudice against woman suffrage, still records this high tribute to the newly-fledged voters. It reports an interview with Mrs. J. M. Thurston, wife of an eminent banker in Topeka. She says:

Most of the women who vote in Topeka are of Republican affiliations, but that cuts no figure with us. If the Democratic candidates of the municipal offices are, in our opinion, superior men morally, mentally and socially, they get our votes every time. Kansas ladies have three test questions to put to or about every candidate. Is he unqualifiedly and for all time in favor of prohibition? Is he moral in his private life? Is he competent to perform his duties to the fullest satisfaction? If all these are answered satisfactorily respecting the candidates of both parties, then we naturally lean towards the candidate of our own party. But the candidate who is weak under any of these tests does not get the vote of the ladies.

Wherever this broad independence of party for morality's sake is thrown into the bitter waters of politics there is healing, and moral measures cease to cast their fruit.

IOWA has again spoken. One of the last words of the adjourning legislature—a word which the nation bent its ear to hear, was "no-license." We wish it might have been spoken with more force. The small majorities were enough to unite the temperance elements of the state for defense, as it is sure to unite the opposition in the hope of next time electing members favorable to its interests. Local option was lost in the House by only two votes. In the Senate the Democratic caucus license bill received twenty-one, while twenty-nine were cast against it. The Lawrence license bill, a Republican measure, fared worse, not receiving the party vote which supported the caucus bill. It failed on engrossment by a vote of thirty-four to thirteen. This effort to overthrow the prohibitory law of Iowa shows the work of an enemy in the dark. Uncovering it at this time was premature, and would not have been done before the next legislative session, but for the impending campaign in Nebraska. Prohibition in Nebraska means great loss to the liquor trade. Hence this desperate move in Iowa. The re-submission agitation in Kansas, which largely exists "on paper" in rum-subsidized journals, is of the same color. This is no time or occasion for discouragement, but rather for great hope and increased effort. God, the right—and Nebraska—are ours.

"We see the victory from afar,
By faith we bring it nigh."

MISSES WILLARD and Gordon are to start about the middle of April for a trip extending from Sioux City, Iowa, to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and from Asheville, N. C., to St. Paul, Minn.

An old gentleman in New Hampshire gives this as his verdict on the race after an experience of eighty years. A white-ribboner makes the report. "I have known lots o' folks in the course o' my life, and something was the matter with the hull on 'em." Another old gentleman reports in this fashion, after a long pilgrimage on the way of life: "I have had any quantities o' different kinds o' troubles, only the most on 'em hain't never happened."

One of the neatest as well as the newsiest of our numerous state organs is the Pennsylvania Bulletin, the first number of which was issued in February. It is ably edited by the state president, Mrs. Mary H. Jones, and artistically published by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Henrietta H. Forrest. The office of the paper is at the state headquarters, 1305 Arch street, Philadelphia.

A second edition of the "Flag Festival," a charming entertainment by Mrs. Mary B. Ingham, has been ordered. This fact alone proves its success, but a word of explanation may serve to add emphasis. This is a processional entertainment for and by the young folks of America. Its object is to cultivate a love of our national flag and a love of country, and to turn this laudable patriotism into channels of influence and usefulness. The grand processional march of forty-two states led by the Goddess of Liberty, introduces the program, and is followed by bright speeches from each of the states, enumerating its special attractions. Afterwards a beautiful flag drill is participated in by the representatives of the states and territories, and the origin of the stars and stripes is told by a small boy wearing a tri-colored scarf. This entertainment is confidently recommended. All orders should be sent to Mrs. Mary B. Ingham, 203 Franklin Ave., Cleveland, O., price twenty-five cents.

The State W. C. T. U. of Georgia meets May 6 to 8, in Rome, and adjourns to meet with the State Temperance Association of Georgia in Augusta, May 9. Mrs. Sibley, president of the state union, is urging on the local option election in Augusta, her own city, also in Atlanta. She is a true white-ribboner, and the leader of the movement in Georgia, by right of experience and courage. The liquor dealers are so much exercised that they have called a meeting of their protective association.

In reply to a letter requesting his opinion of the movement inaugurated by THE UNION SIGNAL for letters to the Czar of Russia asking clemency for political prisoners, Mr. George Kennan sends word to the following effect: "I think if the women of America should petition the Czar of Russia on behalf of the women of Russia it would no doubt have a great effect. I think it an excellent thing to do." Mrs. S. F. Grubb of Lawrence, Kansas, who sent this message has presented the subject to several of the literary societies of her city, also at a called meeting of the Inter-State Social Science Association, which will no doubt indorse the movement.

Advance! is the order of the day in all the states, and in none more so than in Minnesota, forty-seven new unions having been organized there since the National Convention in November. The department of Franchise is being pushed with vigor, through its sixty-seven local superintendents. Gospel and Mothers' Meetings are held frequently and the Loyal Temperance Legion and Demorest Medal Contests are arousing more attention than ever known before in the state, on the necessity and advantages of well enforced constitutional prohibition.

The first explicit response that has come to the request for a membership crusade is from one of our oldest white-ribboners, Madam Willard, who promptly secured another member, decorated her with a white ribbon, and triumphantly bore her to the local meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Evanston, when it was out in force April 2. Who next? I verily believe the mothers in Israel will outstrip their daughters in this race. It is always so. Those of less physical ability are likely to be in the forefront of the hardest battle when it is on the moral plane.

A LITTLE QUEEN IN FAR-OFF INDIA.

[As the serious labors of missionary life are most frequently presented, we thought it would be of interest to our readers to give them this chapter out of a young girl's first experiences in a foreign land, told in her own bright, frank way, in a letter to her grandmother; and we can fully believe that Jessie will be no less winning in her work for Christ because her smiles sparkle even through her tears.—ED.]

MY DEAR GRANDMOTHER:—Ever since I have been in India I have thought I would write you a nice long answer to the two letters you sent me before I left America. I wanted to wait till I was "settled" and had some regular work to do, and I wanted to tell you just how my room was arranged so you could be with me and see me in your imagination.

I have no work yet and my room is not in order, but I can't wait any longer; I shall have to write again.

To-night I feel like putting my head in your lap and pouring out all my troubles in your loving ear, for I know of old where to find sympathy. Now that I have spoken of having troubles, they seem to have vanished; still, I think you will be interested in hearing how I have spent the day.

It all began last night at dinner. Miss G. said she and Miss D. had been talking of dividing the work; Miss D. was to look after the meals, and Miss G. was to buy and give out the wood, oil, etc., while the "desserts" fell to my lot. I was very much pleased with the plan, for there is so little I can do while I am struggling to learn the language. After dinner all the cook books were hunted up and the recipes read over. A corn starch pudding and some gingerbread were selected as being the simplest and easiest made, and then I went to bed. The next thing I knew the day had begun.

Miss G. said my rooms must be swept and put in order for Sunday. If I could have taken a good American broom, a basin of water and some soap, I should not have thought this much of a trial, but the brooms are only bunches of rods, sometimes split bamboos and sometimes grass. Our floors are covered with coarse grass matting.

If I could only have told a man what I wanted done, it would not have been so bad, but I can't even talk! Right after breakfast Miss G. and Miss D. start off to visit their schools in Jullunder City and I am left with two rooms to clean, a pudding to make, and some gingerbread besides. Here I am standing in the door, silently watching them drive off. Somehow my heart feels so strange! It keeps getting bigger and bigger—but there is no time for heart troubles to-day. I make a dive for the bed, tear the covers off, throw them on a chair, then carry the bed into the veranda. I suppose I ought to call a man to do this, but I can do it myself, and it is so much easier than to try to tell him what I want done. But, at last, I have done all that I can do, and must submit to the inevitable and call the man. I go to the door and look out. The man is there on the veranda. I turn away and go back into the room. I walk around three or four times, vainly searching for something more to do. I go back to the door again; the man is still there. I open my mouth to speak, but the words choke me, and I go back into the room. My heart begins to grow big again. I am angry. "Why am I such a dunce? Jessie D., this will never do." I resolutely march back to the door. I will speak this time; the man has gone!

You don't know how helpless I felt. Just now who can tell why these lines should come to me?

> "The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
> I will not, I will not, desert to its foes."

I feel better and again go back to the door. The man is there, and in the best way I know how I tell him I want my room cleaned. He looks at me a minute in a rather queer way, and then in a solemn voice says, "Bahut achchla" (very good). I have my doubts about its being "very good," but I will not argue the question with him at present. I now prepare my room for him to sweep; when it is ready I open the dressing-room door to call him. There is a cloud of dust, but no man. Again the painful duty of calling him; but this time I am provoked with him, and there is no nonsense about getting him back. He reappears; my room is swept. I want some furniture moved. I have no idea how to tell him in Hindustani, so I tell him in English. He only looks as if he had no sense, and doesn't offer to move an article. I must try something else. I put my hand on a box, then walk to another box. He smiles. He understands, and puts one large box on top of the other. It looks all wrong, but I let him alone. Using the few words I can, and my hands and arms in making motions, I succeed in getting most of the things moved. It is hard work. I say "Bus" for dismissal,—the man leaves, and as soon as his back is turned I begin tugging at the boxes, and finally succeed in arranging them to my satisfaction.

Just in the midst of it all the "munshi" comes, and I must go to my lessons. I spend two hours reading with him, and then go back to my room. Now all is clean and in good order. The pudding and gingerbread come next. I am feeling better now, and am determined to talk Hindustani as if it were my mother tongue, or at least to use all the words I know. I get along very nicely until I want the cook to bring the little stove, or "anghithi," to cook the pudding on. This is a little charcoal stove. I get the word for stove mixed with the word for dish-pan. I tell him to bring first the stove—no, the dish-pan—no, the stove—and then I don't know which I want! But the cook has a good deal of sense, and thought, as I wanted to cook, the stove was what I needed. Now I am ready, but the saucepan does not fit the top of the "anghithi." All at once the water goes out of the saucepan into the fire, and the ashes fly out of the fire into the pudding. I go on with the pudding, just as if nothing had happened. Now I am ready for the gingerbread. We have no ginger. I say, "ginger, ginger," to the cook, but he does not understand. I get my Hindustani dictionary, and hunt up the word for ginger. He understands, and smilingly starts for the bazaar. When he returns he has a plate of green ginger root! We hold quite a discussion over it, neither of us understanding the other. I get the mustard, and try to make him see it must be like ground mustard. He only delivers a long speech, which is all lost on me. He looks perplexed, and thinks I am very stupid. I am vexed, and know he is stupid!

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose"—again runs through my head. I hear a low voice on the veranda; "The Miss Sahibs have come." I can understand that if it is in Hindustani. The cook and I both smile and turn to see Miss D. and Miss G. They send for powdered ginger, but the man comes back without it. After dinner Miss G. and I go. We search all through the bazaars, but no ginger. We are more anxious than ever to have gingerbread for Sunday. The cook says there is still one more place, quite a distance from our house. We send him. It is after five o'clock and he returns without it. I am determined now to have gingerbread whether or no; so I make it—all but the ginger! I forget to dissolve the soda in hot water—it looks lumpy in the molasses and will not foam. I put more soda in. The gingerbread smells horribly of soda! This is the last straw—I cannot stand anything more. I tell my trouble to Miss G. She only laughs and says I am having my "experiences." I am tired and almost ready to cry, but the idea of a missionary crying over gingerbread is so ridiculous—it makes me laugh. Now the cook calls me to look at the bread. I hate to go!

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose"—I will go. Would you believe it?—that gingerbread is splendid! the best I ever ate, almost. If it only had some ginger in it it would be perfect. I was sure we would have to throw it all away. I hope you won't laugh over my troubles—they are all gone now, and I need not have had them at all had I only believed

> "The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
> I will not, I will not desert to its foes."

Good night, dear. Your

DELAWARE.

GENERAL STATE NOTES.

There came to me the other day a bright letter from a Newport Y, telling of a successful sociable at which six new members were gained, an entertainment given for the benefit of the Temperance Temple, and a quilt made at the business meetings of the year for the Temperance Hospital It is pleasant to imagine the hum of cheerful voices keeping time to the cutting of squares, and sewing together, stitch by stitch. And to picture the writing upon the white squares, messages of comfort from God's own Word, for the weary prisoners of pain. And thus, for the past few months, the entire W. C. T. U. of Delaware has been working away, often it may have seemed stitch by stitch, and always with the same definiteness of purpose that accomplished the comforting quilt. Soon after my last letter, Colonel Bain lectured in Wilmington, in New Castle before the Teachers' Institute of New Castle county, and in several towns, among the number my own town, Smyrna, where he delighted his audience.

Just now our unions are feeling the impetus received at the recent county conventions, New Castle county having taken the lead by convening February 27, in Hockessin, the village noted for its Temperance Hotel, with a bow of white ribbon painted on the sign. At Marshallton, the station next to Hockessin, the Loyal Temperance Legion stood upon the platform, with banners and flags, singing one of their marching songs, as the train slowly moved on. After a bountiful lunch at the Temperance Hotel, delegates hastened to the M. E. church, where the convention opened at 1:30, with a devotional service led by Mrs. J. T. Ellis, corresponding secretary of the New Jersey W. C. T. U. Mrs. Mary A. Mitchell welcomed the convention in the name of the local union, and Miss Alice Thompson gave a greeting from the Loyal Temperance Legion; Miss Irene Hepbron of the Wilmington Y, responded to both. The address of the president, Mrs. V. L. Culbertson, with the reports from unions, were deeply interesting to the seventy-five delegates present as well as to visitors. Among the latter, who with Mrs. Ellis were made members of the convention, were Miss Margaret S. Hillis, state president, and Mrs. Kate E. Smithers, president of the Kent county union. Two new unions gave their first report, Willard W. C. T. U. at Rockland, near Wilmington, and Hillis W. C. T. U. at Highlands. The county treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Watson, reported $99.05 in the treasury. A loving message was sent to Miss Anna Semple, president of the Wilmington union, who has passed her eightieth birthday, and whose beautiful, self-forgetful life has been for years an inspiration to all who knew her.

During the two sessions, county reports were given of scientific temperance instruction, by Mrs. Patience W. Kent; prison and jail work, by Mrs. A. E. Davidson; juvenile work, by Mrs. M. L. Green, superintendent of the Newport Loyal Temperance Legion, and an impressive paper on "The Wards of our Unions," was read by Miss Mary Heald. Mrs. Eunice Whiteley addressed the convention upon the work of social purity, telling of plans made by herself and Mrs. Frances Mather, state superintendent, for its promotion. At the close of Mrs. Whiteley's address, the convention donated $50 for the work of this department. Mrs. Ellis made the address at the public meeting of the evening, and a paper was read on "Tobacco," by the state superintendent of narcotics, Mrs. L. E. Moore. The president and treasurer of the past year were reëlected; Mrs. E. Elma Pyle being elected to the office of secretary.

The Kent county convention was held in the Baptist church of Harrington, March 4. The opening devotional service was conducted by Mrs. Annie E Alloway, president of the Dover union. Addresses of welcome were made by the Rev. Mr. Howes, of the Baptist church, and the Rev. Mr. Price, of the Methodist church; Miss Hillis responded in an earnest little speech, expressing gratitude for their brotherly sympathy. Mrs. Price also spoke words of cordial welcome, to which Mrs. L. E. Slaymaker responded. Papers were read on "Juvenile Work," by Mrs. Green; "Literature and THE UNION SIGNAL," prepared by Miss Cora Clarke; "Y Work," by Miss Sallie Herring, and a paper on "Crusade Day" by the writer. The excellent address of the president, Mrs. Kate E. Smithers, and the discussions of the resolutions, comprised an interesting part of the session. The president and treasurer of last year, Mrs. Lena Hairgrove, was, with the newly-appointed secretary, Miss Elizabeth Smithers, unanimously elected A large audience was present at the evening meeting, and there were general expressions of appreciation of Mrs. Ellis' fine address.

The Sussex county convention was held at Bridgeville, March 6 and 7, a town remarkable for the non-existence of a saloon within its limits The president, Mrs. Rebecca Jefferson, being detained at home by illness, Mrs. Ellis cheerfully accepted the chair, and proved a most efficient presiding officer. Mrs. W. Grey welcomed the convention in an appropriate address, Miss Morgan, of the Concord Y, giving the response in a beautiful manner. At the opening session also, the Rev. Mr. Howard, pastor of the church in which the convention was held, cordially expressed his interest in the work of the W. C. T. U., and gave an address in the evening, Mrs. Ellis following acceptably, as in the two other counties. The reading of Mrs. Jefferson's annual address by Mrs. Hattie Phelps, state treasurer, and a paper on "Temperance Teaching in Sunday Schools," by Mrs. Cora, state superintendent of the department, each formed an enjoyable part of the program. Reports from local unions were very encouraging, notably so those of Milton and Bethel M. E. church, neither having existed two years. The latter union has the disadvantages of a country neighborhood, members living miles apart, and yet distance, in this instance, seems to increase zeal.

After the reading of a eulogy of Mrs. Annie H. Martindale, written by Mrs. N. B. Smithers, Mrs. Ellis, with other touching tributes offered to the beloved memory, said: "I came to your state because Mrs. Martindale suggested my name to Mrs. Culbertson in answer to the question, 'Whom shall I have for the New Castle county convention?' Mrs. Martindale replying, 'Mrs. Ellis, of New Jersey.'"

Too high an estimate can not be placed upon Mrs. Ellis' two weeks of faithful work in the state. Thirteen towns were visited by her, about seventy-five new members gained, among the number nearly fifty honoraries. Two Y's were organized, one at New Castle and the other at Harrington. On her way home she visited Middletown for the second time during the trip, holding three successful meetings during her stay.

Both Kent and Sussex counties gave expression to the following resolution:

Resolved, That we do reaffirm our unswerving loyalty to the National W. C. T. U., and would express our love and loyal allegiance to our beloved and honored National president, Miss Frances E. Willard.

The New Castle county convention indorsed "the franchise department of the work," and emphasized the need of better protection to women and children, and of prison reform. Important among the resolutions adopted by the Kent county union was a strong one relative to juvenile work.

The newly-elected officers of Sussex county are as follows: President, Mrs. Rebecca Jefferson; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. T. Gilman; recording secretary, Mrs. Hannah Tunnel; treasurer, Mrs. Rebecca Prettyman. The W. C. T U. of this county emphasized, together with the need of other reforms, a better law for the protection of girls. And so we find in Delaware as elsewhere, that as a friend said at my own county convention, "our work touches every one somewhere;" even more than this, it touches us all everywhere, "for God hath spoken men are somehow brothers."

COLORADO.

NOTES OF WORK.

We have cause for rejoicing that Mrs. Thompson, our state president, is so far recovered as to be able to move forward with organizing and lecturing near home. As a result, the Y's are organized at Longmont, and a strong, promising union at Berthoud, and she will also visit Louisville and Erie, where it is expected unions may be organized.

People who are born in Colorado are called "Rovers," and surely the name is applicable, for such a roving class of people it is hard to find anywhere else. One of the pastors in Colorado Springs speaks of a part of his congregation as a procession; those who have just come in the state and those who are just going out of the state, and they form no small part of an audience.

Alas! for the effect of this migratory element on some of the unions of the state! The union organized at Falcon, less than a year ago, has moved out of the town, leaving less than a quorum in the place. Other places also have suffered from the migration of union members, but not all are so completely devastated of W. C. T. U. workers. There are some features of this western life that are difficult to be understood by eastern people. Even whole towns migrate from one point to another as they think a new railroad will establish a station and town.

It might be advisable to pass a resolution at our annual convention to the effect that any member on leaving a union should see to it that her place be filled by a new member.

Mrs. Eva Higgins, president of the southern district, on her trip to Leadville, encouraged and strengthened the union there by aiding in securing several new members. This is one of the most efficient unions in the state. Mrs. Mary Henderson, the president, organized the first Sunday-school in Leadville. Her sister, Miss Sarah Bede, formerly of Ohio, was appointed president of Lake county, giving us eight county organizations.

At Salida Mrs. Higgins found the Y's about ready for organization. Mrs. J. D. Lester has been very successful in keeping the boys and girls of sixteen and eighteen years of age in the Band of Hope, from which good material for societies of older persons can surely be found.

Miss Mary Cort, vice-president of the World's W. C. T. U. for Siam, is now in Denver, her former home, and is arousing an interest in temperance work in the missionary societies of Denver.

Mrs. Telford is gaining in health and has charge of the W. C. T. U. department in the Challenge again, which gives us the friendly feeling of having her with us once more. This little unusual incident appeared in her column recently: "A white-ribboner was applied to for answers to the following questions: 'What is Prohibition? Is it needed? Is it efficient where tried?' The replies were translated by a Norwegian girl and presented in debate on the question before a Norwegian club."

The Good Templars of Colorado Springs have organized a Loyal Temperance Legion which is to meet on Saturday afternoons. The Loyal Temperance Legion of the Denver Central had an attendance of one hundred and forty-six during January, averaging thirty-six at a session.

A Y. W. C. T. U. has recently been organized at Denver, which meets at headquarters on Wednesday evenings. A union of colored women is in contemplation.

Mrs. E. F. Leonard, of the Larimer street mission, has been presented with a Bible by the young men of her class, as a testimony of their regard for her services.

Trinidad union has sent twelve dollars to the Cottage Home, and the Valmont union a box valued at twenty dollars. This society is located in the country and holds all day sessions once a month, and keeps the Cottage Home ever in mind.

Miss M. D. Wilson gave the "Carnival of Nations" at La Veta, Durango and Chama, N. M., meeting with such success as to leave money in the treasury of the local unions. Three counties were also organized by Miss Wilson, Rio Grande, La Plata and San Juan. It may not be remembered that Chama, N. M., was made auxiliary to Colorado state union because of its location on a line of railroad that places it in more convenient relation with Colorado than with New Mexico.

Mrs. C. W. Beach, our state evangelist, has visited Idaho Springs and Georgetown. Idaho Springs is moving toward a reading and coffee room. Nine new members were added to the Georgetown union. The Denver Central union is placing reading matter in the barber shops, and a gentleman of the city says, "The union has done nothing better for a long time." Several years ago a colored minister quit a barber shop in Colorado Springs because the Police Gazette was the reading matter found there. I never heard of any one else quitting a shop on that account.

The day nursery of Pueblo now has from sixteen to twenty children under its care, providing for some of them at night as well as by day, when the mothers obtain permanent employment. The Pueblo unions are taking hold of press work with a new vigor that cannot but help very much in various ways. While it keeps the public informed of the good work being accomplished by the W. C. T. U., it will surely call out more ready workers, and more ready financial support.

The report of the day nursery was given ample space some time since, and quite recently the Pueblo Chieftain gave a column for the report of the Central union. The last account includes committee reports from the jail and mission work. The prisoners now confined in the jail are spoken of as coarse, unrefined, and of low taste. The same may be said of those confined in the El Paso county jail. It may seem strange to many that anything else should be expected of prisoners, but it is a fact that very frequently, alas! much more frequently than we are willing to believe, do we find behind the bars, the sons of educated, Christian parents, and even those who have known, some time in their lives by practical experience, what it is to be a Christian; but, like Peter, tried to live without keeping near the Master, and wandered into such evil ways as to place themselves behind the bars. The Sunday-school and gospel services of the above union are carried on with the patience, perseverance and hopefulness that belong only to earnest Christian workers. Notwithstanding several removals that would lessen the attendance for a time, a steady increase of numbers would soon follow.

The Pueblo Mesa union now meets with the president, Mrs. S. E. Fugard, who is also superintendent of jail work. For this line of work Mrs. Fugard has both zeal and adaptability to rouse the prisoners courage to strive for better living.

The Mesa union is strengthened by the membership of Mrs. E. K. Reynolds, of Mt. Pleasant, Pa., an ex-district president and superintendent of mothers' meetings. She has taken the superintendency of mothers' meetings in this union. We most heartily welcome these tried workers from our older sister states and call for more of them; we need their experience and their work.

FROM THE SOUTH LAND.

GLEANINGS.

On her way to attend the state convention in Tampa, Mrs. Chapin stopped to visit some friends in Jacksonville, where on Sunday she spoke at a W. C. T. U. gospel meeting in the Presbyterian Church, introduced by the pastor. The spirit of the Lord was visibly on speaker and hearers. "Amens" went up from the heart, and invitations to speak there again proved that God owned and blessed the work. She represented the W. C. T. U. also at Mt. Dora Chautauqua most acceptably. Of the state convention at Tampa I suppose you will hear officially; a beautiful incident to me seems that of presentation the day after the convention, by two ladies, of some golden lilies (a new flower, called the alamanda, or golden trumpet), saying: "Florida gives this as your emblem." So Mrs. Chapin must accept it; she has proved to be the "golden trumpet" of the temperance reform in the South. She always wielded a magnetic influence over her audiences, but they say she seems to have received a new baptism, doing a greater work than ever, winning souls to Christ, and rousing the inert to a sense of their responsibility. Addressing the high school, using illustrated pictures, she pledged the scholars not only to be temperate themselves, but to try to make others the same.

At Kissimee, she spoke in the Presbyterian Church of which Dr. Alden (husband of our "Pansy") is pastor, also in the Methodist Church at night; it was filled to overflowing and a blessed occasion. So God blesses His workers.

Mrs. Chant's work in Baltimore has also had gracious results, bringing to the "white-ribbon army" new accessions and encouraging all. The Chapin W. C. T. U. is trying to honor the name it bears. As I am in the department of colored work, I visited, with another member, one of their churches, the occasion being a love feast. One old white-headed soldier is said to be over one hundred years of age. When I asked how many would like to have a W. C. T. U. formed, more hands went up than I could count; so our organizer will be welcome there.

We trust that Mrs. J. K. Barney will begin her work in Maryland instead of Virginia, not that we would for a day deprive any southern city of her help, but the field seems ripe for the harvest. Having had the privilege of her ministry in Maryland some time since, we know how to appreciate it. I hope no Southern state will lose the opportunity of having a visit from her. Her work is true gospel work; her motto, "Not willing that any should perish." She teaches how our workers can be useful in many ways, winning the blessing promised. "Sick, and in prison, ye visited me."

DEMOREST MEDAL CONTESTS.

By the good thought of Wright county's active president, Mrs. M. J. O. Whiting, the young people of Belmond, Clarion and Eagle Grove have been permitted to receive training for some silver medal contests by the well-known dramatic reader, Miss Eva M. Shontz. The latter gave recitations at the places named, in the meantime drilling classes which had been previously formed with their selections thoroughly committed to memory. That Miss Shontz won fresh laurels by her enthusiastic work with the young people none doubted who heard their fine and impressive rendering of those grand prohibition recitations. Large and deeply interested houses lent their inspiration to these entertainments and contests, and Miss Shontz's beautiful and touching presentation of the medals and her heart-felt, eloquent words to the audiences in behalf of prohibition, made a delightful, and we believe lasting, impression for good.

Miss Shontz is so perfect a type of pure, sweet womanhood it is a pleasure to have brought her in contact with our young people, all of whom were completely won by her enthusiastic consecration to her art and to whatever is pure and noble.

The winners of the medals were Miss Grace Yearous, of Eagle Grove, theme, "Moral Suasion;" Miss Susie Cutler of Clarion, "A Voice From The Poorhouse;" Miss Elsie Logan of Belmond, "The Saloon Must Go."

Eleven medals have now been won in our county, one being a gold medal. I wonder if we are not the banner county of the state? ESTELLE MENDELL.

NEBRASKA.

CAMPAIGN WORK.

The state department of foreign work has received a new impetus recently, owing to the energetic efforts of Mrs. S. F. Grubb, the National superintendent. Nearly two thousand pages of leaflets in all languages have been sent into the state by Mrs. Grubb, without expense to us. Some of these were donated by friends of the cause and some given by herself. It is being rapidly sent out, and gratefully received. The Deutsch-Amerikaner has made a splendid reduction for the campaign, as has also the Swedish paper published in our own borders. As far as possible these will be sent out gratuitously to regular subscribers.

Many ask me what is most needed. There is the largest percentage of Germans and Swedes here, but the Scandinavians are more favorably inclined to the amendment and have more home talent and "self-helps" than the Germans. There are also a great number of Bohemians, and no interest among them at all.

The editor of the Swedish paper started out this week on a lecturing tour, speaking in that language; if some one could only be found to talk to the Germans! We are praying that the way may open before us.

LINN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The W. C. T. U. met at Meadville, February 25 and 26. Laclide, Brookfield, Browning, Linneus and Meadville unions reported; also Wheeling, of Livingstone county. It was an interesting meeting throughout, and each one carried good cheer to her local union.

Helen B. Harford was with us and rendered efficient aid. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we hereby reiterate our former loyalty to National and state W. C. T. U.

Resolved, That we tender our sympathy to the women of Lathrop and Spickardsville for their compelled aggressive action against the dramshop.

Resolved, That we will endeavor to thoroughly organize our county and take up all departments of work feasible and push them earnestly Thanks were voted to the good people of Meadville, the pulpit, the choir, the faithful sexton, the press, and the kind friends who opened their houses to our entertainment. ANNA C. TRUE, Co. Sec.

ILLINOIS.

GREENE COUNTY CONVENTION.

The second annual convention of the Greene county W. C. T. U. met at Carrollton, in the M. E. church, Thursday, February 20, Mrs. Berger, vice-president, presiding. Bible reading and devotions conducted by Mrs. Williams. Mrs. Wilhite, of Greenfield, president of the county convention, having arrived, took charge of the meeting and appointed the usual committees.

The following were made fraternal delegates: Mrs. Hartwell, of Bridgewater; Mrs. Woodbridge, of Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Helen Coonrod, Mrs. Hutchinson, Mrs. Ostrom and Miss Minnie Collins, of Greenfield. Noontide prayer and adjournment.

Devotional exercises in the afternoon were led by Mrs. Williams. Words of welcome by Mrs. Rev. M. A. Hewes; response by Mrs. Ostrom. Mrs. H. T. Rainey favored the convention with a select reading, after which Mrs. Woodbridge, secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., was introduced, and gave a short talk on the work.

Reports from the local unions of the county were read and accepted. Recitation by Miss Wilhite, "The Modern Cain." The pledge was then read, and adjourned with temperance doxology until 7:30 p. m.

The evening session opened at 7:30 with reading of the Scriptures by Mrs. Kuhl, and prayer by Rev. J. W. Primm. Solo by Mrs. H. H. Montgomery, entitled "Two Lives."

Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge addressed the convention, giving a history and the workings of the W. C. T. U. throughout the world. Closed with benediction by Rev. M. A. Hewes.

The Friday morning session opened at nine o'clock, with devotional service in charge of Mrs. Hartwell, assisted by Mrs. Kuhl. A paper on "Social Purity" was read by Mrs. Berger, which was open for discussion, Mrs. Woodbridge replying, highly indorsed it. Question drawer was conducted by Mrs. Woodbridge. Noontide prayer, and convention adjourned until 1:30 p. m.

The afternoon session opened with devotional service in charge of Mrs. Williams. Sacred song by convention.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. Dr. C. Armstrong, secretary; Mrs. John Kaser, treasurer. Solo, "Consider the Lilies," was given by Mrs. W. K. Withers. Select reading by Mrs. H. T. Rainey; poem read by Mrs. Williams; question drawer conducted by Mrs. Woodbridge. By request Mrs. Berger again read the paper, "Social Purity;" duet by Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Berger; an able address was given by Mrs. Hartwell, of Bridgewater; subject, "More Gleaners."

The committee reported resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, expressing gratitude for all the providential guidance of the year, for the victories in Utah and Dakota, and for other encouragements; urging earnest work in evangelistic lines, Sabbath observance, suppression of impure literature, scientific temperance instruction and compulsory education. The following resolutions are given entire:

Resolved, That THE UNION SIGNAL, the organ of the World's and National W. C. T. U., in our judgment has never been better conducted than during the past year, therefore that we heartily endorse its efficient editors and pledge to them our hearty co-operation and that we acknowledge with gratitude the circulation of THE UNION SIGNAL this year, and as we consider it indispensable to a proper knowledge of the work, we recommend that a systematic effort be made in every union to have a subscriber in every family in the society.

Resolved, That we heartily approve the action taken by our National President, Frances E. Willard, and her associate workers, in the management of the National Temperance Hospital and in all the various departments of work, and frown with a holy horror upon untruths that have been and may be hurled against them.

Resolved, That as total and entire abolition of the rum traffic is our definite and final aim, we continue to lend our influence to the party whatever it may be called which will give us the greatest embodiment of prohibition principles.

Resolved, That believing prohibition will only be reached by the aid of woman's ballot, while justice demands that this weapon be placed in her hands for the protection of the home, we urge an amendment to the national constitution granting women the franchise.

Resolved, That as we consider education in all our lines of work indispensable, we recommend a careful and abundant circulation of temperance literature in every community and at county fairs, Fourth of July celebrations, and at all public gatherings by special committees.

Resolved, That we extend our sincere thanks to the good people of Carrollton, who have so cordially entertained us during this convention, and all others who have so cheerfully contributed to our enjoyment. We specially note the appropriate readings so touchingly and impressively rendered by Mrs. H. T. Rainey; the ever beautiful song, "Consider the Lilies," given in its beauty of sentiment and in perfection by Mrs. W. K. Withers; the expressive and heart-reaching song so sweetly sung by Mrs. H. H. Montgomery; to the press, that has freely advertised, and to the trustees of the Methodist church, who have given us the use of their beautiful building.

The evening session opened with devotions, conducted by Mrs. Kuhl, and prayer by Rev. M. A. Hewes. Quartette by choir. Address by Mrs. M. A. Woodbridge; subject, "The Relation of the Rum Traffic to the Republic." Benediction by Rev. J. W. Primm.

MRS. DR. C. ARMSTRONG, Co. Sec.

ILLINOIS NOTES.

Mrs. L. S. Rounds, after an absence of several weeks in New York, is again in Illinois. She will, during April and May, visit the ninth, fifteenth and fourteenth districts, attending a number of county conventions in each district.

Misses Mary Mahon and Cowen have been doing splendid work in the southern part of the state, and have rendered very valuable assistance to our local unions.

Conventions will be held during April in the counties of Adams, Brown, Cass, Vermilion, Edgar, Coles, Douglas, Champaign and Macoupin.

Miss Addie Northam reports to headquarters from the southern part of the state where she is now laboring. She is meeting with great success, and is one of our most earnest and faithful workers.

The Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago has recently lost a valuable member in Mrs. Belle Newland, who was buried last Tuesday from Englewood. Mrs. Newland was actively engaged in the "Anchorage Mission" of Chicago, being one of the board of managers. She received into her home one of the unfortunate girls from the Mission with the view of helping her. The girl, either maliciously or because of her being insane, put poison in the food. Both Mrs. Newland and her husband died within a few hours from the effects of this poison. A large number of "white-ribboners" attended the funeral services in a body. A most beautiful tribute was paid to Mrs. Newland's worth and work by her pastor, Rev. Mr. Haines, of the Baptist church. Truly it may be said of her, "Her works do follow her."

WORK IN BUTLER COUNTY.

The W. C. T. U. of this county, as in the rest of the state, suffered from the collapse that followed the amendment campaign last June; but after our annual convention in November, we determined to make an effort to revive the work. Owing, however, to the epidemic and the condition of the roads it was not until February that anything could be done. At that time our state superintendent of railroad work, Mrs. E. D. C. Mair, braved all impediments to help us, and canvassed nearly half the county, holding parlor and public meetings. The unions were found anxious to resume work, only waiting for an impetus from without, and the encouragement of knowing that the W. C. T. U. was still in the field with such wise and earnest workers as Mrs. Mair.

About the same time the Butler local union, feeling the need of something to stir us up, wrote to the lecture bureau for a speaker whose name would command attention, and were cheered by the reply, "You can have Mary T. Lathrap." She arrived March 22, for a week's work, and though wishing to keep her here, yet for the good of the work at large, and notwithstanding the mud blockade was still upon us, we yielded her, in answer to many requests for several lectures elsewhere. In Butler, a union meeting of the churches in sympathy with us was arranged for Sabbath evening, March 23, and an afternoon meeting on the same day. The latter, though hastily called, was largely attended, and in the evening hundreds were unable to gain admittance. Her theme, "The Relation of the Church to the Liquor Traffic," produced a profound effect. Gentlemen crowded up at its close to congratulate her, confessing they "had never seen it before in that light." The next day we had an appointment for Mrs. Lathrap at Millerstown, where a few noble women are upholding the cause against great odds, and who needed the inspiration of her words, under which ten new members were added to the union.

The two following nights she spoke in the court house in Butler, all sitting and standing room being occupied by an attentive and appreciative audience, composed more largely of men than is usual at our temperance meetings. Our union congratulates itself on the success of the effort, the only regret being that it became necessary to spare any of the time elsewhere.

On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Lathrap consented to give the ladies a talk on "Physical Culture" in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, which excited a lively interest, and for which all were deeply grateful. After the address, ladies were presented to Mrs. Lathrap in the new W. C. T. U. headquarters, and refreshments were served.

In all the details of Mrs. Lathrap's engagement the union was ably seconded by our large and flourishing Y, on which we can always depend for help.

NEW JERSEY.

ALL DAY COUNTY MEETING IN NEWARK.

This was held in the hall of the mother union, Mrs. M. R. Denman presiding; opened with prayer by Mrs. Wigfall. Soul-stirring address was given by Mrs. M. R. Denman in regard to the leadings of the Holy Spirit. Mrs. Denman referred to the opening of the Crusade and the first all-day meeting when Mother Hill, Mrs. Berry and Mrs. Denman met together for fasting and prayer. Mrs. Emma Bourne, state recording secretary, seemed also to be led of the Spirit and all honest hearts caught the inspiration. Interesting addresses by Mrs. Eurfort, Mrs. Berry, Mrs. Wigfall, Mr. Geo. Harrison and others. At 11:15, Mrs. A. M. Hammer, county president, arrived prepared as previously announced to give a Bible reading. Scripture selected for the occasion was Judges 7, 15–17; the principal thought impressed through this lesson was was "Anointing for service." Mrs. Hammer said the churches are full of people the Lord cannot use because of their unfitness for service, and related how the anointing came to her after being a professor of religion for years. Mrs. Downs, state president, arrived at 11:25, and after a cordial reception endorsed what the previous speaker had said, adding that we should first search our hearts and see if we are right and then go ahead; and that there were many barriers in the church to be burned out and swept away. The usual noontide prayer followed and an excellent lunch was served by our superintendent, Mrs. Emma Johnson, of which thirty-four partook.

At 1:30 Mrs. Fitzgerald delivered a spiritual address upon "The Graces of Faith." The speeches of Mrs. Jube and Mrs. Jennie Cramer—Gen. Grant's sister—were also very effective on the temperance line. Mrs. Jube is doing a good work in her own city. Mrs. Pierce of Watsessing was next introduced; her soul was stirred and she requested the audience to sing "Arise, my soul, arise," and during the singing another spiritual wave swept over the people. She then told with deep emotion how God had saved her thirty years ago in Halsey St. M. E. church, Newark, and then called her into the temperance work. She reported a blessed work in progress at Watsessing. Many brief testimonies followed, and a large number of requests for prayer were presented. Altogether it was one of the most remarkable meetings for spiritual power ever held in Newark. Unions represented were, Watsessing, seven delegates; Irwington, Bloomfield, Roseville, also the Gospel Temperance Association and King's Sons' Winning Circle.

AMENDMENT WORK IN NEBRASKA.

AN APPEAL.

The state of Nebraska is the strategic point of the temperance reform in 1890. A constitutional prohibitory amendment is pending. The vote will be taken in November next. All temperance societies have formed a compact to work in harmony for this amendment. Every difference that might have existed is totally ignored, and they have clasped hands like Christian brothers and sisters for the protection of the home by the outlawing of the saloon. The liquor interest is concentrating its unlimited financial and political power against the temperance people. Unfortunately there is another amendment putting license into the organic law of the state, and voters will have to choose between these two. This complicates the issue, and confuses many minds. The liquor men will take sides for license. The temperance people of Nebraska are not rich; indeed, it will be impossible for them to carry on the campaign with vigor except by means of outside financial help, and by the utmost efforts of the Christian people of this country they could not hope to gain enough assistance by any means to offset the mighty power that is back of the saloon.

In such a crisis it surely seems as if the forces of Christ's church would rejoice to lend their utmost aid by prayer, by sympathy, by money, and by honest, hard work wherever practicable; but what is everybody's business is nobody's business, and unless there is unity of action results will be small. Therefore the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, organized in every town and city of the Republic, hereby ventures solemnly and affectionately to call upon all good people to combine their efforts and help Nebraska win the day against the allied forces of evil. We send forth the voice of the home, the voice of drunkards' wives and children, of men who wish to leave off drink, and of other men who are in the bondage of the curse, of youths and maidens who will soon form new homes in that giant state of the new Northwest. Is there no potency in such a voice?

Can we not rise above our prejudices, our animosities, if we have them, and in a large, free, brotherly way declare that there shall be concert of action among good people in the few months that remain to us, in which we can help Nebraska to win for the home? To this end will not the pastors of all denominations, who believe that prohibition is the best method of handling the liquor traffic, preach on the present situation in Nebraska, giving the reasons why men ought to vote against legalizing the liquor traffic, and thus energizing the purpose of the good to be a felt force in this battle, which is really nation wide, and yet visibly confined within the boundaries of Nebraska. At the close can there not be a collection taken to secure speakers and literature for this brief but decisive campaign?

If we could only win Nebraska there would be a large area in the new Northwest in which the power of the government to protect the saloon would be forever at an end. What better work could be done in any Sunday-school than for the superintendent to present this cause to the young people and ask their help? What better work could any temperance society perform than to have an address and take a collection in this behalf? The liquor traffic nationally is making common cause and surely the children of light, as way wise as they have now become in the temperance reform, will not be less vigilant than the enemies of "God and Home and Native Land." It was in our hearts to make this plea. It was laid upon our consciences and we could do no other. We have briefly stated the case and in the kindest spirit with all respect and good-will to every Christian man and woman in the nation. God grant it shall not be in vain, but that His Spirit may find the inmost hearts of those who read and that they may say, "We will go up and possess this land, for we are able." Be this our rallying cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!"

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Thanks, dear sisters, for renewed interest and increasing activity in the circulation of the petition, but more may be done, and that speedily. May is the month of meetings. Anniversaries are the order everywhere. Conferences, associations, councils in states and nation. Will presidents of state unions seek immediately to learn of all of these, and arrange for the presentation of the petition at each? What will Alabama and other Southern states do? What meetings are to be held in Maine and in Minnesota? Will not California and Oregon hold some anniversaries? What of gatherings at the Nation's Metropolis? Shall not the World's Petition have recognition at the seat of the World's Fair? Should it not be a spoke in the "Hub"? and will not the "City of Brotherly Love" grant its benediction to this outreach for purity and peace? The Grand Army of the Republic and the Grangers are everywhere, and the I. O. G. T., whose heart beats with ours, will at the meeting of its Grand Lodge desire to give expression to its thought; indeed, the petition meets hearty approval from all. If faithfulness in presentation be our heeded watchword, there will ere long be rolled upon the potentates of the earth the heart-throb of our people for the protection of their homes from "alcohol and opium."

An address of presentation is not necessary, though always well, but some member interested in the cause can be found in almost every gathering, who will willingly take the petition in charge for indorsement. Send for petitions, which will be accompanied with headings, meeting many conditions; but if not sufficiently explicit, another may be written and attached as directed exactly representing the indorsing body. Please write very plainly the number of copies of petition desired, and full address of person to whom they should be forwarded.

SCHOOL OF METHODS.

I am in constant receipt of letters asking me to tell "all about holding Schools of Methods." This is exactly what my Manual does tell, and it cannot be compressed into a letter. Send twenty-five cents to the W. T. P. A. for the book and it will answer all questions in relation to the subject.

The number of inquiries received is encouraging, as it indicates increasing interest in this department.

PARLIAMENTARY DRILLS.

Inquiries are so frequent and so numerous concerning "drills" that I find it impossible to reply. The questions are so similar that each interrogator will readily find her answer.

"Is it better for the unions to invite other organizations to take part in the drills?"

It certainly is, both for the unions and for the "other organizations." The instructor can drill hundreds just as easiiy and just as thoroughly as scores or dozens, and there is enthusiasm in numbers alone. Besides the other organizations meet the union on common ground, and a fellow feeling makes them "wondrous kind." It is quite usual to follow the drill with a temperance lecture of general interest, and it is often remarked by members of the union that the attendance is very different and the "collection" much larger than it would have been before the drill. Chief of all, we wish to do good as we have opportunity, and all societies are coming to realize the need of this very essential knowledge.

"How many evenings or lessons should constitute the series of drills?"

From three to five, not less than three.

"How long do you make the drill in a Parliamentary Institute proper?"

Generally about two hours.

"What is the best financial plan?"

Several have been tried with good success, but the plan of all, to save both time and strength, and to secure money, is the following, which, so far as I know, originated with Dr. Green, one of our loyal white-ribboners of Adrian, Mich. Such organizations as the Y. M. C. A., G. A. R., W. R. C., C. L. S. C., literary clubs, and all temperance organizations, were asked to contribute two dollars each. All church societies, Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, Epworth League, Christian Endeavor, etc., one dollar each. Some of the churches were represented by four of these societies, and some of the members belong to each of the four, hence the reduction in price to church societies. Everyone desiring to drill registered both his name and that of the society of which he was a member, whereupon he received a ticket of admission. Tickets were sold to "outsiders" at the door, either for the "course" or for single lesson. Their place of enrollment in Albion was the leading book-store of the city. This, in brief, is the plan by which all expenses were met, with a surplus for the union treasury.

I cannot fill engagements for drills outside of Michigan during the month of April; dates full.

On Advertising.

There seems to be an unwarrantable objection in some minds, mostly medical minds, to paid advertising upon certain kinds of paper. All matters of this kind are decided by reference to the "Code of Ethics." This, as we shall see, though, in many respects, strict, is sometimes quite elastic in others. For example, they are permitted to advertise upon tin and other metals, bricks, stone, wood and cardboard. They are allowed to put out and pay for their signs, and scatter their professional cards with liberal hand. They may write books, which are sold at a high price, giving a full account of their wonderful cures, always by way of illustration, and interesting details as to patients' age, height, complexion, temperature, temperament, respiration, and domestic affairs. But this is not considered "advertising." Their contributions to medical Journals, describing, with appalling accuracy of detail, the cases they have cured, are copied gratis by the newspapers. But all this is within the code.

We have often given our views on this subject and defined our position. As the public do not seem to share this prejudice to any alarming extent, we simply point to what has been accomplished by our Compound Oxygen Treatment in chronic cases, and those given over by physicians, and add, that over 1,000 physicians are using it in their practice, and taking it themselves. But you will find it all, evidence, records and descriptions of cases, proof irresistible and convincing, in our book, sent free. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, California.

Publisher's Dep't.

That Non-Partisan Rut!

It seems to be exceedingly deep! That is when folks get into it they are not able to think of or do anything else. To keep things moving is evidence of life. When a union becomes so absorbed in proving that somebody or some union is so terrifically and dreadfully partisan that it does nothing else, it is way down in the rut and ought to get out to the light. There is something better than groaning about the awfulness of having political ideas. And what pray? Why firing at the enemy! True, most of the political parties are so friendly to the saloon that in working against them you are working against the liquor traffic, but there is a still more direct way of doing what the solons—no saloons—don't want done, and that is to reach the eye and so reach the brain and then the heart of the thousands who are not politicians and don't know how the wool is pulled over their eyes. We have two specially good ways to do this, First is our Agitation Leaflets.

They say not a word about politics and yet the way they do stir up the saloon keepers and their allies is a marvel. No union will have rut life that uses these leaflets. Our superintendent of printing has assured the publisher a number of times that we have named too low a rate on them and that we do not get the cost back, but as long as they stir up folks we will pocket the loss and count it a gain! If you don't know what we are talking about why not send a postal asking for samples? Beware of Ruts! The other

Stir Up Scheme

Comes through your using the "Protection Posters." We advertised them last week and propose to do so some more, for we really believe this plan carried out will go farther toward creating that aforesaid "healthy P. S."—you know the words—than anything that has yet been brought to your notice. Politics on them? Not enough to hurt, unless somebody ought to be hurt! Two cents would bring you samples of the two anti-rut schemes. Got that much to invest in investigating the truth of these statements?

A New Series.

The present law admitting novels as second class mail matter has brought a tremendous flood of books to the light. By far the larger part had better remained in darkness. We have devised a plan to enter a number of cheap books in our own line as second class mail, thus enabling us to send them out at the one cent a pound rate. We must comply with the regulations of the post-office and have a bona fide subscription list. We ask for subscriptions to the Library Series at forty cents each. The books will be published at least quarterly. If we change and issue monthly, all subscribers will be notified and asked to remit at the rate of ten cents per month, but this will not be obligatory on subscribers.

The books of this class that are now ready, are: "Van and Vet"; a bright little temperance story, by Mrs. Lucy A. Scott. "Prove It"; the sequel to the above, by the same author, "Helping," a story of young people who learned to "lend a hand," by Ada M. Melville.

In preparation, or soon to be issued (uniform in size and style with the above): "Stories of Friends" (about animals). "Round the World with the White Ribbon"; "Child-life Abroad"; "On a Tourist Ticket."

The publishers of the wretched novels that entrap too many of our boys and girls, send out their books at this second-class rate. Help us, we ask, to crowd out some, at least, of the poisoned matter that comes from such sources, by putting within the reach of the children that which is pure and true.

Company's advertisement deserves a special notice from the publisher. We have never tried what they advertise but any company that will, unasked, send $100 to a state W. C. T. Does it hurt the Clothes?

We hear that some woman said of Pearline—"it's the greatest thing I ever saw for easy washing and cleaning, in fact it does so much I'm afraid of it." She recalls the old saying, "too good to be true."

How absurd to suppose that the universal popularity of Pearline is due to anything but wonderful merit.

How absurd to suppose that millions of women would use PEARLINE year after year if it hurt the hands or clothing

How absurd to suppose that any sane man would risk a fortune in advertising an article which would not stand the most severe (and women are critical) tests.

That's just what PEARLINE will stand—test it for easy work—quality of work—for saving time and labor—wear and tear—economy—test it any way you will—but test it. You'll find PEARLINE irresistible.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous. 166 Manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

There's a corset that isn't a corset, a waist with straps for the shoulders and rows of buttons to button on skirts and stocking supporters and so forth—the Ball Waist—and that's about the whole of it. No; you can put it in the washtub—no metal in it or on it.

It is worth your seeing, if for nothing but how to sew on buttons to button easy and never come off, and how to make buttonholes wear forever.

Women differ in their ways of thinking and dressing as well as in other ways. This waist is for women whose minds are made up that they won't wear corsets.

There's much to be said on both sides; but did you ever hear of a woman who hadn't made up her mind in some way? and is there any possible use in trying to get her to change it? She will and she will; or she won't and she won't.

You can get the Ball Waist and wear it a week or two or three; and, if you don't want it, take it back to the store and get your money.

Money-Making Entertainments.

The list is worth your attention, as it comprises all sorts and kinds, and if your union seeks to occasionally make some money by amusing the people you will find here ample material. In many instances the entertainment will result in not only making the coffers heavier but in silencing the scoffers! Why? Because the planning has been not only to amuse but also to arouse thought while being amused, and a new idea that comes to you on the wings of a hearty laugh has a good-natured way of settling down quite at home in its new quarters. Here is the list:

Prohibition Program. Price 10 cents. By Anna A. Gordon. Song recitations and exercises of the brightest and best kind. High license is fired at in a way that tells. A dialogue by Mr. E. J. Wheeler on "Sensevs. License," is full of vigor, fun and education!

CRUSADER SERIES. No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3. Each 10 cents. No. 1 is on general temperance points; No. 2 on the Temperance Temple, and No. 3 is "The Trial of Prince Nicotine." All are bright and good.

Crusader Programs. Price 25 cts. A book of 188 pages, full of the best of Sunday-school and general temperance exercises, largely from the Sunday-school Young Crusader, given in its columns from time to time. All are good; none need costumes or any such outside helps. An admirable book in every way. Twenty-four numbers or exercises in all are given.

HINTS FOR
Y. W. C. T. U. ENTERTAINMENTS.

Price 10 cents. Explaining the mysteries of Oriental Tiffin, Kaffee Klatsch, Mother Goose, etc. Candy recipes are added to sweeten things generally.

YE HATCHET PARTIE.

Price 15 cents. By Miss Mary H. Mather, superintendent department of entertainments National W. C. T. U. The most successful shekel winner we have ever printed for young ladies' use. Other good entertainments are also given, "Mistress Mary and Her Flower Garden," "Silhouette Social," etc.

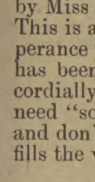
INTERSTATE MILKMAID'S CONVENTION.

Price 5 cents. By Laura J. Rittenhouse. An amusing and witty "take off" on a woman's convention. The amount of learning (?) displayed on the cow business is funny.

Co-operative Housekeeping. Price 5 cts. By Lide Merriwether, president Tennessee W. C. T. U. An admirable allegory to show how the women of the country could clean house at Washington if they only had the chance. Telling and effective.

Platform Voices. Price 25 cents; compiled by Miss Julia Ames, editor UNION SIGNAL. This is a collection of unusually good temperance poems and recitations. Great care has been taken in the selections, and we cordially recommend this book to all who need "something in the line of recitations" and don't know exactly what. This book fills the vacuum completely.

New White Cross Pin.



We have been asked a great many times to provide a pin for those who take the White Cross obligations. We have made a great many experiments in the line of supplying the need, but have not been satisfied with any of the results until now. Here is a pin which is a little beauty, modest, plain, effective and very economical. We show it in the exact size. It is made of celluloid and shines out in a way that will attract more attention than if it were made of gold. Prices: Each, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites Of Lime and Soda.

There are emulsions and emulsions, and there is still much skimmed milk which masquerades as cream. Try as they will many manufacturers cannot so disguise their cod liver oil as to make it palatable to sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion of PURE NORWEGIAN COD LIVER OIL, combined with Hypophosphites is almost as palatable as milk. For this reason as well as for the fact of the stimulating qualities of the Hypophosphites, Physicians frequently prescribe it in cases of

DR. KING'S ROYAL GERMETUER

He adds: "The effects of this remedy upon my wife have been even more signal and wonderful. She has been almost a lifelong invalid from Nervous Headache, Neuralgia and Rheumatism. In a period of thirty years she has scarcely had a day's exemption from pain. She has been using Germetuer about two months. A more complete transformation I have never witnessed. Every symptom of disease has disappeared. She appears to be twenty years younger, and is as happy and playful as a healthy child. We have persuaded many of our friends to take the medicine, and the testimony of all of them is that it is a great remedy."

Royal Germetuer builds up from the first dose. It speedily brings bloom to the cheek, strength to the body and joy to the heart.

If you are suffering and have failed of a cure, send stamp for printed matter, certificates, etc.

For sale by the Atlantic Germetuer Company, 14 N. Broad St., Atlanta, Ga., and by druggists. Price reduced from $2 50 to $1.50 per concentrated bottle, which makes one gallon of medicine as per directions accompanying each bottle. Can be sent by express C. O. D. if your druggist cannot supply you.

CYRUS HAMLIN writes, concerning a journey through Maine: "Many of the jails have been empty. I visited one where the jailer said he had not had a prisoner for some time. He opened the jail occasionally to keep the locks in running order, but he added, 'Where there is no drunkenness, there is no jailing.'"

THE Lutherans in the Baltic provinces of Russia have undertaken a vigorous campaign against intemperance, and have already achieved a notable success.

EX-GOVERNOR ST. JOHN addressed two very large and enthusiastic audiences in Ishpeming, Michigan, March 3 and 4, generously giving the collection of the second day to help the Nebraska amendment. This amounted to $200. The reporter says: "He made a lasting impression for good upon the people."

THE London Lancet, a standard on all medical questions, declares as follows: "Cases of poisoning due to meat which seemed thoroughly wholesome have sometimes occurred and have remained unexplained. In the Revue d' Hygiene recently, M. Bourrier, inspector of meat for the town of Paris, makes a valuable suggestion. He describes his experiments with meat impregnated with tobacco smoke. Some thin slices of beef were exposed for a considerable time to the fumes of tobacco, and afterwards offered to a dog which had been deprived of food for twelve hours. The dog after smelling the meat, refused to eat it. Some of the meat was then cut into small pieces and concealed within bread. This the dog ate with avidity, but in twenty minutes commenced to display the most distressing symptoms, and soon died in great agony. All sorts of meat, both raw and cooked, some grilled, roasted and broiled, were exposed to tobacco smoke, and then given to animals, and in all cases produced symptoms of acute poisoning. Even the process of boiling could not extract from the meat the nicotine poison. Grease and similar substances have facilities of absorption in proportion with their fineness and fluidity. Thus the fats most readily influenced by tobacco smoke are, in their respective order, the fat of horseflesh, of pork, of veal, of beef, and finally of mutton. Hashed meat is, of course, more readily affected than the large pieces; thus a few puffs of tobacco smoke directly projected on to sausage meat will give it a characteristic and unpleasant taste. The juices of meat are equally dangerous. The juice squeezed out of some veal perfectly saturated with tobacco smoke was injected into a rabbit, and death resulted in a few moments. Fresh killed meat is more readily impregnated, and stands in order of susceptibility as follows—pork, veal, rabbit, poultry, beef, mutton, horse. The effect also varies considerably according to the quality of the tobacco, and the end of a cigar or a pipe has the most injurious effect on any meat that may be exposed close to the smoker. A few jets of smoke of Belgium tobacco on a dish of raspberries will suffice to entirely destroy the delicate flavor of the fruit and to render it uneatable. All these experiments would seem to denote that great care should be taken not to allow smoking where foods, especially moist foods, such as meats, fats, and certain fruits, are exposed."

Baby Barendse,

Three months old when cured by the use of

Steketee's Worm Destroyer.

ead what its mother says:

"The undersigned has a child only three months old. It became sick with pains in its bowels and stomach when scarcely two months old. It cried and whined nearly all the time, and was completely run down in flesh. We gave it everything that we thought would relieve the child, but it grew worse all the time. We made twenty powders from a teaspoonful of Steketee's Worm Destroyer, gave it one powder three times daily. To our astonishment it was relieved of thousands of worms. We have given the child but twenty powders. It is entirely cured. I shall always recommend Steketee's Worm Destroyer.
